Dr. Thompson was recalled by Counsel for defence, and asked if he had seen Mrs. Cunningham eat, carve, and write. He said he had, and she carved very much about as other people did; he never noticed any difference; she appeared to be right-handed; she certainly wrote with her right hand; he had dined with her several times and had seen her write, so that he had opportunities of judging. To the District-Attorney he said his attention had never been particularly called to that; and to a Juror he stated that his residence was No. 199 West Twenty-seventh-street.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN CONNERY.

The next witness called was John Connery, the Deputy Coroner. He said he was present at the search of Mrs. Cunningham's apartments, and saw her bureau examined. He thought Mrs. Cunningham said to the officers and himself that they would find nothing in the bureau. They did find some weapons—a dagger, a lancet, and a small five-barrelled revolver, four of the barrels loaded. The pistol was found in the third drawer, the dagger in the second drawer of the bureau; the safe key was found in a bag in the attic, along with some letters addressed to Mrs. Cunningham. (The weapons named were produced and identified.)

Cross-examined.—Q.—Who was present besides yourself, during this search? A.—Officers Davis and Moore.

Q.—Were you the Coroner's Deputy? A.—I was employed as such, and considered myself acting as such.

Counsel repeated his question, but the District-Attorney interfered on the ground that it had already been sufficiently answered, and so the Court ruled.

Q.—Did you act, during that inquest, otherwise than as the deputy of the Coroner, and by his order? A.—Certainly not.

Q.—You were in the room of Mrs. Burdell quite frequently, during the holding of that inquest, were you not? A.—Yes, I was, quite often.

Q.—You took the chief management in directing affairs in her family? A.—I did not, Sir.

Q.—Did you order her to deliver up to you her daguerreotype, and those of her children? A.—I did not, Sir.

Q.—Did you request her? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you swear that you did not tell her and her daughters to get their daguerreotypes for you? A.—I did not, Sir, undoubtedly.

The Court asked what was the materiality of this. This witness had been called only to identify the weapons produced.

Mr. Clinton—This witness is called to prove a declaration of the prisoner.

Court—I see. Go on, Sir.

Q.—Did you get their daguerreotypes?

Witness—What daguerreotypes?

Counsel—The daguerreotypes of the prisoner and her daughters? A.—I did not, Sir.

Q.—Or either of them? A.—Nor either of them.

Q.—Did you ask for either of them? A.—No, Sir, I did not ask for either of them.

Q.—Were their daguerreotypes demanded in your presence, by yourself or any one else acting under you or the Coroner? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—And you swear that you never said one word to her or her daughters on the subject of giving you or giving other persons in your presence their daguerreotypes? A.—I do, Sir.

Q.—Did you have anything to do with selling their daguerreotypes? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you know who did? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Were you present when Mrs. Burdell was stripped naked?

The Court—[Emphatically]—I won't permit this.

District-Attorney—I don't object to it, because I have an object in permitting it to go on. It is for the Court, however, to act on its own discretion.

Mr. Clinton believed there was one point of view in which His Honor would certainly admit it.

The Court could see nothing yet developed in the case which showed the propriety of any such question.

Mr. Clinton—There will be, after the opening of the defence.

Court—Then you had better suspend till you have opened your defence.

Cross examined—Q.—Have you been very active in this matter, Sir.

Witness—In what matter, Sir.

Counsel—In this Burdell case, since the inquest.

A.—No, Sir—not since the inquest; I have not.

Q.—Do you know anything about Counsel being denied access to her during the first week of that inquest?

Court—That question comes under the same category as the last.

Mr. Clinton denied that it did, and went on to argue the point.

The Court ruled that the defence had a right to show anything that he did towards restraining her on the Saturday before her refusal to go down before the Coroner, but not afterwards. [Exception taken.]

Mr. Clinton then, with a view he said to show the feeling of this witness, asked: Did you keep this lady in custody at that place (No. 31 Bond-street) until she was taken to the City Prison.

The Court again ruled out the question.

Q.—Did you say you have taken no part in this case since the inquest was concluded? Have you taken any part in the matter? A.—No, Sir; I have not taken any part in it further than to hear parties talk of it once in a while.

Q.—Did you go the Tombs to talk the case up with Mary Donahoe? A.—I was at the Tombs, but I had no consultation with her.

Q.—Did you talk to her about this case? A.—I did not talk to her about the case.

Q.—Did she talk to you about the case? A.—No, Sir; she spoke—

Q.—Did you see her at all? A.—I did

NEWS OF THE DAY.

By the arrival at Halifax of the steamship Europa we receive a telegraphic summary of three days' later news from Europe. It is a relief to be enabled to state that the Prussian and Swiss representatives in Paris have at length agreed upon propositions for the settlement of the Neufchatel question, subject to the approbation of their respective Governments. It is to be hoped that this tedious dispute, which has long since lost all public interest, will now be finally adjusted. Lord ELGIN, the newly-appointed British Commissioner to China, has left for the scene of his labors. The intelligence from China is interesting. Europeans were being indiscriminately slaughtered by the Chinese whenever opportunity occurred. The commercial intelligence by this arrival possesses some features of interest. Cotton was slightly lower, and Breadstuffs were generally steady, with, in some cases, a tendency to advance. Consols have advanced, and closed on the 24th ult. at 93.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, charged with having murdered Dr. BURDELL, was continued yesterday in the Court of Oyer and Terminer. Much additional testimony was taken relative to the position and character of the wounds found in the body, and, from the course pursued by the defence, the opinion obtains that they will endeavor to shift the responsibility of the deed upon some person having more than common knowledge of the anatomy of the human body. Such was the opinion of Dr. FRANCIS, when upon the stand. There was considerable testimony elicited on the cross-examinations, bearing upon the impression that the wounds were inflicted by a left-handed person, and that Mrs. CUNNINGHAM was a left-handed woman. The medical witnesses gave no decided opinion as to what hand was used by the person who committed the deed, and witnesses familiar with Mrs. CUNNINGHAM had failed to notice any unusual use of her left hand. A model of the house, and drawings in oil of the room in which the body was found, were brought into Court, and found valuable aids to a correct understanding of a portion of the evidence. The District-Attorney thinks he will be able to conclude the case for the prosecution to-day.

We have received advices from Rio Janeiro, viâ England, to the 17th of March. Yellow fever prevailed there to an alarming extent. The deaths had reached 25 per day, and were almost exclusively among foreigners. The production of silk in Brazil is beginning to attract attention.

The troubles on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad are now doubtless at an end. Within the past two or three days there has been no desire manifested to renew them, and the business of the road has been permitted to resume its usual course. There is no intention on the part of the Company to effect any compromise with the strikers.

The New-Granada Canal Company is suffering new misfortunes. Mr. D. G. GILLET, who was sent on to Carthagena with money, they say, to resume dredging the canal, has returned bringing the report that the Carthagenian Government has seized $5,000 of their funds, deposited with it as a pledge for the fulfillment of the contract, and now refuse to let the work go on until a new contract is effected. The Company say they shall sue for damages.

The Cattle Markets were supplied yesterday with about cattle enough to meet the current demand, which is greatly diminished by free receipts of veal, and especially by the large numbers of shad now offered in our markets. The decision to leave the shad-poles in the North River this season will help to make up for any deficiency in beef. Good fat shad are retailed from the markets now at prices equivalent to 6 to 9 cents per pound, for the dressed fish, which furnishes cheaper food for the masses, and that more relished than spring beef at 12 to 18@20 cents per pound. There was an average decline on beef cattle yesterday of full ½ cent per pound net, from the average rate of the preceding week.

The Police Commissioners held a series of meetings yesterday, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., and adjourning finally at 4 P. M. They transacted no business of importance, but merely awaited an answer from ex-Judge WHITING as to his acceptance or rejection of the appointment of Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police District. Up to the time of adjournment, however, no word had been received from him. A large number of applications were received yesterday for the posts of clerks and surgeons—about 100 for the first and over fifty for the latter. It is understood that if Mr. WHITING accepts the position offered him the office of Chief Clerk will be filled by a resident of Kings County. The Commissioners meet again to-day.

In the Board of Councilmen on Wednesday evening, several petitions of an ordinary character were presented, and referred to appropriate Committees, after which the Board adjourned to Friday evening. Is it Mr. BRISTED's opinion that Councilmen are entitled to no pay under the new Charter, that makes such brief sessions?

Proposals have been advertised by the Commissioners for the construction of the Quarantine Hospital buildings, fences and dock on the land purchased near Seguine's Point. The proposals will be received until the 13th. Only three buildings are to be erected. They are to be made of plain boards, one story high, and 75 feet long by 25 feet wide. They are thus light, not only because Seguine's Point may be but temporarily the site of Quarantine, but also because lightly-built shanties of this kind have been shown by experience less liable to become infected with malaria than substantial buildings of stone or brick. The dwelling house on the land will be retained for the physician's residence. A light wharf will be built for a Quarantine steamer to ply between the Point and this City. No warehouse for the reception of lightered goods will be erected at present. It is expected that the new buildings and improvements will be completed by the first of July, ready for the establishment of the Quarantine. The expense of the buildings and all the improvements are estimated at $10,000.

The front wall of the old building No. 84 Chatham-street, upon which workmen were tearing down, fell suddenly into the street yesterday morning. Mrs. SARAH HENRY, of No. 472 Pearl-street, was in front of the building at the time, with her two little sons, one of whom, DENNIS, aged 5 years, was instantly killed. Mrs. HENRY was badly, though not fatally, injured. The other boy escaped. Mrs. ONDERDONK, of Grand-street, who was passing at the time had a narrow escape, one of the falling bricks striking her on the foot. Coroner PERRY held an inquest upon the body of the deceased boy, and the Jury rendered a verdict in which they find the parties having charge of the removal of the building with culpable carelessness, in not having examined more carefully as to the safety of the building while taking it down.

A meeting of the "Wilson Small" Democratic General Committee was held last evening, at Tammany Hall. It was a large one. A long and very fiery address was adopted, condemnatory of the course of the seven Sachems calling themselves "Reformers," as was also a resolution calling upon the Wilson Small delegates to enroll a list of Democratic voters in each Ward, with a view to defeat the "corrupt Primary Election system," and obtain a true and fair expression of the popular will. This last move will have a tendency to check the "Reform" move. The sum and substance of the affair appears to be what one high in power terms "a bold move—a game of bluff—going them fellows two better on their own lay."

The annual election for officers of the Young Men's Christian Association was held on Monday evening, and the following ticket was chosen: President, ROBERT BLISS; Vice-President, CEPHAS BRAINERD; Corresponding Secretary, RICHARD C. MCCORMICK, Jr.; Treasurer, MARK HOYT. In the new Board of Direction two members of the famous Investigating Committee are included.

JOHN MORRISSEY, the notorious pugilist, took the field again early yesterday morning, when, with a friend named PATTERSON, he became involved in a terrible fight in the bar-room of the Girard House, with the bar-keepers and waiters of the establishment. Pistols and knives were brought into play, but none of the participants were fatally injured. MORRISSEY and PATTERSON were badly beaten, and one of the hotel employes named CONRAY, was cut in the neck with a knife. The rioters are in custody.

The body of WILLIAM MCPHILIPS, aged five years and six months, who suddenly disappeared from his home, in Mangin-street, last December, was found yesterday in the river at the foot of Rivington-street. It was identified by a burn on the abdomen and by the discovery of two of the toes being curiously joined together.

The body of an unknown man, about 40 years of age, and 5 feet 7 inches high, was found yesterday at the foot of Pier No. 14, North River.

PHILIP BERKMAN, a German, aged 27 years, committed suicide yesterday morning at his lodging-room, No. 247 Second-street, by shooting himself in the head with a pistol. He had been sick for two years, and on Tuesday last he was told by his doctor that nothing further could be done for him. This announcement very much depressed him.

The young man BATTLES who was stabbed on Sunday evening during an affray in Worth-street, died yesterday morning at the New-York Hospital. An inquest has been held upon the body, and two young men are in custody, one for causing the death of BATTLES, and the other as an accessory.

A Grand Jury was impanneled yesterday in the Court of General Sessions, and Judge RUSSELL delivered his charge. A case of burglary and another of larceny were disposed of, and the Court adjourned to this morning.

The Board of Education failed of getting a quorum last night. It was agreed to meet next on Wednesday, the 13th.

A little before 3 yesterday morning, the large building on Fulton-avenue, Brooklyn, at the corner of Elm-place, caught fire, and the entire building was soon in ruins. This building was erected five years ago by Messrs. BAGE & SOTHER, at an expense of about $40,000, and was intended for a market, but was eventually divided into stores. The largest portion of the building was occupied by the Mechanical Bakery establishment, in which the fire originated from a defect in the flue, at the same place where a fire originated a few days ago. The workmen were just ready to send out their morning batch of bread when the alarm was given. The loss of the owner of the bakery, Mr. BERDAN, is estimated at $45,000, which includes machinery and stock on hand. Upon it there was an insurance of only $10,000, in the following offices: Relief Insurance Company, $2,500; St. Marks, $2,500; Williamsburg City, $2,500; Hamilton, $2,500.

Other parts of the building were occupied by RICHARD LIDDLE, as a stove store, G. R. COLGAN, as an oyster saloon, and several rooms up stairs by societies. The property of Mr. LIDDLE was mostly removed to a place of safety. Mr. COLGAN's loss is $250.

The building was a mere shell, and was owned by ROSWELL GRAVES. Loss $20,000. Insured for $13,000; in the Home Insurance Company for $4,000; Continental, $4,000; Phenix, $2,500, and St. Mark's, $2,500.

The house of Mr. J. R. OLWELL, on Elm-place, occupied by G. WHEELER, was damaged by the falling of a wall. Mr. OLWELL's loss is $1,000, and the loss of the occupant is about $500.

Mr. BERDAN intends to have his bakery in operation again within 90 days.

SAMUEL A. FRENCH, on Tuesday night, was re-elected Chief Engineer of the Jersey City Fire Department over JACOB Z. MARINUS, receiving 208 votes out of 295 votes cast.

The Burdell Murder Trial.

We devote a very large portion of our available space this morning, as we shall be compelled to do for several mornings to come, to the report of the Trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM for the murder of Dr. BURDELL. We should find sufficient excuse for so doing in the importance of the case, the mystery which surrounds the crime and the unparalleled interest which it has created in the public mind. But as some of our cotemporaries excuse themselves from the labor and expense of reporting it upon the plea that very full reports were made of the proceedings upon the Coroner's Inquest; we may add that this fact constitutes an additional reason why equally full and equally accurate reports should be given now. The proceedings upon the inquest were ex parte, and designed to direct suspicion rather than determine guilt. They resulted in the indictment of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM,—and in the accumulation of an immense amount of circumstantial evidence against her. This evidence is now to be sifted and examined by the rules of law: and it is only just to all the parties concerned that these proceedings should be as carefully reported as those of the preliminary inquest. This is the only trial which has thus far been held in this case:—and it is this, rather than any preceding form of legal process, which is to determine the question of guilt or innocence.

The careful reader of these reports will perceive, moreover, that the evidence is by no means a repetition of that which was submitted to the Coroner. Very many additional facts are elicited especially in the examination of the medical witnesses, and much of what was before stated has a very different bearing when brought within the rules of legal evidence. The Court is making rapid progress with the trial, and it is intimated that the case for the prosecution will be closed to-day.

Centralization and the Government of our City.

We have already expressed pretty freely our estimate of the exact amount of benefit the City is likely to derive from the war of injunctions which is now being waged in the law courts with so much fierceness and animosity. But whatever our views may be of the policy of the Legislature, or the issue of the struggle, there is one point in the arguments of the Corporation and its advisers which deserves notice, if only for the purpose of repudiating all share in its absurdity. Mr. O'CONOR and Judge EDMONDS have never ceased, since they began to fight Mayor WOOD's battle, to hold "centralization" up before us as a bogie of the first magnitude. We have been told long stories in the Judge's melodious style, of the spirit of de-centralization in which the Constitution was framed; of the eagerness to strip the executive of all unnecessary powers by which the convention was animated; of the love of municipal independence which breathes from every section and every line. All danger to freedom in this country centres, we are told, in Albany; all guarantees for its preservation in the corporations of cities and towns.

This we admit, right or wrong, true or false, is a perfectly legitimate forensic argument. Moreover, we have no hesitation in saying that centralization is the most formidable enemy with which freedom has ever had to contend—more terrible than a foreign yoke, and capable of working more demoralization in ten years than either anarchy or high-handed oppression in a century. You may plunder and massacre a people through many generations without extinguishing in their hearts their hatred of slavery; but if you take out of the hands of one generation the management of their own affairs, you consign them not simply to bondage, but to imbecility. The history of the struggle between municipalities and the central power has been, in all countries and in all ages, the history of the struggle between freedom and tyranny. We believe no country in the world owes more to local self-government than America. She is indebted to it for the peace which reigns in her borders, and the unexampled prosperity which, during eighty eventful years, has crowned her with rejoicing, far more than to any inherent virtues in the national character, or any inherent advantages in the country.

Whether, therefore, the spirit of the Constitution of this State be decentralizing or not, we can only say it would be well if it were, or it is well if it be; and any consolation Mayor WOOD can derive from the supposition, he is perfectly welcome to, for we fear few of his consolations are drawn from so legitimate a source. If Mr. O'CONOR can make out the affirmative, so much the better for everybody. We do not make these remarks for the purpose of discussing rules of construction, or digging hidden meanings out of masses of verbiage. Our sole object is, while expressing our detestation of centralization in the abstract, to express as much indignation as we can well feel, at the attempts which are being made to elevate the present contest into the position of a struggle for a great principle—to represent the Corporation of this City as a martyr in a good cause. Whatever indulgence the license of the forum may give for Mr. O'CONOR or Mr. EDMONDS, there is no reason that we know of for allowing the wild ravings of the Corporation to go forth to the world as the real and true groans and lamentations of the City of New-York. We beg to assure all country philosophers who feel disposed to point a moral with the history of the cause celèbre by which our courts are now agitated, that the illustration afforded by it is, we are sorry to say, an illustration on the wrong side. Whatever decentralization may have done for others, for us it has been productive of nothing, so far, but unmixed evil. Whatever aspect centralization may have for others, for us WOOD and WILSON and their confrères have shorn it of its terrors. We have nothing to fear from it. If we were governed by a "platz commandant," had our chimneys swept by the police, and had to write to Washington for leave to put up pumps in our yards, every one of us would be better off than he is. Most of the objects of a city administration are far better carried out, as a general rule, by a vigorous and arbitrary police system than by a representative assembly. A Prefect with his gens-d'armes, armed with a carte-blanche to draw on our purses, and responsible only to his chief, would sweep, watch, light and water our streets a great deal better than any Aldermen and Common Council. Despots are just as good scavengers and thief catchers as freemen, and mostly a great deal better. It is not these alone we look for from municipal freedom. We look to it for the growth of public spirit, for the habit of self-government, for the nurture of independence, for reverence for forms, and for the spread of sound morality and the culture of self-restraint. If it give us these things,—and the experience of mankind warrants us in expecting them of it, we care not of what material comforts it denies us. If it make our pulses beat quicker, strengthens our nerves, and infuses new vigor into our bodies, we care not in what storms it may rock us.

Has decentralization—this boasted decentralization—done anything of all these for New-York? Has not, on the contrary, this spirit of the Constitution been so far for us a spirit of darkness? It has not simply deprived us of all the benefits of good government, filled our streets with filth, and delivered us over to the tender mercies of the robber and assassin; it has done more and worse than this. It has shaken the public faith in honesty by placing the greatest knaves amongst us in the highest places we can bestow. It has inflicted irretrievable injury on the public service, by associating the notion of office with the notion of blackguardism, and the highest civic honors with the deepest public infamy. It has infused into every class of the community a recklessness and indifference with regard to the public interests which a century may not suffice to eradicate; and it has placed an indelible stain on our reputation by bringing before the world the very scum of our population as the guardians of our interests, and the mouthpieces of our wisdom. When any good friend of municipal government stands up to denounce centralization, New-York is certainly the last place in the world to which he should look for illustrations for his argument.

A New Kink in the Southern Mind.

When a man keeps a powder magazine in the cellar of his house, every alarm of fire very naturally throws him into a tremor; and he will be likely to neglect a good many important matters in his anxiety to guard against a conflagration. While his neighbors are sleeping soundly in their beds he is lying awake with a beating heart, calculating the possibilities of being blown sky-high by spontaneous combustion, or from a chance spark lighting upon his roof. This is the unhappy condition of our friends of the Slave States. While the people of the Free States have never felt the slightest apprehensions for the permanence of their institutions, and have been able, therefore, to devote their entire energies to the prosecution of their great enterprizes for improving their material prosperity, the people of the Slave States have been comparatively paralyzed by the constant sense of danger which their one perilous institution imposes upon them. Two-thirds, at least, of their time, and their energy, their talents and their means have been devoted to the preservation of their Slave system. All other considerations have been made secondary to this great and overshadowing interest. That comfortable feeling of perfect security which is common in all of the Free States, the people of the South are strangers to. They are obliged to keep a double watch to preserve themselves from the attacks of their Slaves, and to preserve their Slaves from the attacks of outsiders. In addition to the old complicated dangers which have beset them, and kept them constantly in a state bordering upon civil war, they have lately discovered a new cause for alarm, and are devising means to avert the new danger which threatens them.

The New-Orleans Crescent, the L'Union of Louisiana, and the Charleston Mercury, profess to have discovered a menacing danger to their institution in Virginia, and other Border States, which must inevitably be compelled, from the impossibility of keeping their slaves, to sell off all their live property and then join the great Free States of the North and West. The effect of such a movement as this would be to convert the adjoining Slave States into Border States, which would, in time, be compelled to follow the example of their immediate neighbors, and so the process of converting interior States into Border States, and Border States into Free States, until Slavery would extinguish itself by a natural and inevitable law. We must confess that there is a shadow of reality in these border chimeras of Louisiana and South Carolina.

To prevent Slavery from committing felo de se, the Crescent has suggested that the only effective course will be, for the interior Slave States to pass laws prohibiting the importation of slaves from the Border States. It being presumed that Virginia, and the other breeding States, being denied a market for their great staple, will never feel themselves able to bear so great a loss as the emancipation of their slaves would entail upon them, and that they would continue to form, as they do now, a cordon of Border States to prevent the escape of slaves from the interior States.

The objection to this ingenious plan is that the slaves of Virginia are absolutely necessary to the States further South, which do not breed laborers enough for their own wants. To obviate the difficulties from this cause two different schemes have been proposed; one is to reopen the African slave trade, and the other to import Coolies from China. The New-Orleans papers, and especially the Delta, are in favor of the first, while the Charleston Mercury decides in favor of Coolies. In the meantime, while these points are in process of discussion by Louisiana and South Carolina, Virginia must look on with very singular sensations to find herself regarded as inevitably taking her natural position as a Free State, unless she can be coerced into the permanent condition of a slave breeder. Perhaps she may come to the conclusion that her only safety lies in taking Time by the forelock and selling off all her slave property while there is yet a market open to her.

AMERICAN BENEVOLENCE.—It would be a very absurd thing to say that public benefactions are of American invention, because we know that England abounds in noble evidences to the contrary; but, what may be said, we think with entire propriety, is, that on this side of the Atlantic the public benefactions of private individuals have been made on a more liberal and magnificant scale than has ever been known in the old world. A literary journal of Paris, not long ago, in giving an account of the Astor Library, said it was the gift of Sir JOHN ASTOR, who bequeathed 30,000 francs to found a public library. The sum appeared sufficiently grand to the French editor to demand a special paragraph; but the actual amount bequeathed by Mr. ASTOR was two millions of francs, to which his son has since added 150,000 more. We published, last week, an account of a great holiday in Liverpool given in honor of Mr. BROWN, who had undertaken to erect a library building for the use of the people of that town at his own expense. He at first proposed to give the sum of five thousand pound towards the object; he then offered to double the amount, and at last agreed to bear the entire cost of the library, which, it was supposed, would exceed £20,000. This was very liberal, and it is most gratifying to know that Mr. BROWN's townsmen gave so hearty a demonstration of their appreciation of his generous gift. On the occasion of laying the corner-stone of the new library he was presented with dozens of addresses of all classes of his fellow-citizens, and after a grand parade, in which the nobility of the neighborhood, the clergy, and the principal people of the town took part, there was a banquet in St. George's Hall, at which two thousand persons sat down.

But these grateful demonstrations of the Liverpool people, while they are so honorable to their character, also show how rare such public benefactions are in that part of the world. Here, for example, such gifts to the public are so common that hardly any notice is taken of them, when they are made. PETER COOPER has bestowed upon our community an institution which will cost him nearly half a million of dollars, and he has never yet been honored by the slightest public recognition of his magnificent donation, beyond being invited to preside at a public meeting. When Mr. DARGAN, of Dublin, loaned the people of that city the necessary funds to erect their Crystal Palace, the Queen on her visit to Ireland paid him the great honor of calling upon him at his house, and as a further proof of her appreciation of his benevolence offered to make him a baronet or a knight.

But our fellow-countryman, GEORGE PEABODY, came home on a visit, after an absence of twenty years, and scatters his beneficences right and left, giving to his native village fifty thousand dollars to found a library, to Boston double that amount for a similar purpose, and to the City of Baltimore five hundred thousand dollars, and these magnificent bounties do not occasion any unusual demonstration, or exclamations of surprise.

We have become used to such gifts, and though we cannot claim the honor of having invented public beneficences, yet we may point to the great gifts of our Girards, Astors, Coopers and Peabodys as evidence that we have excelled all other nations in the extent of our private gifts for the benefit of the people.

QUESTION OF RESPONSIBILITY.—The Boston papers are discussing with a good deal of eagerness a novel question of responsibility. It seems that Mr. CUSHING wrote his Newburyport speech, and that one of the Boston papers put it in type from the first draft of his manuscript. In that copy occurred a sentence which Mr. CUSHING afterwards expunged,—which he did not utter in his speech as it was delivered, and which was not contained in any other copy of the printed address. The question now is whether Mr. CUSHING is to be held responsible for that sentence or not. It would seem that the fact of his having expunged it was sufficient evidence of the fact that he did not wish to be understood as having uttered it:—but this difficulty is overcome by those papers which assail him on account of it by assuming that he could have uttered it if he had dared to do so. It is quite enough to hold a man responsible for what he does say—without also denouncing him for what he deliberately decides not to say.

A precisely similar incident happened to KOSSUTH when he was in this country. The speech which he made at the Press banquet was written and put in type at the TIMES office in advance of its delivery. A statement occurred in it which he subsequently ascertained to be incorrect, and which he accordingly erased in the proof of the speech and which he did not deliver. But one of the City papers accidentally failed to make the correction, and in its report of the speech the paragraph occurred. And in spite of the withdrawal of the statement, and the explanations that were made of the way in which it came to be printed, a Wall-street journal assailed KOSSUTH on the strength of it day after day with the utmost vehemence. His only reply was one which Mr. CUSHING might fairly make: that he was responsible for what he did say—and not for what he did not say.

New-York Historical Society.

On Tuesday evening, at the usual monthly meeting of the Historical Society, Rev. Dr. DEWITT in the chair, two clever Daguerreotypes (by BRADY) from miniature painted in 1791, were presented to the Society. These works, framed and hung on the wall, were closely and admiringly examined. They are the gift of T. W. C. MOORE. The originals are in the possession of the grand-daughters of the artist—ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON of Philadelphia. They were painted before the Father of his Country lost his teeth, and though devoid of the venerable air which characterizes the ordinary resemblances, the recommendation that elaborate portraits from them be made, may properly lead to their adoption as the standard likenesses.

Several other communications were read.

Mr. BENEDICT suggested that as the Society was almost ready to transfer its books and papers to the new building, it was desirable the public should know it. Contributions of books and pamphlets would flow in as soon as the public were satisfied they would be safely preserved. He hoped the press would notice the fact.

In allusion to the portrait of WASHINGTON, Hon. Mr. FOLSOM remarked that the only artist to whom WASHINGTON ever sat, was PEALE, now living at an advanced age in Philadelphia. He gave a lucid sketch of the history of this picture. The likeness, he said, was preferable to that of STUART. He suggested that some steps ought to be taken to secure an authentic likeness.

A member gave the history of STUART's picture.

The Chairman stated that the promised paper from Mr. GREENE would not be forthcoming. In its place, three would be offered.

Mr. RIKER then read a paper on the early settlement of the Wallabout. It related to the genealogy of the RAPELYE family. GEORGE RAPELYE emigrated to America in 1623; his wife (CATARINA TRENKEL) died in 1689. Full details exist in the archives of the Society. Their first child (SARAH) was not born at Wallabout, or Walloon Bay. She was born at Albany in 1625, at which time the Dutch bought Manhattan Island from the Indians. The first settlement of the RAPELYES was at Staten Island. There is little to identify them with the Wallabout. SARAH was undoubtedly the first child of European parentage born in the Empire State.

The next paper was read by Mr. ELIAS BOUDINOT SERVOSS—reminiscences of the acquaintance of JOHN PINTARD (his grandfather) with the late Governor DE WITT CLINTON. The ingratitude of Republics was a favorite theme of CLINTON. The great theme which absorbed his attention was inland navigation from the Hudson to Lake Erie. His life was prolonged to see its completion. In Mr. CLINTON's opinion, Dr. FRANCIS (now living) and Dr. HOSACK, were the greatest benefactors to literature and science then existing.

Thanks were voted for these two papers; the third was withdrawn.

THE ALLEGED MYSTERY IN BERGEN COUNTY, NEW JERSEY.—The highly-colored statements in the Herald, of Wednesday, respecting the late death of a young lawyer of this City, whose family reside at English Neighborhood, a place about two miles back of Fort Lee, on the Hudson, we are assured on the most reliable authority, are essentially untrue. At the time of his death deceased was traveling with a view to improve his health, and was accompanied not by a lady only, but by an old and esteemed male friend. His disease was an affection of the heart. The story about the will, and the litigated property of the lady, are mere fabrications, for no such will is in existence. The unknown gentleman, who is said to have excited so much suspicion in the vicinity of English Neighborhood, was the traveling friend of the deceased. The alleged removal of the heart and entrails from the corpse by physicians has no foundation whatever in fact, and moreover the lady spoken of enjoys the unqualified confidence and esteem of the relatives and friends of deceased. The family are much pained at the notoriety given to this affair, and think that great injustice was done them by publishing idle rumors of so grave a character, without even a call on them for authentic information.

ANOTHER CASE OF TICKET-SWINDLING.—On Monday morning last a Mrs. V—— arrived in this City, from Bristol, Ind., en route for California, with two children, aged about 9 and 7 years. She was met at the railroad station by a runner, who, learning that she wished to take passage on the steamer Illinois, offered his services to procure one for her, but, as Mrs. V—— had a letter to a gentleman here, she wished first to go and see him. The runner very politely procured a carriage, and took her to the hotel where the gentleman boarded, where she was informed that her friend would not be in under an hour or two. The runner then told her that "there were only three tickets left unsold, and they were going very fast; and, if she wished to secure a passage on this steamer, she must go immediately to the office and secure them." Prompted by the supposed exigency of the case, she was induced to go immediately to the office on Warren-street, between Greenwich and Washington, kept by one THOMAS CREED, who sold her the tickets, taking therefor $50 more than the regular fare, and leaving her to proceed almost penniless, with the two children. CREED, however, was very willing to refund the money, on a second visit from the lady, accompanied by a couple of gentlemen and a policeman, but not without letting off a tirade of abuse, mingled with threats of vengeance, against the gentlemen who interested themselves in behalf of the woman.

AT THE NAVY YARD.—The steamship Mississippi has her engines complete, and is ready to get up steam. She will be ready by the 15th, as ordered. She will soon be dispatched to China, under command of Capt. WM. C. NICHOLSON, formerly of the Independence. Capt. ROWAN has been detached from the command of the North Carolina, and appointed to the Ordnance Department of the Navy Yard. Captain J SCHENCK takes his command. Lieut. STRAIN has been detached from the Coast Survey service, and ordered to join the Cyane at Aspinwall; he sailed yesterday in the Illinois. Mr. BURNETT is the principal applicant for the post of Civil Engineer of the Yard, vacated by the resignation of Mr. MURPHY.

Marshal RYNDERS has arranged to place the brig Ellen alongside the slave schooner Merchant, at the Navy Yard. They begin to fear, over there, that all their spare dock-room will be occupied by slavers seized by the Marshal.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The British Government and our Difficulties with New-Granada.

Kansas Affairs—The Foreign Appointments—New-York Politics—Personal Items, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 6, 1857.

I have good authority for saying that Lord MALMESBURY has received instructions from his Government to inform New Granada that her abrupt rejection of the American ultimatum meets with the most decided disapprobation of the British Government.

The issue, raised by New Granada, of irresponsibility for the massacre of the 15th of April—inasmuch, as she alleges, it was commenced, or at least incited, by an American citizen—is not recognized by England as a just and proper one; and the counter demand for damages made against our Government is regarded as simply ridiculous.

Neither England nor France will take part with New-Granada in the present controversy. Both these Powers support the action of the United States Government in its endeavors to obtain reparation for past outrages, and security for future travel across the Isthmus. The fact that England and France entertain these views is well known to our Government.

Nevertheless, in consideration of the fact that our opponent in this quarrel is a feeble State, and one that has always been friendly, our Government is disposed to be magnanimous. Whatever appearances may be, it is not believed that the question will have other than a pacific solution.

X. Y. Z.

[FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT OF THE NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 6, 1857.

WOODSON, who has hitherto been considered the most indefatigable and fanatical of all the Pro Slavery agents in Kansas from the Southern States, has given up his mission as hopeless. He has traversed South and North Carolina, Georgia and Virginia, everywhere calling for aid in arms, men and money, and his efforts have been attended with considerable success; but he now considers it as reduced to a certainty that Kansas will be admitted as a Free State, and that further time expended in behalf of Atchisonism would be thrown away. WOODSON would scarcely have arrived at the conclusion he has done, unless through the medium of correspondence with ultraists of his own stamp in the Territory. He does not even affect to conceal that his friends there are completely discouraged, and that, although the Pro-Slavery Party expect to be able to frame a Constitution in September, conformable to their views, it will be rejected by a vast majority of the people when it comes to be submitted to a popular vote. This opinion is completely confirmatory of that which has been steadily expressed by Governor WALKER, since his appointment, and of that which President BUCHANAN has always entertained. Had the Free-State men in Kansas roused themselves earlier from their culpable apathy, the sting would have already been removed from the controversy. As it is, a portion of them will vote, but, it is judged, not in sufficient numbers to achieve a victory at the coming elections. Governor WALKER is expected to arrive here to-day; and, ere the lapse of another week, will have taken his departure for the scene of his future labors.

The sole reason why the foreign appointments have not been already made, is the pressure of other important business, hitherto, upon the time of the President and his Cabinet. They will not be taken, so I learn from Mr. CASS, until the 1st June, or thereabouts. Meanwhile, it is understood that intimations have been sent to the different ministers abroad that their resignations would be considered acceptable. In no case will the rule of "rotation in office" be swerved from. Neither does it appear at all probable that incumbents of office in this country will be selected from among the numerous candidates for appointment. The policy of giving one of the so called "full" missions to some one from New-York has been amply discussed, but is not yet decided. In no case could more than one be allotted; and it is feared that no one can be thought of who is not enough identified with one of the two old sections of the Democracy to cause umbrage to be taken at his choice by the other. Under these circumstances, Governor SEYMOUR (although his name has been mentioned with more favor, perhaps, than that of any one else) generously counselled the President to pass over New-York altogether. If any one is selected from this State for one of the five principal missions, I nevertheless think it will be himself. DIX is highly spoken of, but what a row the Hards would make! DICKINSON has strong claims, but what a screech would be raised by the Softs! It is truly a pity that a State of the Union which counts a ninth or more of its whole population should have so effectual a taboo upon itself as New-York has done by her insensate political discords!

New-York has now three Ministers Resident in Europe, viz.: FAY, at Berne, BELMONT, at the Hague, and O'SULLIVAN, at Lisbon. I learn, from undoubted authority, that there will henceforth be but two, and that these will be selected with exclusive reference to geographical divisions, in order to avoid the possibility of jealousies. A Mr. SMITH, of Buffalo, who formerly wrote a biography of General CASS, is a pushing candidate for one of the two places. He will not be successful. Neither, I fear, will Mr. MCMANAY, of your City—an estimable man, and strongly backed by a large amount of influence. His great claims upon the Democratic Party do not enable him to compete with Mr. HENRY C. MURPHY, of Brooklyn, who is justly regarded here with great favor, and I incline to think will get the appointment for the eastern part of the State. Mr. B. F. ANGELL, of Genesee, Livingston County, feels quite confident, as I am assured by his friends, of obtaining the place intended to be assigned to a Western man. There will be, altogether, only eleven vacancies to supply of the second class of Ministers, and for these there are already something over two hundred and fifty applications!

It may be considered as next to certain that Ex-Governor R. M. PRICE, of New-Jersey, will go to Mexico. Senator THOMPSON is here, urging his claims, and he is strongly pressed from other quarters. JOHNSON (the factotum of the Herald during BENNETT's absence in Europe, and an able political writer) is at Willard's, and is trying for the Consulship at London. A little fellow from Hudson, in your State, named WHITE or WEIGHT, modestly asks to be sent to Berlin! If he takes passage for "foreign parts," he will probably be requested to stop at Coventry. I should have mentioned above, that, excepting SLIDELL, who will probably accept of the Paris mission, no names have as yet transpired for the "full" missions, which can be relied on.

The affair between SICKLES and MCLEON MURPHY is, of course, the talk of the day. The conduct of the latter can be excused from no point of view whatever, nor does his attack seem to have had any higher motive than chagrin at the loss of his post as Navy Yard Engineer. MURPHY, as you will recollect, resigned his commission last week, and probably hoped, at first, to be reappointed. In this he will be disappointed, though, had he held on to his post, he would in all probability have been permitted to retain it. The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. TOUCEY, has made changes in the Navy Yard at Norfolk (Gosport) which have satisfied no one. Annoyed by this result, he was inclined to "let well enough alone" in Brooklyn, and to make no changes whatever. JOHN KELLY is still here, and Mr. MACLAY has been here, both warmly pressing MURPHY's claims, which are strong; but his own rash premature actions have frustrated his hopes and those of the numerous warm friends who have labored for him. Just in proportion as MURPHY has been esteemed as a good fellow, will the surprise and displeasure be, when his unwarrantable assault of to-day will create.

SICKLES' candidate for the vacated Naval Engineership is Mr. CHARLES GRAHAM, who is also at Willard's. The Secretary of the Navy requested Commodore SMITH, however, a few days ago, to write to Engineer BROWN, of Norfolk, transferring him to Brooklyn. His wish has not yet been acted on; but I do not doubt that it will be, and that BROWN will receive the place, with its important patronage, unless the event of to-day changes the intentions of Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. HASKIN is expected here to-morrow, and will doubtless assist SICKLES in pressing GRAHAM forward. No changes will be made,

...ayne, among the master workmen at Brooklyn, ... this passage, in the case of Mr. FUNCK, the ... Commissioner failed to be dependent upon the ... of his trial, on charges made against him, ... takes place to-day. I know nothing of their ..., nor of the issue. Mr. RAGLAN, in connection ... Mr. HARRIS of the Union, had a lengthy interview with the President before his departure, yesterday for New-York, the result of which has not transpired. It had, undoubtedly, some connection with ... yard matters; but I think that the status-quo policy will, as far as possible, be adhered to.

Senator DOUGLAS and his family left Washington, for Chicago, yesterday. He will probably not return during the recess. Much dissatisfaction is expressed by the Illinois Democracy at the removal of Postmaster COOK, who enjoys very nearly the same amount of popularity with his party in Chicago that FOWLER does with you.

The health of the President has lately much improved, and the alarm which was felt, a while since, by his friends, has entirely subsided. Not so with the unfortunate Mr. J. GLANCY JONES, who is at Willard's, and who was confined to his bed on Saturday and Sunday last from a recurrence of the National Hotel malady. He looks pale and worn, and it may be many months before the poison is totally eradicated from his system. The venerable Secretary of State enjoys unwonted health, although he is at his office early and late. He has left Willard's, and taken up his abode in the house formerly occupied by Mr. MARCY, and also the one adjoining. His Assistant, Mr. APPLETON, relieves him to such a degree of the most arduous portions of his labors—intellectual and physical—that the task upon his strength cannot now be considered too great.

Mr. BUCHANAN has held free conversations with several members of Congress, and has had a long interview with Mr. GEORGE SANDERS, in relation to New-York troubles. The statement which was put forward by one of your papers, that he approved of the Wood-Schell movement is wholly without foundation. He has been much disturbed and annoyed that difficulties should have sprung up again, after he had, as he supposed, satisfactorily adjusted them; but he attributes their origin to the proper quarter, and fully sympathizes with the action of the majority in the recent election. An individual, formerly impeached in your State as a public officer, and whose reputation is of the most suspicious character, has recently visited Washington, and by representing himself as the exponent of the views of the new Collector, did him some momentary harm. This has been remedied by the very persons who were apparently arrayed against Mr. SCHELL, in the recent movement, and it is now understood that the combination between himself and the Mayor was forced and temporary, while the most cordial personal and political relations exist with his colleagues.

The Committee appointed to award the contracts for building the new sloops of-war and revenue cutters have ended their labors. Nothing can be known of the result, as the awards are sealed, till Mr. CONS returns, which will probably be in the course of a week.

[FROM OUR REGULAR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTER.]

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 6.

A difficulty took place to-day at Willard's Hotel, between J. MOLEOD MURPHY and DANIEL E. SICKLES, Mr. MURPHY, on Sunday, addressed a note to Mr. SICKLES accusing him of assailing his private character by unjust imputations in his (SICKLES') efforts to effect his removal as Civil Engineer of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Mr. SICKLES replied that the note was only a vague and unmeaning menace, and as such he had already taken too much notice of it, Mr. MURPHY not giving his author and the particulars of the allegation. Mr. MURPHY yesterday sent Major WATKINS to see Mr. SICKLES, when the latter demanded the name of the informant on whose statement Mr. MURPHY based his charge, and denied the right to be interrogated on rumor.

Mr. MURPHY, considering Mr. SICKLES' note insulting, sent a challenge through Mr. WATKINS. In his reply Mr. SICKLES said he had not used language which cast an imputation on Mr. MURPHY's honor and that there was therefore no ground on which he could demand an explanation or a hostile meeting. Here the correspondence rests.

This morning Mr. MURPHY obtained admission to the chamber where Mr. SICKLES was in bed, and attempted to cowhide him, when a struggle ensued, and Mr. SICKLES obtained possession of the weapon. He bears the mark of a blow with the hand on his face.

Mr. MURPHY left Washington for New-York this afternoon. His resignation as Engineer was not accepted by the Department. His rencontre with Mr. SICKLES forms the staple of town talk.

The President attended the first out-door concert of the Marine Band at the capitol, this afternoon.

A private dispatch from New-Orleans of to-day's date, says that Collector HATCH has ordered the schooner Louis M'Lean to be seized at the Balize, on suspicion of being a slaver.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 5, 1857.

There is no alarm here, but some indignation at the rejection of the Senate amendments to the Dallas and Clarendon Treaty. The result was not certainly surprising to Gen. CASS, though it was so to Lord NAPIER. Gen. CASS had received an instruction from Mr. DALLAS, that the Bay Islands question would be an obstacle to the acceptance of our amendments.

There is nothing in the story that the Treaty, as amended, is still under advisement. Its rejection is positive, though, as the Premier states, the correspondence respecting it between Mr. DALLAS and Lord CLARENDON has not come to hand.

The amendments which the Senate made to the treaty in regard to the Bay Islands, required that Honduras should have absolute sovereignty over them, and they would defeat any purpose which the British Government might entertain of establishing a great naval dépôt at Ruatan. That the British Government have determined not entirely to relinquish their hold upon Ruatan might have been seen by the recent induction of Governor SEYMOUR into the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the Bay Islands colony.

This treaty having fallen to the ground, after a negotiation of six years, it would be useless to endeavor to resuscitate it. Our Government falls back on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and denies the right of the British Government under that treaty to occupy any part of Central America, and particularly the Bay Islands, which she seized upon, since the date of the treaty in 1850.

It is thought that Lord PALMERSTON, backed up as he has been by the late election, will be less ambitious than ever on this subject.

The Government recalled Mr. BOWLIN, our Minister at Bogota, and stands towards Grenada in a defensive attitude. We do not take possession of her territory. That would be war. But we undertake to keep the transit open, as we have a right to do, under the treaty. Every force necessary for the purpose will be used. X. Y. Z.

Accident and Death in Chatham-street.

About 9 yesterday morning a poor and respectable woman, named SARAH HENRY, with her two little boys, was waiting in front of the old building No. 84 Chatham-street, for an opportunity to enter the place to gather wood for fuel. The house is being taken down, and workmen were engaged upon the roof removing the shingles, when the rear portion of the roof fell in, forcing the forward part against the brick work of the second story, and pushing the whole mass outward upon the sidewalk. It fell upon the woman and children, killing one of them instantly and seriously injuring the mother; the other child escaped with slight injuries, and was carried to the house of a friend. The woman was carried to the City Hospital. Capt. DOWLING, of the Sixth Ward Police, was notified of the accident, and immediately repaired to the spot, where a large crowd had congregated. The premises were at once cleared of the spectators, and a fence placed around to keep off the crowd. The little boy, who is about eight years old, named DENNIS HENRY, upon being taken from beneath the ruins, was found to be shockingly mangled, his legs broken in several places, and his bowels crushed out. The body was placed in a coffin and removed to the Sixth Ward Station-House, where an inquest was held. The mother being taken away in an unconscious state knew nothing of the fate of her boy. The distress of the father, upon viewing the mangled remains of his child, was most painful to witness. Mrs. HENRY has some of her ribs broken, and is otherwise bruised, but her injuries are not necessarily fatal.

Desperate Fight at the Girard House.

A desperate fight occurred at the Girard House, about 7 yesterday morning, between JOHN MORRISSEY, the notorious pugilist, and the waiters of the house. MORRISSEY was aided by a man named JOHN PATTERSON. Knives were freely used, and a great many pistol shots were fired. The contest was a protracted one. Three Fifth Ward policemen, who were summoned to quell the disturbance, were defied by MORRISSEY, who met them with a revolver in one hand and a bowie-knife in the other. He was at length captured, and with PATTERSON, lodged in the Tombs. Strange to say no fatal wounds were inflicted. MORRISSEY escaped with a cut in the neck. One of the waiters was badly gashed about the head.

The fight originated in some dispute about payment for a breakfast.

The Newburg Tragedy.

From the Newburg Daily News, Tuesday.

There was a good deal of plausibility in the reports which were in circulation in regard to the old colored woman, and every effort made to find her. She was supposed to have returned to Brooklyn, and information of the facts in regard to her name presented to the New-York papers, with a view of ascertaining her whereabouts. Later in the afternoon she was found here, having been across the river during the day, and conversation with her showed pretty conclusively that the woman knew nothing of what she was talking about. She lives some four or five miles out in the country, not in Brooklyn at all. The poor creature is doubtless partially deranged.

The Coroner and Sheriff were out on an exploration in the afternoon, but they discovered nothing.

A man who visited the place where the body was found, discovered a cameo ear-ring, which was brought to the Coroner. It was an elegant ring, differing somewhat in style from the breastpin, but nevertheless intended for a part of the set.

A trunk has been found in Marlboro', having been thrown over a fence by the road-side. We cannot, however, learn anything about it that would seem in any way to connect it with the tragedy.

The sum and substance of the whole matter is, in brief, that there is no clue whatever to the perpetrators of the murder, or who the murdered girl is—and no direction which would seem to afford any hope in an investigation. The most profound mystery involves the whole affair.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.—May 6.

Before Hon. Judge Russell.

At the opening of the Court this morning the clerk proceeded to call the Grand Jury panel. The following gentleman were selected for the term:

JAMES B. NICHOLSON, Foreman.

Lewis K. Bridge, Alfred Colvill, E. A. Duyckinck, John H. Lyell, Wm. B. Merritt, H. G. Stone, William Banta, J. C. Chamberlain, James Kelly, Jr., Howell Hoppock, Daniel Ransom, O. H. A. Townsend, Edwin P. Christy, Wm. Everdell, Wilson G. Hunt, John Lightfoot, Rich. A. Bradley, Jas. S. Aspinwall.

Judge RUSSELL then charged the Jury.

After calling their attention, as usual, to the statute against usury, the law relating to extortion, the lottery law, the election law and the act to suppress intemperance and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors, the Judge instructed them as to their powers and duties, advised them to hear witnesses as soon as possible, and so obviate the complaints which are continually made against the detention of witnesses, who are generally poor men. "It has been said that crime is fearfully on the increase in this City," said he, "and it would not be surprising if such was the fact, when you take into consideration the vast extent of the City, the annual increase of foreign population, and the limited number of patrolmen employed to guard and protect this great commercial emporium. The entire police force amounts to twelve hundred and two men, of which six hundred and seventy-six do patrol duty—a number entirely inadequate to perform the duty required of them. In the city of London, which is nearly five times larger than New-York, they have eight thousand policemen, and the increase of crime annually is greater in proportion than in this City. But I am pleased to say, gentlemen, that crime has not increased in this City during the last year. With the assistance of our worthy Clerk, I am enabled to lay before you, from the records of this Court, an accurate statement of the number of cases brought in and disposed of from the year 1853 to 1856, and from 1855 to 1857, and I find that up to January, 1856, there were 997 indictments found by the Grand Jury—142 complaints dismissed; 165 persons sent to the State Prison; 1,453 sent to the Penitentiary; 226 sent to the City Prison, and 79 to the House of Refuge; and from 1856 to January, 1857, there were 986 indictments found—105 complaints dismissed; 216 sent to the State Prison; 1,487 sent to the Penitentiary; 115 sent to the City Prison, and 56 sent to the House of Refuge.

You will readily perceive, gentlemen, from this statement that crime is on the decrease, and that the police force is not as inefficient as they have been represented, but are as a class of men, of intelligence and good conduct, and are faithful, prompt and energetic in the discharge of their public duty.

In all cases of a legal or important character that may arise, you can consult with the District-Attorney, who is the law officer of the Court.

The law makes it a misdemeanor for any of you to disclose the fact of an indictment having been found against a party who is not in custody or bound over to answer.

You can select one of your number to act as Secretary to keep minutes of your proceedings.

You will now retire, gentlemen, and assume the duty imposed on you by law."

Michael Hennessy and Henry Brown were convicted of grand larceny in stealing $60 worth of India-rubber shoes from the bark Rhine, on the 9th of March last. Hennessy was sentenced to the State Prison for 2 years and 2 months, and Brown for 2 years. The families of the prisoners were in Court, and when the sentence was pronounced they all cried together. The officers led off the prisoners before they could take a parting kiss from their little ones, and the wives and children were hurriedly removed from Court. A scene so affecting is seldom witnessed in a Court of Justice.

John Alexander, a boy, who has been before the Courts before, pleaded guilty to an attempt at burglary. He was remanded till Saturday.

KINGS COUNTY COURT OF SESSIONS—May 6.

Before Judges Morris and Justices Emmens and Schoonmaker.

In the case of Michael McGuire, indicted for burglary in the second degree, the indictment was quashed, the property stolen belonging to another party than the one alleged.

Richard Johnson, convicted of petit larceny, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

John Powers, convicted of burglary, third degree, was sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment in the State Prison.

Edward Reynolds, convicted of petit larceny, sentence suspended.

John Summers, convicted of burglary, second degree, was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment.

George Lewis, for the same, got a ticket for 5 years.

LEGEND.—The mountain forests of Pictoria are inhabited, it is said, by Pixies, Spirits and Elves, who, like the Phantom Dancers of Germany, delight to entrap travellers into their realms, and torment them with their mischievous antics. WEDNESDAY, May 6—P. M.

The English files by the steamer Kangaroo to the 22d April, and the telegraphic summary from the Europa at Halifax to the 25th April, indicate a change for the better in the London money market, and an improvement in the market at Liverpool and London in Grain. After the late heavy receipts of Gold from Australia, the further sum of three and a quarter millions dollars is reported on the way and nearly or quite due. The Cotton trade, without being strong, is reported equal to the sale of about 7,000 bales a day.

The market for Money, here, to-day, is in ample supply to the Brokers, on temporary loan, at 7 ₰ cent. At some of the large Banks this week the mercantile applications are pretty full. Foreign Bills closed yesterday, for the Boston steamer, at 109¾@109¾ on London. Some first-class transient bills came on the market at 109¾@¼. The packet on Saturday is the Ericsson, of the Collins line. The Sub-Treasury received to day, $83,720; paid ont $132,869, and held at the close a balance of $14,278,924.

The Stock Market continued, as yesterday, under the control of the Bears, through the morning business, but assumed a little more strength at the Second Board in the afternoon. The Bears are the principal sellers nearly all through the list. They are made strong by the differences collected on their April contracts, and for the moment, have the power as well as the nerve and disposition to overwhelm the market by immense short sales, either on time or by the use of borrowed stock, at the lowest prices. The amounts thus offered bear no proportion to the legitimate supply and demand of real stock, nor are they limited to any ordinary principle of speculation. The purpose would seem to be to literally crush out values, and so, to keep down every appearance of reaction or recovery, the public orders for stocks, either for permanent investment or to be held temporarily for an improved market, is met at all hazards and to any extent, without, if possible, suffering such demand to make any impression whatever upon the tone of the market. The game is a bold one, and much public mischief is of course done by the detraction, false rumor ann croaking, employed in the attempt to make it win by its boldness. The scene, though eminently calculated—perhaps intended—to disgust all outside speculation, if not to repel all bona fide investment in the funded securities dealt in at the Exchange, must sooner or later have its end, possibly a violent one, as in times not long past, to the principal parties concerned; and although the movement of the past day or two has no doubt been stimulated by the flush of success in defeating all effort at reform in regard to gambling in stocks on long time, and by the hope of neutralizing the forthcoming report of the Michigan Southern Railroad, the recklessness of the sales has attracted sufficient attention to enlist some new and strong buyers, and the general market this afternoon closed firm. The principal fluctnations of the day were:

New-York and Erie	41⅛	@40⅞	@41⅛/@41⅝@41¾
Michigan Southern	61½	@61	@60⅞/@61½@62@63⅛
Galena and Chicago	99	@97¼	@97@96⅛@98
Reading	80⅛	@79⅞	@80@80⅝
Toledo	66⅜	@66	@66¼@67

Illinois Central Stock 133@133¼@131½ seller 30 days. Erie Bonds, 1871 76@77@⅞ cash; 70 seller 12 months.

The improvement in the Erie Bonds of 1871, on the sweeping sales of yesterday, seller sixty days, was 3 ₰ cent. No further offers at, or within, 60 days were ventured by the party who sold yesterday to the extent of $100,000; but at the close this afternoon $15,000 or $20,000 were offered on 12 months' option at 70 ₰ cent. and taken up. In a purchase like this, the ordinary deposit of 10 ₰ cent., if called for, under the late rule of the Board, is little or no security to the buyer. The cash stock is now worth nearly all of 10 ₰ cent. above the time contract; but this is only one of the advantages which the speculators in the Board voted on Monday against yielding up, even upon the earnest entreaty of the old Commission brokers. A sale, published to the world at 70 ₰ cent., 12 months, goes far to qualify a stiff cash demand at 78 or 80 ₰ cent.

Messrs. SCHUCHARDT & GEBHARD, Bankers, have removed into the new double granite building of Mr. W. BLOODGOOD, Nassau, above Pine-street, near Messrs. DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co.

The severe illness of Mr. JOHN F. A. SANDFORD, of CHATEAU, SANDFORD & Co., which was announced some months since, we regret to notice, terminated yesterday in his death. The loss of this estimable merchant is a public one. He had ample means and the generous will to do much good, and he was never backward in bringing both into practical use. His house, for more than thirty years, has been engaged here and at St. Louis in the American fur trade. Of late years Mr. SANDFORD had devoted a large share of his energies to, and at one time risked much of his fortune and good name, as a negotiator abroad for the Illinois Central Railroad, of which he was a leading Director. He was a native of Virginia and a graduate of West Point.

The City of Albany, we understand, will make no legal contest against the validity of the Bonds issued to the Northern Railroad. The validity of a loan, not yet issued, to the Albany and Snsquehanna Road, will be tested through the Courts. This is well enough. Yet the old City owes it to her good name to place the Northern Bonds beyond future question by reaffirming their validity.

We publish at length, in another place, the Report of the New Board of Directors of the Michigan Southern Railroad. This Board is constituted of Messrs. Edwin C. Litchfield, Heman J. Redfield, John A. C. Gray, Charles Butler, William M. Vermilye, Elisha C. Litchfield, William B. Welles, J. H. Ransom and Henry Keep, of New-York City; John Stryker, of Rome, N. Y.; John Wilkinson, of Syracuse, N. Y.; John S. Barry, of Michigan, and Ezekiel Morrison, of Indiana.

They have been in session in this City from day to day, since their election by the stockholders on the 22d ult. Their preliminary examinations have been thorough and complete, as well in reference to the real condition of the concern, as of the books, accounts, bonds, registers and transfers of the office. The latter are certified, by three several Committees, constituted, with a single exception, of the new members of the Board, as exact and in all respects consistent and regular. This was due as well to their constituents and the credit of their great property before the world, as to the moral integrity of the officials of the Company, which, for stock-jobbing ends, had been repeatedly impeached through the New-York Herald. The result will afford satisfaction, without creating surprise. The unanimous promotion of Mr. EDWIN C. LITCHFIELD, former Treasurer of the Company, and whose name has been identified with the Road from its original purchase from the State of Michigan, to the Presidency of the Company is no empty compliment to that gentlemun's services before his late prolonged visit to Europe, but a substantial evidence that the new Administration feel that under his lead the restoration of the credit of the Company will be best secured. We do not doubt that the result will justify their choice. Mr. JOHN A. C. GRAY, an old and able merchant of this City, was made Treasurer; Mr. JOHN WILKINSON, of Syracuse, is made Vice-President. Altogether, the preliminary examination and the unanimity of the election of officers, prove that the deepest wrong involved in the late controversies regarding the stock, was done to and not committed by, the management. If further evidence of this be needed, it will be found in the financial statements of the Report, and the comprehensive and certainly satisfactory plan by which the Directors propose to fund $1,500,000 of the new unfunded obligations of the concern, and to require an equal amount of the common Stock, the issue of which was recently enlarged, most reluctantly, by the management, and, to all present appearances, as the only alternative to the heavy sacrifice of the Bonds of the Detroit Branch and other assets of the Company, the prompt and reasonable sale of which was struck down by the unscrupulous, though systematic assaults upon the credit of the property and the integrity of its management. This plan will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the stockholders, besides removing all appearance of present financial embarrassment, and relieving the apprehension of discredit or the suspension of dividends in the future. The plan is wholly unexceptionable, as being free from sacrifice in the way of abatement or discount, and is made in strict literal conformity to the charter of the Company, in the shape of a guaranteed 10 per cent. Construction Stock. The amount to be issued is $3,000,000, at par, one half in cash, applicable to the bills payable or floating debt of the Company, and the other half in exchange, dollar for dollar, for the common Stock, which is, and has been, a regular 10 ₰ cent. stock also, though without the guaranty.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company have declared a half-yearly dividend of 10 ₰ cent., payable on or after the 8th inst. The books of transfer will be closed until after that date.

Michigan Southern Railroad Report.

As the time is at hand when the enterprise undertaken by the MICHIGAN SOUTHERN AND NORTHERN INDIANA RAILROAD COMPANY will be completed, the Directors is making their annual report, deem it a proper occasion to review the nature and extent of their various operations, to exhibit the condition and value of the properties which have been the ruby created, and to place at the prospects of continued success presented to them in the increasing developements of the extensive regions of country with which they are connected.

This Company, it is well known to its stockholders, originated in a plan projected by the State of Michigan, for connecting the waters of the immense reservoirs of trade, Lake Erie and Lake Michigan, by means of a system of railways, across the peninsula. The plan was but partially carried out by the State, when its financial embarrassments compelled it, in the year 1846, to discontinue the works, and to dispose of its roads to private Companies.

The Southern road, as surveyed and laid out by the State, began at the town of Monroe, on La Plaisance Bay, near the head of Lake Erie, and following a line due west, passed through the southern tier of counties in Michigan, from county seat to county seat, till it terminated at New-Buffalo, on Lake Michigan. At the time of the transfer of this road to the private company, it had been completed, in the imperfect manner of those days, for the that day rail, wooden culverts, &c., for 33 miles through Adrian, the county seat of Lenawee County, to Hillsdale, the county seat of Hillsdale County, a distance of 68 miles, together with a branch, 10 miles north from Adrian to Tecumseh, making in all 78 miles actually constructed, on which the State had expended upwards of $1,300,000.

The charter under which the Southern Michigan Railroad Company took possession of this road was a perpetual one, certainly reserve to it its rights, liberal in its provisions, and not subject to alteration, except by the consent of the Corporators. Under it the Company were authorized to extend the road westerly to Lake Michigan, either by the route originally contemplated, or by any other more southerly route which they should deem more judicious. They were induced to adopt a more southerly course by the following considerations: first, to avoid competition with the Central Railroad Company of Michigan, whose line the State had proposed to terminate at St. Joseph, on Lake Michigan, but who had decided to make New-Buffalo, considerably further south than St. Joseph, their terminus, with the view of extending their line around Lake Michigan to Chicago; Second, to meet the demands of the great trade between the East and West, which in the south bend of the great lakes, no important channel of trade ending at Toledo, except the Wabash and Erie Canal, and no vast ramification of roads and canals branching out from Chicago.

Those extensive districts of country lying to the west and north of that City were intersected only by common roads and a few inconsiderable streams. But by consulting the map, as it appears in 1857, it will be seen what advances have been made in all these respects. The Canada line from Detroit to Niagara has since been constructed. The South-shore lines, running from Toledo, through Sandusky, Cleveland and Erie to Buffalo, and connecting at these places with the trade of the Lakes, and with the magnificent railroad systems of Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New-York, have since been completed. To these lines, which are but a continuation of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad, it is brought into direct relation with the cities of Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New-York. When the line extending east from Cleveland by way of the Cleveland and Mahoning, the North Western, the Pennsylvania Central and the Allentown and New-Jersey Central Roads shall be completed, (nearly all of which are now in operation, and the remaining links are expected to be supplied within the ensuing year,) our line will furnish the shortest possible route from Philadelphia and New-York to Chicago and the Mississippi, and this line will have the very great advantage of an unbroken grade, which will enable freight to be sent without trans-shipment from the ocean to a point in the heart of Iowa, nearly one hundrd miles west of the Mississippi, and which, by the steady westward extension of the line, will soon reach the Missouri at Council Bluffs.

The many and important roads which have made Chicago the great metropolis of the Northwest, have been constructed within the time in which our own was in progress. And of these roads, it is important to remark, that the greater part of them are tributaries to the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Road, and none of them, in any sense of the word, competitors. Of the great roads of the Northwest, Chicago is the common centre—a city which, at the outset of our works, contained less than 20,000 inhabitants, and which has now 120,000—and which then shipped annually but 2,000,000 bushels of grain, and now ships 20,000 000—which in 1851 had but 42 miles of railroad terminating in it, and which has now 2,933 miles, of which 2,075 may be called importing railroads, which bring freight and traffic from the West and Northwest. Among these roads, conveying into Chicago the inexhaustible wealth of the interior, may be mentioned the Chicago and Rock Island, extending to the Mississippi, and by means of the Mississippi and Missouri Road, tapping the central part of Iowa; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, from South Iowa; the Illinois Central, traversing the length of the State of Illinois; the Galena and Chicago; the Lake Shore, from Milwaukee; and the Cbicago, St. Paul and Fond du Lac, which together bring the whole of Wisconsin, and the fine copper and iron regions of Lake Superior within range of our western terminus. In both directions, therefore, Chicago can scarcely be said to be peculiar; it is rather an example of the general advance of the West. Toledo and other cities exhibit a similar increase, and the entire region to which we look for trade and patronage, partakes of the onward movement.

There is no reason, therefore, to apprehend any diminution of the sources of supply to our road; on the contrary, there is every reason for believing that the almost unexampled rapidity of progress which marked the past, will be accelerated in the future. Temporary causes, such as a general failure of crops, or a general prevalence of disease, might abate the prosperity of single years; but there are no causes with which we are acquainted, or which we can conjecture, likely to have such an effect for any connected series of years. As long as our country continues in the enjoyment of foreign and domestic peace, the physical developments must continue to improve. For it is to be especially remarked, that the immense regions to which our road is so directly related, the States of Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, (not to mention the older States of Michigan, Ohio and Indiana,) and particularly the Territory of Minnesota, which will, during the present year, be organized into a State, and then begins its career, are but just opening to settlement and labor, and have hardly begun to put forth their resources. Iowa was only made a State in 1846, and its population already must considerably exceed half a million. Wisconsin became a State the next year, and has a population of not less than 700,000, and Minnesota is rapidly filling up with people. All these districts possess the advantages of salubrious climates, the most fertile soils, a great variety of natural productions, both mineral and vegetable, facilities of access, and liberal provisions of government. The Lake Superior country, with which Chicago will be brought in immediate communication by the opening of the Chicago, St. Paul and Fond du Lac Railroad, is celebrated for its iron, its copper and its silver, and the resources of it are regarded as incalculable. The iron region alone producing, as proved by scientific analysis and practical experiments, the finest iron in the world—extende, in a breadth of from fourteen to fifty miles, north and south, and more than one hundred miles east and west, and a single bed of it, according to the United States geological survey, is capable of "supplying the world for ages." Nor do the veins of solid copper promise less abundantly to the hand of enterprise.

Now all these masses of wealth—the grain, the timber, the minerals, which seek a market in the great eastern centres of commerce—must pass, for an indefinite number of years to come, principally around the southern bend of Lake Michigan. There is no other mode for making a way eastward, during one-half the year, when Winter shuts up the Lakes. Nor is there any route of conveyance which is likely to divert from the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad its full share of that immense traffic.

But these vast and fertile valleys of the northwest are not merely grain fields and mining grounds; they are attractive centres of settlement; every year sends a powerful migration thither, and these emigrants, while they develop the resources of the country, draw supplies from the East. It is estimated that already 300,000 emigrants take up their abode annually in these regions. As the mining resources are developed, this immense emigration must be enlarged. Manufacturing establishments will, of necessity, grow out of the mining operations. All the great West will look to the Lake Superior district for its supplies of iron and copper, and in a few years there will be gathered there a vast and thrifty population. In truth, it would seem rather like imagination than a fact of sober reality, were we to undertake to state in words the rapidity or the extent of the progress which must take place in the Northwest. In both directions, therefore, eastward and westward, the channels of communication and traffic will find a constant demand for their services.

Of those channels, our road is one of the two connecting the Lakes Erie and Michigan; it is the only one connected at the same time with the port of Lake Erie, (Detroit,) and with the southern port, (Toledo,) while it also terminates at a central port, (Monroe); it is the only one having an unbroken rail connection with the same range from the Mississippi river to the Atlantic Ocean; and it is the shortest one between Chicago, the great trading centre of the West, and Philadelphia, New-York and other eastern cities. In the activity and impatience of American enterprise, shortness of distance and quickness of return are controlling facts; but to this great advantage our road adds another, which is, that it stands in immediate connection with the south shore of Lake Erie, studded with important towns, and whither the immense trade between the East and West naturally tends, for the convenience of the lake navigation during the season when it is practicable. Any one, by casting his eye upon a map, will see that Lake Erie is a common reservoir of trade for several of our largest States, and that the southern side of it is that on which are concentrated the large cities and towns.

This, in very respect of liberal results of the great enterprise in which our Company has engaged are quite sure to justify the original designs and the general course of subsequent management. Now that the heavy drain of construction has come to an end, and the future outlays will be confined mainly to interest on debt, dividends on stock, contribution to sinking fund and the running expenses, while all the new roads and branches will be brought into productive operation, and thus every point of competition being covered, we may feel assured that the stockholders, as well as the public, will experience the benefits of the achievement, to a larger extent than either of them have yet realized. In coadacting to a successful completion such a varied and extensive undertaking, it cannot be doubted that mistakes of detail have been made—expenses incurred which might have been avoided, aad opportanities missed which might have been improved; no scheme of human device and human management is perfect; the most sagacious minds cannot always detect the best means of arriving at results, nor discover errors until they are shown by their results. This is true of all forms of government, from that of States to that of smaller corporations, and there is no wisdom nor prudence so large as to anticipate or obviate all evils. But in looking back over the seven years which have elapsed since the commencement of this enterprise, and within which time these extensive works have been begun and nearly completed, and considering what difficulties, intrinsic and external, have been overcome, what a mass of property has been created, how substantial the work, how generally the credit of the Company has been sustained, the returns which it has heretofore made to its stockholders, and now certain the promise of future fruits, we think that the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad Company has reason to feel satisfied with what it has accomplished, and to present it, in entire confidence, to the favorable judgment of the public.

The Company owns three first class steamers on Lake Erie, which run between Buffalo and Toledo. There is a large travel and business that will go through the lake to draw which over our railroad it has been found necessary to keep up this line of steamers, especially as a similar line is maintained by the Michigan Central Railroad Company, along the north shore of the lake.

To keep up regular freight connections with the two great lines of railroads through the State of New-York, it has also been found necessary to secure regular lines of propellers between Toledo and Buffalo, and between Toledo and Dunkirk.

This trade by propellers through the lake has been found to produce a very liberal net income.

The road was first opened for use from Lake Erie to Chicago, in July, 1852. The gross earnings for each month since that time are shown in a table annexed.

The earnings of 1856 were reduced from what was anticipated by the loss of the steamer Northern Indiana, early in the Summer, which broke up our regular line of boats, and much impaired our business. During the Fall of that year they show the effect of the difficulties which occurred upon the Erie Railroad, and which, for several months, seriously interfered with the prompt and regular transmission of passengers and freight by that line. The severe Winter of 1857 interfered much with the business of many of the Western Roads, and from this cause, our line, in common with some others, shows for that period a slight diminution of earnings.

It will be borne in mind, that hitherto the receipts have been derived only from the finished portion of the roads. The Coldwater Line, the Jackson Branch, and the Detroit and Toledo Road, all as yet unfinished, are now nearly completed, and have cost, in the aggregate, about the sum of $3,250 000.

These lines are soon to be brought into full use, and the investment therein made will then become productive We do not doubt that they will add very considerably to our earnings.

Since the completion of the line to Chicago, regular semi-annual dividends have been paid to the stockholders, which, commencing January, 1853, and ending 1st February, 1857, have amounted in the whole to 34 per cent, being 37 per cent. in cash and 22 per cent. in stock, as follows:

1853, January, 5 per cent. cash.
1853, July, 7 per cent. cash.
1854, January, 10 per cent. stock.
1854, July, 5 per cent. cash, 7 per cent. stock.
1855, January, 5 per cent. stock.
1855, July, 5 per cent. cash.
1856, January, 5 per cent. cash.
1856, July, 5 per cent. cash.
1857, January, 5 per cent. cash.
Total, 37 per cent. cash, and 22 per cent. stock.

This shows an average of over 13 per cent. per annum, for the entire time since the road was open to Chicago.

The stock of the Company is mostly held for investment, and is widely distributed among 1,278 stockholders. Most of this stock has been issued to the stockholders directly, and it has generally produced par to the Company. The stock has been increased considerably since the date of the last report. This increase is accounted for by the fact that within the last few months there have been made for the purpose of paying the last dividend, (the earnings of the Company having been appropriated to the construction,) and to meet other financial wants of the Company, five hundred thousand dollars of the Funded Debt matured, and was paid in April. The books of the Company show that the total discount or loss which the Company has sustained in the issues of its stock of nearly $8,500,000, amounts to less than 4 per cent. upon the average. In other words, the Company had actually received more than $96 upon an average, for each share of its stock already issued, and the statement of dividends herewith made, shows that it has been productive property for the stockholders.

The board has caused full examination to be made into the state of the stock and bond accounts and general accounts of the Company; and the reports of the various committees of examination are appended hereto, showing that the accounts are correct.

The sinking fund, established for the redemption of the bonded debt, has enabled the Commissioners to purchase $143,000 of the bonds, which are now held by them.

The financial statement shows, among the the assets of this Company, its own securities, and stock of the Detroit, Monroe and Toledo Road, to the amount of $347,913 82. It also embraces about $100.000 of the bonds of the Detroit, Monroe and Toledo Road, as a debt of this Company. In pursuance of a vote of the stockholders, at their annual meeting in January, 1856, this Company has taken a permanent lease of the Road from Toledo to Detroit, and has guaranteed the payment of an annual interest upon its stock, and the payment of principal and interest of its Bonds. For all practical purposes the Road is, therefore, to be regarded as a part of the property of this Company, and its debt as our debt. Having made the necessary advances for its construction, this Company has received stock of that Company to the amount shown in the statement, and also $1,000,000 of its first mortgage bonds, of which about $900,000 are still unsold.

The stockholders have also authorized the Board to guarantee the payment of $200.000 of the first mortgage bonds of the Cincinnati, Peru and Chicago Railroad Company, (the mortgage thereon being for only $10,000 per mile,) whose line of road intersects ours, at Laporte, and forms a profitable connection for the Cincinnati business. This guaranty has been given, and forms a contingent liability. The road, however, is completed and in successful operation from Laporte to Plymouth, and has paid the interest upon the bonds due to this time; and we have no reason to doubt that it will continue to provide for the interest and for the principal of the debt.

With these exceptions, both regularly authorized at an annual meeting of the stockholders, and both for its manifest interest, this Company is not liable in any form for the obligations of any other Company.

This Company owns stock of other companies, which have cost $380,090 74, and bonds of other companies, costing $356,300. The arrangements, made for the purpose of securing favorable business connections with other companies, which have resulted in this ownership of their securities, were made in 1854, and were mentioned in the circular report made by this Company in that year. Although these securities are not now available for sale, it is believed that nearly all of them are good, and that they will ultimately secure a return to the Company of its advances. The bonds and mortgages, and the bills receivable shown in the statement, amounting together to $363,244 69, are, with trifling exceptions, believed to be entirely good. A portion of the amount may be realized soon—but most of it will not be due for some time, and is not, therefore, at present available.

The Company is unwilling to sell the $900,000 of Detroit, Monroe and Toledo bonds, and the remaining sinking fund bonds at present prices.

It results from the foregoing statements that it is necessary to provide some other mode of meeting the floating debt of the Company.

After full consideration, the Board, in compliance with authority given by the stockholders at their last annual meeting, have determined to create and issue a guaranteed construction stock to the amount of $3,000,000, entitled to dividends at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, (like the 8 per cent. Construction Stock heretofore issued by the Company, except in the rate of dividend.)

The stock now offered will be entitled to dividends in cash, payable semi annually in New-York on the 1st days of June and December. The first dividend will be payable on the 1st day of December next.

This stock has been awarded by the Board, pro rata, among the stockholders who shall be such at the close of business on the 16th day of May instant. The stock is awarded at its par value of $100 per share, payable $50 per share in cash, and $50 per share in the general stock of the Company at par. The cash payments are required to be made $15 per share on or before the 20th day of May instant; $20 per share on or before the 5th day of June, and $15 per share on or before the 20th day of June next. Payments may be made at any time sooner than above stated, at the option of Stockholders. Proper receipts will be issued for all partial payment made, and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum will be allowed upon all cash payments made prior to those dates. Stockholders who may be each on the 20th day of May inst., will be entitled to receive the guaranteed stock in the proportion of four shares of guaranteed stock for every ten shares of the general stock held by them, (and in the same proportion for a greater or smaller amount,) at any time after said 20th day of May, upon complying with said conditions.

In case any portion of the guaranteed stock is not applied for by the 20th day of May by the parties entitled thereto, the same will be awarded by the Company upon the same terms to other parties, Stockholders or others, who may first apply for and pay for the same.

In order to enable stockholders not resident in America to participate in the subscription, the proportion of such guaranteed stock to which they may appear to be entitled, will be reserved for them by the Company until the 30th day of June next, and will then be distributed to them upon the same terms, if applied for by them, other

EDITORIAL FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Europa's Mails—Rejection of the Amended Dallas Treaty—The Spanish Mexican Question—Abandonment of the Newfoundland Treaty by the British Government—The China Mission, &c.

The Europa's mails, from Boston, reached this City yesterday afternoon

Mr. EVANS, who took out the Clarendon-Dallas Treaty, has returned in the Europa, bringing the Treaty home with him.

The state of the Neufchatel question appears to be this: At the Conference, held on the 20th ult., the plenipotentiaries of England, France, Russia, and Austria, communicated the propositions on which they had agreed, to Count HATZFELDT and Dr. KERN, who both took it ad referendum. Dr. KERN left Paris on the 23d of April, and, at his request, the Conferences were postponed to the 8th of June, because it will be some time before the opinion of the Swiss authorities can be ascertained in the constitutional way.

The Madrid Hojas Autegrafas of the 17th ult., (semi-official,) denies that the differences between Spain and Mexico are in a fair way of arrangement, as the Mexicans have not yet punished the assassins of Spanish subjects.

The London Times Paris correspondent says that Madrid is once more loud with Palace scandal. The dissensions between the Queen and her husband, lately much talked of, are now as notorious as they are known to be violent. The King's pecuniary requisitions and her Majesty's interesting situation are the causes assigned.

The following important paragraph appears in the London Shipping Gazette:

Our readers need not be told that we recently condemned the Newfoundland Fishery Treaty as an act of gross injustice to our colonists, and of gratuitous surrender of their interests to the French. We are happy to be able to announce that the treaty has been abandoned by the Colonial office. Whether this resolution has been taken in consequence of its rejection at St. John's, or from the representations of its injurious effects at made home, it is not, perhaps, for us to say. The fact is so, and we congratulate all those interested in this important branch of colonial industry upon Mr. LABOUCHERE's determination.

And the London Globe, official, says upon the same subject:

Some misconception prevails regarding the Convention between this country and France upon the subject of the Newfoundland fisheries. It appears to be generally assumed that the Convention in question was ratified without the consent of the Colonial Legislature, whose interests are peculiarly involved in its provisions. This is erroneous. The treaty was framed by the agent of the French Government and the Colonial office, and was concluded subject to the approval of the colonists. That approval has been withheld, and, so far from being ratified, the Convention is at an end, in consequence of the decided expression of opinion by the colonists that it would be the reverse of advantageous to their interests.

The London News, in noticing the departure of the English Commissioner for China, says:

"His Excellency the Earl of ELGIN took his departure for Paris on Tuesday afternoon, accompanied by the Countess, and would reach the French capital on Wednesday afternoon. The gentlemen associated with the noble Earl, in his mission to China, left London on Tuesday and yesterday, to meet His Excellency, and then proceed viâ Marseilles to Alexandria. The Earl of ELGIN intends to stay two or three days in Paris. The Countess will then take leave of him, and return to town in the early part of next week. The gentlemen attached to the mission are Hon. F. BRUCE, Mr. OLIPHANT, Mr. CAMERON, and Mr. FITZROY."

There is no China news in addition to that published in our impression of yesterday.

Reception of Neal Dow in England.

The monthly meeting of members and friends of the United Kingdom Alliance was held on the 28d ult. at the Free-trade Hall, Manchester, its object being to give a "welcome to Hon. NEAL DOW, of Portland, Maine, United States;" Mr. Dow being generally described as the "author" of the Maine Law. The body of the hall was tolerably well filled; but there was a good deal of unoccupied space in the gallery. Sir WALTER C. TREVELYAN, Bart., President of the Alliance, occupied the Chair; and amongst those upon the platform were Hon. NEAL DOW, E. G. SALISBURY, Esq., M. P. for Chester, Revs. F. BISHOP and A. STEINTHAL, Dr. LEES, Alderman HARVEY, Messrs. T. CLEGG, WILSON CREWDSON, WILLIAM SHUTTLEWORTH, and S. POPE, Hon. Secretary. The Chairman having briefly addressed the audience, Mr. Alderman HARVEY moved the adoption of the following address to Mr. Dow;

To Hon. Neal Dow, of Portland, in the State of Maine:

HONORED AND DEAR SIR: Permit us to assure you that our presence here to-night is not due to a mere idle feeling of curiosity, a mere desire to see and hear an illustrious stranger; we are here to extend to you a frank, cordial, and enthusiastic British welcome. Your name being predominently associated with the effort made by our brethren in America to solve the greatest social problem of modern times, we welcome you as one of the most philanthropic citizens of your great Republic. The names of WASHINGTON, FRANKLIN, and their illustrious copatriots, are now venerated by the whole civilized world, as the champions of political freedom. So, we believe, will future generations revere your memory, as the exponent of social virtue, and cherish the recollection of your laborious efforts to dry up the chief source of national degradation and ruin. Not only do we welcome you from a feeling of personal affection, but we regard your presence in England at this time as extremely opportune. It will not be unknown to you that the efforts of the friends of prohibition in this country have been met by statements—circulated sometimes by incautious and timid friends, but more frequently by interested opponents—tending to throw discredit upon yourself and the progress of the cause in the United States. We are firmly convinced that nothing is needed but full and authentic information, entirely to dispel all such impressions. We are aware that peculiar difficulties attend the legislative development of temperance in the United States of America. We are astonished at the courage with which these have generally been attacked, and at the measure of success that has already been achieved. We are not surprised or discouraged at occasional reverses. Deeply-rooted social habits cannot be extirpated in a day. All this is familiar to us; but every class of politicians, every social reformer and in[illegible] the country, will listen to your words, as one [illegible] authority, with confidence, with respect, [illegible] claimed a most complete public confidence [illegible]. We, therefore, again bid you welcome to [illegible], and assure you that a cordial greeting awaits [illegible] your contemplated tour, which we venture [illegible] prove as interesting and gratifying to yourself as it will certainly be beneficial to our cause.

Hon. NEAL DOW was enthusiastically received, and he spoke for nearly two hours, a great portion of his remarks consisting of illustrative anecdotes. He said that this question of the Maine Law was of more importance to the people of England individually—to England as a kingdom, so far as its physical power and national glory were concerned—to the prosperity, welfare and happiness of the people—than any other question, or than all other questions put together—excepting only the question of our personal relation to our Creator and the eternal world. And the question of the Maine Law took hold upon eternity as well. [Hear, hear.] If the people of America had turned their attention particularly and strongly to this question of temperance, it was because that people had suffered more, perhaps, than any other people—excepting those of Old England. [Hear, hear.] America owed to England her language, literature and laws—those principles of civil and religious freedom which Americans so dearly cherished and so highly prized; but, great as was the obligation, America would have repaid all, if England would only take in exchange the great principle of protection from the traffic in intoxicating drinks. [Applause.]

Mr. Dow dwelt at great length upon the operation of the Maine Law in America. In the State of Maine it had been, he said, a glorious success. Let those (he remarked in conclusion) who said that the law had been a failure, and those who doubted whether it had been a success, wait; he had no doubt that the result would be an acknowledged triumphant success. [Loud applause.]

Mr. E. G. SALISBURY, M. P., moved:

That this meeting having heard the explicit and encouraging statement of the Hon. NEAL DOW, desires to record its conviction, not only that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is a sound political principle, but that its development into practical legislation in America is a great and operative fact; and that this meeting, not only encouraged, but stirred with a feeling of emulation, would earnestly call upon friends of the Alliance, in every part of the country, to redouble effort and accept no compromise, until they have secured a law of total prohibition upon the statute book of this kingdom.

Mr. POPE seconded the motion, and it was unanimously agreed to.

Crim. Con. in English High Life—Baring vs. Gordon.

SHERIFF'S COURT—APRIL 23.

This was a writ of inquiry to assess the damages in an action brought in one of the Superior Courts against the defendant for having had criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife. Judgment had been suffered to go by default, and the defendant did not now appear.

Mr. UNDERHILL said the declaration set forth that the defendant had debauched the plaintiff's wife, and the damages were estimated at £3,000. The plaintiff was WILLIAM FREDERICK BARING, and the defendant GEORGE TOMLINE GORDON.

Mr. BOVILL then opened the case. He said it was one of a very painful class—painful under any circumstances; but he was glad to be able to inform the jury that they would be spared the most distressing part of such an inquiry—proof of the fact alleged in the declaration, that the defendant had had criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife; for it was admitted by the defendant—indeed, it was beyond denial—and the only question the Jury would have to determine was the amount of damages the plaintiff should recover under the circumstances which would be placed before them. The Plaintiff in the action was a son of Mr. HENRY BARING, brother of Lord ASHBURTON, and in November, 1845, he was married to the lady, then just about of age, whose conduct was the subject of these proceedings. She was the daughter of Sir RICHARD JENKINS; she had fortune and position, combined with personal attractions, a refined intelligence, and great accomplishments. They resided in Paris for several years after their marriage, and on returning to this country they lived at Guildford, from which place they went, in 1852, to reside at Eaton hall, near Retford, in Nottinghamshire. They had two children—one a boy, about 11 years of age, the other a girl, about eight. After they had settled in Nottinghamshire they mixed in the best society of the country, and visited and received visits from the gentry of the vicinity of their residence, and associated with many persons of rank and station. The defendant resided at a short distance from Eaton hall, and he was a person of some means and position, holding the commission of a captain in the Nottinghamshire Militia, or Sherwood Foresters. An acquaintance sprung up between him and the plaintiff; they frequently visited each other, they became most intimate friends, went out together to enjoy the sports of shooting and hunting, &c., and visits were frequently exchanged between Mrs. BARING and Mrs GORDON. That was in 1852, and such state of things continued down to March in the present year. The plaintiff and his wife had always lived upon terms of the happiest endearment, and in the enjoyment of every comfort and luxury which affluence and station could give, until the unhappy discovery was made which had led to these proceedings, which had destroyed a life of happiness to Mr. BARING, had sent to ruin and disgrace a woman upon whom the least suspicion had never fallen, and reduced her children to be perhaps worse than orphans. In March the plaintiff found that Capt. GORDON, who had professed so much friendship for him, had, while enjoying his hospitality, seduced his wife. On the 11th of that month Capt. GORDON and Mrs. BARING left Nottinghamshire and came to London together, under circumstances of the deepest distress, not only to the plaintiff, but to Mrs. GORDON, who was at that time in a condition which rendered the matter a great deal more painful. In the greatest agony of mind Mrs. GORDON went to a lady named HUNTSMAN, a friend of both her and Mrs. BARING, and with that lady she came to London. Mr. HUNTSMAN, who was a friend of the plaintiff, followed them, and he and his wife and Mrs. GORDON traced the defendant to the Great Western Hotel, where he was taking breakfast with Mrs. BARING when they arrived. Mrs. BARING rose from the table, and when Mr. HUNTSMAN went in he found Mrs. GORDON in a fainting condition on her knees. When the defendant was appealed to he refused to leave Mrs BARING, and such was the shock to Mrs. GORDON that it well nigh proved fatal—she being then close upon her confinement. That adultery had taken place had been admitted; there could have been no answer to that. Mrs. BARING was sent to her mother, Lady JENKINS, and the Jury would have to assess the damages which Captain GORDON should pay for the great wrong he had done in destroying a life of happiness which the plaintiff had been blessed with. He could not conceive or suggest one single circumstance palliative of Capt. GORDON's conduct. Received into the plaintiff's house as a bosom friend, accompanying him in shooting excursions to Scotland and other places, he had abused the friendship with which he had been regarded, violated the generous hospitality which it had been the plaintiff's pleasure to afford him, brought disgrace upon the plaintiff and his family, broken up a happy life, and sent this unhappy lady to a position of infamy and disgrace. No amount of damages could compensate a plaintiff in such a case as this. The verdict of the Jury was sought, as they would have surmised, with a view to ulterior proceedings, and he believed that, had not the damages been set at £3,000, the Jury would readily have awarded more than that amount. Captain GORDON had four children, and he repeated that he could not see anything whatever to palliate his conduct.

The certificate of the marriage, which took place at Paris, was then put in, and also a settlement executed on the marriage of £8,000.

Several witnesses were then examined who substantiated the counsel's statement. In reference to the scene referred to at the Great Western Hotel, Mr. HENRY HUNTSMAN, being examined, said:

On the 11th of March a communication was made to me. Mrs. GORDON and Mrs. HUNTSMAN came to London by the Express train, and I followed them by a later train, at 12 o'clock. At 4 o'clock in the morning I found them at the Great Northern Hotel. There had not been the least possible suspicion of Mrs. BARING before that time. From inquiries I made of a porter I found that Capt. GORDON and Mrs. BARING had gone from the Great Northern Railway to the Great Western Hotel. We went there, and, having found Capt. GORDON's room, Mrs. GORDON was ushered in by a waiter. I remained outside with Mrs. HUNTSMAN, and after some little time I went in, when I saw Mrs. BARING sitting by the breakfast table. Capt. GORDON was standing, with his wife on her knees before him in a fainting state. The scene was most painful. Mrs. BARING rose from the table when I went in. I desired Mrs. GORDON to retire, as the excitement might have been dangerous to one in her condition. Captain GORDON asked me to let him have five minutes alone with his wife. Mrs. BARING walked out of the room. At Mrs. GORDON's desire I consented to her husband's request. In about twenty minutes I went in, and found her again on her knees. It was a most distressing scene. She was entreating him to choose between the two. He refused to go home with her. Shortly afterwards he left the room and sent me a message that he was going away, but would give me his address if I had anything to write to him about. I then took Mrs. GORDON back to the Great Northern Hotel. Captain GORDON visited her in her illness. The Jury gave a verdict for £3,000.

INTERESTING FROM KANSAS.

The Proposition of the Free-State Men in regard to the Election.

LAWRENCE, Kansas, Monday, April 27.

The substance of the reception of Secretary STANTON was given in my last, but on the following day the proposition from our citizens to the Secretary was reduced to writing and will be sent to him at Lecompton to-day. I have copied as follows:

LAWRENCE, Saturday, April 25, 1857.

Hon. F. P. Stanton, Acting Governor Kansas Territory:

DEAR SIR: In your address to the people of Lawrence last evening, we understood you to say in substance, that you would enforce the laws enacted by a legislature elected by the people of an adjoining State, until they should be repealed; also, if the laws are unjust or distasteful, our remedy is the ballot-box. History has indelibly recorded the fact, which Gen. MCLEAN admitted in our presence last evening, that the ballot-box was taken from the people of Kansas Territory on the 30th March, 1855, and has not to this day been returned. From that time until the present, the people have had no voice whatever in making laws, or in selecting officers to administer them, notwithstanding the world-wide declaration by the Administration at Washington and its friends elsewhere, that the people should be perfectly free to regulate their own institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States.

We are now invited to participate in an election of delegates to a convention, to meet September next, to frame a Constitution and State Government. We are told that the election law is a good one; that the voice of the actual settlers can be heard at the polls, and that justice will be meted out to all parties. We regret that the past conduct of the officers to superintend this election has not been such as to permit us to believe that they will secure a fair vote of the people, and the fact that many well-known citizens in Kansas are omitted from the registry list, and that as well known citizens and residents of Missouri are registered, is conclusive proof to us that a fair election is not intended and will not be permitted by the officers who have thus far had the matter in charge. But if a fair election is intended, notwithstanding the body of men calling it was not elected by the people of Kansas, and notwithstanding the people have already framed a Constitution of which a large majority approve, we, the undersigned, are willing to overlook the past and go into the election of Delegates to a Constitutional Convention, should a Convention of the people of Kansas convene, if the following course be adopted by the officers of the election, to wit:

First, Two persons shall be selected in each township or district to correct the regular try list, one by the Pro Slavery and one by the Free-State Party, who shall proceed in company to take the census and register all legal voters, and the probate judges shall correct the first lists, and the apportionment of delegates shall be made according to the returns thus made.

Second, Four judges of election shall be selected for each voting precinct, two by the Pro-Slavery and two by the Free-State Party, and the names of three of said judges shall be required to a certificate of election to entitle a person to a seat in the Convention.

We think that your Excellency will at once perceive that some such course must be pursued to correct the list, or no correction can be made. We are informed by credible reports that in some districts, non-residents to the number of thousands have already been registered, while actual Free-State settlers have been refused, and how else can the lists be corrected than by a retaking of the census by some person or persons who have regard for an oath? Testimony of a negative character can avail nothing, and to obtain positive testimony with reference to the residence of these enlisted from another State, would be impossible in the short time remaining before the election.

That you have the power to take any course you may think proper, to secure a fair election, we have no doubt. It is not material that the letter of the law calling the election should be strictly followed; indeed, no law at all is requisite, so that the will of a majority of the people can be ascertained. Congress can give legality to a Constitution formed in accordance with a previous Territorial act, or without one; and we trust your Excellency will restore the ballot-box to the people of Kansas, in all its purity, at any risk of informality on minor and non-essential provisions of the election regulations.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

C. ROBINSON,	G. W. SMITH,
WM. HUTCHINSON,	GEO F EARLE,
EDMUND CLARK,	JOSEPH CROCKLIN,
EPHRAIM NUTE, Jr.,	G. JENKINS,
JOHN HUTCHINSON,	J. S. EMERY,
G. C. BRACKETT,	JOHN WAKEFIELD,
E. D. LADD,	J. A. FINLEY.
C. W. BABCOCK,

A Vermont party are in town this morning, having with them sixteen yoke of oxen, cows, wagons, plows, tents, and all the paraphernalia of pioneer life, including women and children. With additions made here this morning from other States, the party will number about sixty. I leave in an hour, to act as their locating agent, and shall go to Southern Kansas—probably 125 miles from here. Weather is warm—grass starting in places.

Gen. LANE is not remarried, but is a compromising speculator, and has dined with Dr. STRINGFELLOW. Another item to be remembered, is, that Gen. Pomeroy recently slept twelve nights with Gen. Stringfellow. How fallen! RANDOLPH.

Kansas Items.

The disposition of the troops sent to Kansas is as follows:

Lieut. Col. JOHNSON, with four companies First Cavalry and two companies Sixth Infantry—southern boundary of the Territory. Col. E. V. SUMNER, with two companies First Cavalry and two companies First Infantry—an expedition up the Platte River. Major JOHN SEDGWICK, First Cavalry, four companies, and four companies First Infantry—the route of the Arkansas; to join Col. SUMNER subsequently. Brig. Gen. HARNEY, in command at Fort Leavenworth. The garrison at Fort Leavenworth is increased to seventeen companies, including one company Fourth Artillery.

The commanding officers of troops serving in Kansas are directed to obey all requisitions for troops from the Governor, and when necessary, come under the orders of the Executive.

An address to the Democracy of Kansas, signed by J. H. STRINGFELLOW and others, is published in the Leavenworth Herald. A Convention to nominate a Delegate to Congress is called for the 2d July. The Address concludes:

"The war between Sectionalism and Nationality is soon to be fought on the plains of Kansas. Whether you will consent to act with the maddened dupes of Fanaticism and Sectionalism, or whether you will resolve 'to march under the banner, and keep step to the music of the Union,' is a question for you to decide."

An elaborate charge of Judge LECOMPTE to the Grand Jury at Leavenworth City, is published. The Judge unqualifiedly condemns the practice of carrying concealed weapons, and the code of summary punishment, and enters into a definition of treason. There is nothing new in the charge, but it is printed by request of the Bar of Leavenworth.

REPORTED BREAKS IN THE CANALS—ACCIDENT ON THE CENTRAL RAILROAD—STEAMER BALTIC ON FIRE, ETC.

ALBANY, Thursday, May 7.

There are rumors of serious breaks on the middle division of the Canal. The Seneca River Aqueduct is said to have given out, and also the lesser Aqueduct near Port Byron. The news is not fully authenticated, and the Department has no information on the subject. Both Aqueducts are known to be in imminent danger. These accidents would prove a serious detriment to Canal navigation. Some small breaks on the Western division caused by the surface-water were readily repaired. The late storm will retard navigation fully one week.

There has been a very heavy slide into the canal below Boonville, in the Eastern Division; also, on in the feeder, which will be repaired by to-morrow.

A train on the Central road coming east last night ran into a drove of cattle which had escaped from pasture at Spencerville. Twelve oxen were killed. The baggage car only was thrown off the track. None of the passengers were injured.

The steamer Baltic took fire this morning, but the flames were fortunately extinguished before any material damage was done. She is insured.

OPPOSITION TO QUARANTINE.

The Newly-Purchased Buildings at Seguine's Point Burnt Down by Incendiaries.

The quarantine war has began in earnest—and the opening act of aggression is a conflagration at Seguine's Point, in which all the buildings there have been consumed. The place was beset on Wednesday night, about midnight, by some twenty persons, the principal house entered forcibly, by breaking down the doors, and after an indiscriminate breaking up of furniture, doors and movables, the house was set on fire while three persons were asleep on the second story, and the whole was soon consumed. From here they proceeded to the farm-house, occupied by Mr. MORRISON, a most worthy and poor man, and set his house on fire, without giving a word of warning, so far as can be ascertained, and continued the work of destruction by firing all the outbuildings on the place, which by daylight were a mouldering mass of ruins. The persons in the large house at the time, were SAMUEL FITZPATRICK, about 18 years of age, JAMES MURRAY, a boy, and MARY ATKINSON, a colored woman, all of whom escaped from the burning house with great difficulty by jumping from the second-story window.

There were some twenty persons concerned in the transaction, who were dressed in their ordinary clothes, and made no effort at disguise, except that they spoke not a word throughout, and ran away while the buildings were still in flames. There was a bright moon shining, and it is thought some of the incendiaries were recognized.

The estate embraced an area of 132 acres, which was owned by T. R. LUSH, Esq., of Brooklyn. Fifty acres of this has been sold to the Quarantine Commissioners for $23,000, and the deede have been properly transferred to the State, together with the policies of insurance worth $12,000. Mr. LUSH reserved from the estate a strip some 1,900 feet long, on the east side of the farm running from the beach back to the Amboy road, besides all that portion of the farm lying north of the fifty acres. Having sold the estate at a very low figure, he expected to realize his profit by the sale of house-lots from the remainder. The Commissioners had also come under an agreement to open a road through the property, from the beach northward, on a line with his reserve

The remarkable thing about this affair is that nobody suffers by the Vandalism, except the insurance companies, and Mr. MORRISON, a poor farmer, who has lost his all. The policies of insurance have all been duly transferred, and acknowledged, so that the loss falls upon the insurers; besides the costly residence, which was insured for $12,000, and was too good a house for the purposes required, will yield enough to pay for the erection of all the temporary buildings required for Quarantine. The Commissioners had only appropriated $10,000 for this purpose.

The large residence was built in modern style, and with all the modern improvements. It was 85 feet front, (including an L,) by 50 feet, and had a carriage house and other out-buildings attached. It had been occupied by JOEL WOLF, Esq., who owned the furniture in the house, which was of the best descriptions and was insured for about $5,000. The house was also insured for $12,000. The insurance upon the furniture was partly in the City, and partly in the Richmond County Mutual Insurance Company. Mr. WOLF, who now lives in the City, had sent his servants down to take care of the house, intending to remove his furniture to the City yesterday. Those servants were in the house at the time it was set on fire, and barely escaped with their lives by jumping from the window of the second story, where they were sleeping.

There are also a farm house on the place, occupied by Mr. MORRISON, and a barn and stables attached, besides sheds for the cows. In the carriage house was a splendid coupée, which cost $1,000, with sundry sets of harness, and also a light wagon. The farmer had two hay racks, two ox carts, and a wagon, which were hauled away and saved. There were two cows, one of which was burned with the sheds, and the other had its eyes destroyed, and will have to be killed. There were two horses—one a valuable brown mare—both of which were got out in season and saved.

At the store of Mr. UDOLPHO WOLFE, in Beaver-st., we found SAMUEL FITZPATRICK, who had just arrived from the point, and has given the following statement:

"There were three of us in the large house—myself, JAMES MURRAY and MARY ATKINSON, a colored woman; were in charge of the house, and were all asleep in the second story in the L; about midnight MARY hollered out to JIM that there were people in the house robbing it, and he must get up; JIM then hollered to me there were robbers down stairs; I got up and opened the window and looked out; saw 16 persons by the quince trees, northeast from the house, and five or six more going up and down upon the front steps. In a minute a heavy stone was thrown and struck near the window, when I shut down the window, easy like, and went away. I heard men walking through the house down stairs, as if it was a market house, and soon they began to break things and made a great racket. I heard no one speak a word. I put on my pants and boots and walked about the rooms, and soon I smelt the smoke coming up from below and through the broad hall; I then knew the house was on fire. MARY and JIM jumped out of the bedroom window and ran off, a quarter of an hour before me; I went to get my gun to save it, but the smoke got so thick it nearly smothered me, and I jumped out of the window, having nothing on but my boots and pantaloons; I lost all my clothes. I struck upon a platform under the window and hurt my head. My shirt caught in a hook of the window and was torn. I saw nothing of the men after I got out of the house; by this time I saw all the house and other buildings burning. After I got out, I ran down to Mr. MORRISON's house, which was burning, and found Mr. MORRISON, his wife, and his son and daughter, and the boy, standing outside. I got the two horses out of the stables, and then went and helped Mr. MORRISON get out his things. Some of them were too large to get out. We saved only a very little. When I first saw the men from the window two of them had oyster-stakes in their hands. I think they used them to break open the doors. The men were dressed in common clothes of people who work about there; I saw no red shirts. When I saw them the second time, there were ten or twelve standing over by the ponds.

I staid with Mr. MORRISON, and in a short time ran back to the house to find MARY, fearing she might be burnt. But in a short time she came to Mr. MORRISON's with another colored woman. I remained there until about daybreak, and then started on horse-back to bring the news to the City to Mr. WOLFE."

SAM tells a straight story, but the excitement of last night's adventure has somewhat confused his mind. When he came away from Seguine's Point there was nothing left but the smouldering embers of the former buildings.

The Vigilance Committee appointed at the Quarantine meeting held at Richmond on the 29th ult., held a meeting on Wednesday afternoon. That the burning of the buildings was agreed upon at this meeting, is not known; but a resolution to burn them, we believe, was passed at the public meeting held in Richmond. Every effort will be made to discover the guilty parties and bring them to justice. Ex-Alderman BENSON, one of the Commissioners, left last evening for Albany, to lay the facts connected with the conflagration before Gov. KING. It is said that he will ask the Governor to offer a reward for the arrest of the perpetrators, and to provide a suitable armed force to guard against future depredations.

The burning of the buildings in question will not retard in the least the construction of the intended hospitals, docks, &c., for which proposals have already been advertised.

Mr. VOORHIES offered the Commissioners yesterday as a residence for the Marine Physician, the house opposite the entrance to the grounds purchased by the Commissioners. The building is a large two-story edifice, and will answer as well as the one burned. It is only a quarter of a mile distant from the site of the former building. The Commissioners have agreed to accept the offer. Upon the 14th inst., as soon as the proposals are all in, they will commence the erection of the three buildings to be used as hospitals, and they expect to complete them by the first of June. A steamboat has been chartered for the use of the Health Officer, and a barge to land from vessels in the lower bay. Four buoys have been provided to be placed in the lower bay for the anchorage of infected vessels. Nearly everything, indeed, is in readiness, except the new buildings.

TRIAL OF MRS. CUNNINGHAM.

CLOSE OF THE TESTIMONY FOR THE PROSECUTION

Why Did Not the Prosecution Call Dr. Blaisdell?

DR. CARNOCHAN'S TESTIMONY.

The Wounds Indicate that they were Made by One Skilled in Anatomy.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

Before Judge Davies.

FOURTH DAY....THURSDAY, May 7.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, charged with the murder of Dr. BURDELL, was continued to-day, with increasing interest on the part of the very large number who are in attendance daily, as spectators. The parties appeared as heretofore. Soon after 10 o'clock the trial proceeded.

EVIDENCE OF CORONER CONNERY.

The witness, on ascending the stand, stated to the Judge that previous to proceeding with his examination, he would like to say a word. His Honor was doubtless perfectly well aware that on the inquest in Bond-street, he (the Coroner) was acting in the capacity of a judicial officer, and that there were certain charges now pending against him, in reference to his conduct on that inquest. He had been called here to prove certain juries of witnesses who had been examined before him, and he did not think that the examination should go beyond that.

Counsel for defence said they could not hear what the witness said, and called on him to speak up.

The Court—The witness declines being sworn in this case on the ground that there is a prosecution pending against him.

The District Attorney fully appreciated the objection, but deemed it premature. If any questions were asked of the Coroner which would in any way relate to or affect the charges pending against him, then it would be time to discuss the relevance and legality of his objection.

The Court—He may be sworn, then.

Mr. Dean—Yes, and he may refuse to answer.

The District Attorney said he would promise the Coroner that he would not ask him any question but on what related to matters strictly official.

Q.—What is your first name? A.—Edward Downes Connery.

Q.—You are one of the Coroners of this City? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—You held the inquest over the body of Dr. Burdell? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did you take the deposition of Mrs. Cunningham or Mrs. Burdell? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Is it in your handwriting? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—You took it as Coroner? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did she sign it, and did you attest it officially? A.—I attested it officially, sir.

Q.—Did she sign it? A.—To the best of my knowledge. She was in some tremor, and——

District-Attorney—Never mind that. Here the goodness to identify it. (Deposition handed to witness.) That is in three sheets.

Witness—This (the body of the paper) is in my handwriting.

Q.—And the signature? A.—That is in her handwriting.

Q.—Is that the entire deposition? A.—It is, so far as I know.

Q.—And this defendant is the party who signed it? A.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Hall proposed to read the paper to the Jury. It was read accordingly, and is substantially the same as the report of the testimony of Mrs. Cunningham, which was given in the newspapers of the period when the inquest was held. The subjoined extract is the concluding part of it, the words in parentheses being erased: I was married to Mr. Burdell by a Minister in a private house. (I don't remember the name of the clergyman or the house)—here Mrs. Burdell produced a certificate of marriage, which was solemnized by the Rev. URIAH MARVIN, of the (Presbyterian) Reformed Dutch Church, in Bleecker-street, on the 28th day of October, 1856. The certificate was given on the 29th day of October, 1856. This marriage took place subsequent to the period when Mrs. Burdell said a portion of the property belonged to her and another portion to Mr. Burdell. E. A. BURDELL."

Taken Jan. 31, 1857, Edw. D. CONNERY, Coroner.

Q.—Look at that, and see whether that at the end is the evidence or your certificate of what took place? A.—That is my official matter and not her testimony.

Q.—Please explain why that erasure is there in that line? A.—It was on a further inquiry that I changed "Presbyterian" into "Reformed Dutch."

Q.—But there is a whole line there—the long line that is erased?

Witness—The words "I cannot remember the name of the clergyman or the house" are erased.

Q.—Was that done by you? A.—It was done by me, I think, to the best of my memory now, because she further remembered the clergyman's name, I think.

Cross-examined by Mr. Dean—Q.—I notice that you were called Doctor by the District-Attorney. Are you a doctor? A.—Yes.

Q.—Of what? A.—Of medicine.

Q.—Do you practice medicine? A.—Yes, Sir, of course.

Q.—How long? A.—For the last seven or eight years.

Q.—What is your age? A.—My age, Sir, is 52 years.

Q.—Where were you born? A.—I was born in Ireland, Sir.

Q.—What was your business prior to entering into the practice of medicine? A.—I practiced medicine before what I am going to tell you now——

Q.—Never mind that—answer the question. A.—I was employed in the Herald office for some years writing the theatrical notices and matters, and attending to the jobbing theatrical department.

Q.—You were attending to the theatre—the theatrical department? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You are familiar with that? A.—(The witness turned appealingly to the Judge)—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You were a Doctor at that time? Witness assented.

Q.—Where did you study medicine? A.—I studied medicine but did not receive my diploma at the other side; I received my diploma at the Fourteenth-street College.

Q.—Where did you study medicine? A.—At the Fourteenth-street College.

Q.—Did you study medicine in Ireland in any other medical college? A.—I studied medicine under a medical man there, not in a medical college.

Q.—Are you also a surgeon? A.—No, Sir; I don't practise surgery.

Q.—At what time did you arrive at the house No. 31 Bond street, on Saturday, the 31st of January? A.—Well, I believe, Sir, it was between nine and ten o'clock, to the best of my recollection.

Q.—Who did you find there? A.—One or two policemen, I believe, Dr. Francis, and somebody else; I cannot remember distinctly.

Q.—Dr. Francis was there when you arrived? A.—I think so; I am not certain.

Q.—Was Dr. Main there? A.—I believe not; to the best of my memory I don't think he was.

Q.—Do you know him? A.—I know him now.

Q.—When did you first see him, then, if he was not there when you arrived? A.—I don't remember whether I saw him in the room or not, but I saw him in the inquisition room.

Q.—After you got there what was your first official act?

Witness—My first official act.

Counsel—Yes, after you got to that house? A.—Decidedly to commence the inquest.

Q.—Well, how did you commence that. That is what I want to know? A.—By subpœnaing a Jury and going through the regular process.

Q.—The first thing you did was to subpœna a Jury? A.—Of course, I saw the body and examined it a little before the Jury came in.

Q.—Wasn't your first official act to apply to Mr. Eckel for a bottle of brandy, and tell him you would have it? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did he not furnish you with a bottle of brandy at your request? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—(After a whispered conversation with the prisoner)—Nor a pitcher. I make a mistake. A.—No, Sir; it was a young man connected with Mrs. Cunningham who sent to Mr. Eckel for brandy, not me.

Q.—Did you use it? A.—This young man was a reporter, and he asked me to taste the brandy, and I tasted it.

Q.—Then you used some of it? A.—I tasted it.

Q.—Then it was a reporter, and not one of Mrs. Cunningham's connections? A.—He named himself as a reporter, but I found out he was not a reporter, but was connected with Mrs. Cunningham.

Q.—Who was he? A.—I don't know; I don't know his name; he is a young man; I would recognise him if I saw him.

Q.—Was it Snodgrass? A.—No, Sir; nothing of the kind.

Q.—You saw him afterwards during the inquest? A.—He pretended to be writing as a reporter, and when the regular reporters came he vacated.

Q.—Mr. Eckel was there at the time?

Witness—Where?

Counsel—At the house at the time this brandy was sent for. A.—I suppose [illegible] the room.

[Witness addressed the [illegible] posed this was r

under oath, when she referred to this certificate, and produced it, that Dr. Burdell got the certificate the next day after the marriage from Dr. Marvine? A.—She may have said so, but I do not remember it.

Q.—What do you mean by saying that the certificate was given on the 29th day of October, 1856? A.—I suppose she gave it in testimony.

The Court—What is the date of the certificate?

Mr. Dean—It is the 29th, and they were married on the 28th.

Q.—She gave as part of her testimony upon that occasion, that she was married to Dr. Burdell on the 28th? A.—It was a volunteer thing on her part.

Q.—Was it not a part of her statement? A.—Not by my request.

Q.—Was it part of her statement under oath? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did she tell you, and was it a part of her statement, that that marriage was to be kept a secret until June or Spring? A.—I do not remember any such thing.

Q.—Was there any statement of that kind made? A.—I do not remember it.

Q.—Are you accustomed to taking testimony in courts of justice? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In what Courts? A.—I have taken testimony when I was connected with the Press; in Ireland I took testimony frequently in Court.

Q.—As a member of the Court, or reporter? A.—As a reporter.

Q.—Did you take it in short hand? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Were these taken stenographically? (Referring to the depositions taken at the inquest.) A.—I waited for each answer to the questions, and took them down.

Q.—Were the questions put down in writing? A.—Generally speaking they were not, but a few questions were put down.

Q.—Subsequently, the questions and answers of other witnesses were put down? A.—I only took the answers at any time to the best of my memory.

Q.—Did you file them all? A.—Yes, Sir, and marked them every day.

Q.—I see this one is marked the first day and second day also? A.—I think it must be the first day.

Q.—Look at it and see how it is marked. The deposition is marked on the back? A.—(Witness examining it.)—I should imagine that it is a mistake, and that the handwriting is that of my clerk.

Q.—Do you not know your own handwriting? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Is not that your handwriting? A.—Let me look at it again more carefully. (After examining it.) I think it is my handwriting.

Q.—Both the indorsement first and second days? A.—The "second day" is in my handwriting.

Q.—The "first day," how was it? A.—I presume I gave orders to have each day's proceedings marked.

Q.—Can you give any reason for writing that "second day" when it was not? A.—I cannot; Mrs. Burdell was examined the first day.

Q.—You cannot give any reason for writing "second day" on the back? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you not ask this question of Mrs. Burdell upon the examination after you had asked her name, and when she told you that her name was Emma Augusta Burdell, "By what authority do you call yourself Mrs Burdell?" A.—I do not remember that I ever did.

Q.—Did you say "You do it upon the promise to marry?" A.—I never did.

Q.—Did she say in answer to the question put "No! I was lawfully married, and will get a certificate if you will see me?" A.—I do not remember that she said that she would get a certificate if I would let her.

The Court—Do you remember any words of that kind? A.—I do not remember any particular words she said, except that she would get a certificate, and did get it.

Q.—Did you refuse to let her go up and get it. A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you send up an officer with her? A.—There were officers attached to every room to prevent persons from going up stairs, and to prevent the interference of witnesses.

Q.—Were there male officers in every room with the females? A.—No, Sir, they were at the outside of the door.

Q.—You made a thorough examination of the house, did you not? A.—I gave orders that a thorough examination should be made.

Q.—What instruments did you find in the house capable of being used in the murder of Doctor ——

The Court—We went over that ground last evening, and the remark then made by the Court in reference to this matter, must be satisfactory to the defence.

Q.—Did you also have an examination made of the person of Mrs. Cunningham? A.—I had orders from the Jury to examine the heads, necks, shoulders and arms of Messrs. Snodgrass, Eckel and Mrs. Cunningham.

Q.—It was made by the direction of the Jury? A.—They instructed me to do so.

Q.—You made the order? A.—I did.

Q.—Did you make the order to have her daughter Helen examined? A.—No, Sir.

The Court objected to the question as being irrelevant.

Mr. Dean—I want to state, if your Honor please, and show not only that the house had been searched, but that no persons had been found there capable of committing this homicide. I want to show now, and I will prove by medical evidence to be introduced by the defence, that it was impossible with the amount of resistance that is shown to have been made by Dr. Burdell, that the person who committed that deed should not have borne some marks of violence upon the next day. I want to show that every person in the house was examined.

The Court—I cannot permit anything except in reference to the defendant here. There is no accusation against the daughters of Mrs. Cunningham, and I will not permit any to be assumed for the purpose of being rebutted by the defence.

Q.—What did you do with this certificate. A.—After the inquisition I had the papers tied up every day and left them in the usual place for the use of the District-Attorney and the Grand Jury.

Q.—Is that the only post mortem examination you have made? [handing up a paper to the Coroner.]

A.—There were several post mortem examinations after the post mortem examination made by Dr. Knight, in the presence of Dr. Woodward and several other Doctors, whose names I do not now recollect; subsequently, by order of the Jury, when the instruments were produced in the Court, the Doctors were again ordered to try the exact size of the wounds, and to impress those instruments in the wounds, so as to be able to give a clear and decided answer whether such instruments would make such wounds.

Q.—Then you mean to say that there was another post mortem examination? A.—I call any other examination of the body a post mortem examination.

Q.—Was there any other examination besides this? [referring to the paper produced.] A.—This is the only one I ordered.

Q.—In the first place, this paper is dated Feb. 3, 1857. One sheet of it is marked Wednesday, Feb. 11, 1857, and not signed by anybody. I wish you to look at it, and see whose handwriting it is on the back, "Feb. 11, 1857." A.—This is the handwriting of the clerk.

Q.—Your son? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You do not know when your clerk marked it so? A.—I presume he marked the papers every night; I gave him orders to mark them every day.

Q.—Do you know when Dr. Burdell was buried?

The Court—The witness need not answer the question. It is of no importance.

Q.—Did Mrs. Burdell desire repeatedly to see the body of Dr. Burdell? A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—Did she not ask you to let her see it? A.—I believe she asked my clerk; I do not remember as she asked me to see it.

The Court—You did not hear her say it? A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—I want to ask you in which room she was when she gave her testimony Saturday evening? A.—To the best of my recollection, I think her testimony was given in the back room on the second floor; the body was in the front room.

Q.—Did she in the presence of the Jury ask of you the privilege to go in and see the dead body then, and did you refuse it? A.—Her then counsel spoke of her wish to go into the room and see the body, and he said it would be improper for her to do so.

Q.—Who was her counsel? A.—Mr. Sheehan.

Q.—Is he your son in law? A.—Yes, Sir, but he was there without my knowledge. I did not bring him there.

Q.—Did you refuse her the privilege of seeing the dead body? A.—I did not refuse anything of the kind.

Q.—Was she permitted to see it before the day of the funeral? A.—She was.

Q.—Did you send for an artist during the inquest to take a sketch of Mrs. C. and her daughters? A.—I do not wish to answer that question.

The Court—The witness need not answer it.

TESTIMONY OF ANDREW J. DIBBLE.

The witness in reply to the District-Attorney, stated that he resided in 55 Bleecker-street, which is directly in the rear of Dr. Burdell's house, and that from the room which he occupies in that house in Bleecker-street, he could see the third story and attic of Dr. Burdell's house, but not the windows of the second story. He had been examined before the Coroner, and was then asked whether he had, on the night of the murder of Burdell, seen the second story windows in the rear of that house, which he replied he had, but he had made a mistake as to the windows referred to, inasmuch as he meant the windows on the third floor. There was a board fence and a stable between the rears of the two houses, so that he could only see the upper story of the house No. 31 Bond street. On the Friday night the saw, at half past two o'clock, a light in the upper story in the rear part of the house. He did not notice it particularly; it was the very fact of seeing it in the rear part of the house at that time that had caused him to look at it. He was certain he saw it in Dr. Burdell's house, and that it was in one of the two story windows—the third story or dormer, but he believed it to be in the third story window.

To the Court witness reserved that he fixed the hour by the facts that he had been in Brooklyn at a party from ten till half past one, that he had got up to his house at two, and that he sat in the hall for a while before he went to bed.

On his cross-examination he stated that he house was next to Dr. Stett's, that it was three stories high, and that the room he occupied was on the second floor and in the rear.

TESTIMONY OF FREDERICK FREDERICKS.

Mr. Frederick Fredericks, the ballet master at Burton's Theatre, stated that he resided at No. 33 Bleecker street, which is one door nearer the Bowery than the house of the gentleman who had just testified; his bedroom on the night of the murder was on the third floor, counting the parlor floor as the first; from his room he could see easily the rears of the houses Nos. 31 and 29 Bond-street, because of the sharp turn Bleecker street takes at Crosby-street; on that Friday afternoon he had been out at Yonkers where he went every Friday afternoon for six months to teach dancing in the boarding-schools; his usual time of leaving there was half past six, and of arriving here was half past seven, but on that afternoon, in consequence of the bad road, he did not get home till nearly nine; after taking his dinner he sat down to read, and did not go to bed till half past eleven; he saw his time by his parlor clock which was a moment or a minute before the half hour when he left to go to bed; after getting up to his room he sat down on a chair to take off his clothes, and caught a glance of a light in the window of the second story of one of those two houses Nos. 29 or 31 Bond-street; his eye was caught by a reflected light, or a light of some kind that was moving, the same as if a rocking chair or a polished chair had received the light of gas or something of that kind, and he saw this going as if it were rocking; he was positive this light came from the second story.

On his cross-examination the witness stated that the night was so obscure he could not see whether the shades of the windows in that house were down; he thought it was snowing or raining very hard then, and believed that would make the light more apparent; the next day was so very stormy that he did not go out.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. FREDERIKA SCHWARTZWAELDER.

Mrs. Schwartzwaelder testified that she resided with her husband, Col. Schwartzwaelder, in No. 29 Bond-street, the second story back room of which is their sleeping room, and adjoins Dr. Burdell's office on the same floor of the next house. On the night of the murder she went up to her bedroom at five minutes past eleven, which she knew by looking at her watch, and went to bed about half past eleven. The lower shutters of the windows in that room were of solid wood, and usually closed at night. They were closed on the night in question. Before going to bed she turned down the gas so as to leave very little light in the room—the gas not being more than about a quarter of an inch high, just so that it would burn. Up to the time she turned the light down the shutters were closed.

Cross-examined.—The hall of Dr. Burdell's house separated his room and witness' bedroom on the same floor; witness after going up there remained alone until about twelve o'clock, when her husband came up; he did not remain up any time but went right to bed; she was awake when he came up; during that evening she did not hear any unusual noise from the room of Dr. Burdell; she remembered the Saturday evening prior to the sale of Dr. Burdell's furniture; whilst in the basement of her house she heard very loud noises that evening, and heard them afterwards very distinctly when she went up stairs to her room; the noises were apparently as if some person was crying "Murder." (Counsel for defence stated that these noises were the results of certain experiments that had been instituted at the time and place referred to, and informed the Court that witness' attention had not been called to them in advance.) Four gentlemen, witness said, came to her house; Mr. Stafford was one of them; another was Mr. Uhl, whom she now recognized by his countenance, (he being in Court;) the other gentleman she did not know; they asked permission to go up to the second floor; the noise was heard in the early part of the evening in the basement, and afterwards, when the gentlemen had come in and gone up stairs, it was heard in the room in which she slept; she thought she could hear the noise of a person falling, though she did not at that time take particular notice; the cry was very distinct; during all the early part of the evening of the 30th of January witness had been in the front basement of her house and heard no noise, nor did she hear any noise at all that night; the first she knew of the homicide was next day; she did not smell anything particular that night.

To Jurors—Witness opened the top shutters only that evening; the top part had a shade, and when she retired she opened the top shutter, but not till she had turned down the gas; she did not think her husband turned the gas on because the gas in the hall was left burning; she drew the shade up after retiring, so that in the upper part of the window there was nothing but the panes of glass, and the room was dark apparently; the room door was left open so that the light in the hall threw a light into the room; the light in the hall was about three feet from the door, in front of the house, on the second floor.

EVIDENCE OF COL. SCHWARTZWAELDER.

Col. Christian Schwartzwaelder, the husband of the last witness, returned to his house that night (the 30th of January) about twelve o'clock, and went up stairs to bed; the light of his sleeping apartment was very dim, and there was hardly any light in the room.

Cross-examined—The night was dark and foggy, but witness did not think it stormed at the time he went into his house; he did not smell anything unusual in the atmosphere either in the house or out of it, and heard no noise after he had got to his room, to which he retired immediately after getting home; the gas was lighted in the hall on the second floor, but he could not say whether the shutters were closed or opened.

The Court suggested that to ascertain that fact the counsel had better ask the lady.

The former witness (Mrs. S.) was accordingly inquired of as to whether the shutters were closed in the hall the whole way up the window on that night, and she replied in the affirmative.

Counsel elicited further from the witness on the stand that he could not tell whether he turned out the gas in his room this night or not, but that he turned out the gas in the hall; he probably turned up the other light enough to see to undress and prepare for bed; he generally turned off the gas finally before he went to bed.

EVIDENCE OF CAPT. DILKS.

Capt. Dilks was recalled and examined as to certain experiments he had been requested to make, and which he did make last week, in reference to the extent to which the rear of the houses in Bond-street could be seen from the rear window of Mr. Fredericks' house in Bleecker-street; he said he could distinctly see the rear of the houses Nos. 29 and 31 from it; those houses were very similar in appearance, save that they were painted of different colors; the only object he had in going there was to locate the houses that were in sight.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. FOSTER, MATRON OF THE CITY PRISON.

Mrs. Foster was next examined by the District-Attorney.

She said she was one of the matrons of the City Prison, and had been since its first organization; Mrs. C. had been under her charge by day, and she had had occasion to notice how Mrs. C used her hands; she observed her sewing with her left hand, and when upon one occasion she spoke to her about it, Mrs. C., in reply, said that she had been troubled with the rheumatism for several months, and she was obliged occasionally to use her left hand on that account.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Q.—Have Mary Donahoe and Hannah Conlan been under your charge? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Have you been to them to ask them questions as to what they would testify? A.—At one time they made some remarks to me about some words spoken in the house the evening previous to the murder; I told them not to say anything to me about it, as I did not wish to hear anything of the kind.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. LAVINIA PHELPS.

Mrs. Phelps was then examined by the District-Attorney, and testified that she was the Night Matron of the City Prison, and as such Mrs. C. had been under her charge. Witness had noticed that Mrs. C. used her left hand aptly while sewing and cutting and when she used the scissors, needle and thimble.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Q.—Did not Mrs. C. complain of being ill a part of the time? A.—Upon two or three nights she did.

Q.—Did she complain of rheumatism? A.—Not particularly of rheumatism then; she said that she had had rheumatism.

Q.—Did she not complain of her right hand? A.—She said that some time ago she had had rheumatism in her right hand.

Q.—Did she give that as a reason why she used her left hand? A.—She said that she had had rheumatism some time ago and had disabled her hand.

Q.—Did she give that as a reason? A.—She said that she had had the rheumatism which caused her to use her left hand.

Q.—She did not admit that she was left-handed? A.—I do not recollect that she did.

JOHN W. BITTS' TESTIMONY.

John W. Bitts was then called by the Prosecuting Attorney, and testified that he was attached to the Fifteenth District Police-station and was ordered on Saturday morning to the house No. 31 Bond-street. He reached there about half past nine o'clock and he went into the room where the Dr. was killed, and while there he touched the body. On returning to the Station-house he found his left hand was bloody, and he washed it. He remained in the house perhaps ten minutes, but not longer, and he then went back to the Station-house to make his report—went out of the front door.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Q.—Which part of your hand was bloody? Q.—The whole inside of it and the fingers that I used to turn the body over.

Q.—Did you not rub the bannistere on your way down stairs? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Or the wall? A.—My impression is that I did not.

Q.—Who were in the room when you got there? A.—There were three gentlemen.

Q.—In going out of the front door did you take hold of the knob of the door? A.—Yes, Sir; I took hold of the knob to open the door.

Q.—Did you take hold of it with your right or left hand? A.—With the right hand.

By a Juror—Is there any probability of your having got blood on your right hand? A.—No, Sir, there was no blood where I put my right hand on the body.

By a Juror—Were you aware that your hand was bloody when you went out. A.—Yes, Sir; I was very careful not to touch anything, because I knew my hand was bloody.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DR. UHL RESUMED.

Dr. Uhl then took the stand, and the cross-examination of this witness, which was commenced last evening, was resumed.

Q.—When you went to No. 31 Bond-street, did you notice the appearance of blood in the room and on the premises in that neighborhood. A.—I did carefully.

Q.—You have already stated that you had large experience in examinations in cases of Coroner's inquests? A. I have made a large number of such examinations.

Q.—For that reason your attention was called, of course, to the material points in reference to the blood found here? A.—I have made it a point during the last few years to examine all cases to which I had access, and I did it in some manner in this case.

Q.—I want to ask you if you looked into the little closet to which reference has been made? (pointing it out upon the model.) A.—I examined every part of it carefully, and did not find a single spot of blood there.

Q.—Was there anything that had a semblance to blood? A.—Nothing of the kind.

Q.—You examined it with a great deal of care? A.—I did, because I supposed a person might have been secreted in that room.

Q.—Were the diagrams which represent the Doctor's room, and the spots of blood found there, made under your direction? A.—Yes, Sir.

By the Court—Do they give an exact representation of the spots of blood, as you found them there? A.—They are very correct.

Q.—Who was the artist that made them? A.—A gentleman by the name of Bensen. Dr. Main went with me, and placed the furniture in the exact position in which he found it on the Saturday morning. I remained with the artist to see that he took the blood-spots correctly, and was present during the whole time he was making the sketches.

Q.—Just describe to the Jury the blood-spots in that room: first, the location of the furniture, and then where the blood-spots are on the furniture?

Dr. Uhl, by means of the painting, then described minutely to the Jury the location of the various articles of furniture in the room, and pointed out the stains of blood which were found upon the furniture, doors and wall of the room.

Q.—What was the distance between the secretary and the chair that had the blood on it? A.—I think it was about ten inches.

Q.—What was the distance between the centre table and the chair? A.—It was about sixteen inches.

The Court—Was that the chair which stood in front of the secretary—the one spoken of as being turned round towards the door that leads into the hall? A.—Yes, Sir.

The Court—Will you not describe where the blood was on the chair? A.—It was on the inside of the back, and also on the top of the chair; there was not much on the outside.

Q.—Was there any other chair in the room except this one, a rocking and a dental chair? A.—I did not see any other.

Q.—Was the rocking chair seated west of the centre table? A.—It was towards the fireplace.

Q.—Was there any blood upon that? A.—None whatever.

Q.—Was there any blood upon the sofa? A.—There was none.

Q.—Was there any blood upon the centre table or upon anything that was on the centre table? A.—There was blood on the newspaper that lay on the centre table.

Q.—Just state how much blood there was there, and what was its character. A.—There was very little, and it was in round drops.

Q.—It did not look like spirted blood? A.—No, Sir.

The Court—Could a person sitting in that chair by the secretary see to read from the gas burner, if it were burning at the space between the two windows? A.—Very readily; I lit up the room one night and I was satisfied that a person could read there.

Q.—Making the location here with this chair which had the blood on it, and going to the south part of the room—what traces of blood are there in the room towards the window? A.—Tracing it from the paper on the table towards the little desk under the glass, there were round spots of blood on the carpet.

Q.—Were there many drops of blood there? A.—Not many; there were a few drops of blood on the leaf of the table.

Q.—Starting then from that table and going towards the body, were there any indications of blood? A.—There were also a few drops of blood in that direction.

The Court—Ask the Doctor rather from what he saw in the room where he supposed the deceased was and the course he took to get to the place where the body was found—where were the drops of blood? A.—They were outside of the rocking-chair, between it and the grate.

Q.—Were there any marks of blood in this part of the room? A.—I did not discover any.

Q.—From the secretary round to this map, (referring to it in the painting,) there were more or less drops of blood on the wall? A.—There were.

Q.—And none upon the side on which the fireplace was and none at the end except upon the leaf of the table where this newspaper was? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—In your medical judgment, I ask you from the position of the furniture in the room and the drops of blood, where the first blow was struck on Dr. Burdell? A.—I think it was struck when he was sitting in the chair by the secretary.

The Court—Which blow was the first one? A.—The one in the right shoulder in the clavicle.

Q.—In your judgment then in which direction did Dr. B. and the parties go? A.—Towards the door leading to the hall, judging from the spots of blood and the evidences of the struggle.

Q.—Where were the parties when the blow in the left carotid was struck; the Doctor and the person who struck him? A.—It is impossible to tell where they were standing.

The Court—Judging from the appearances, you can give your opinion? A.—I think they were standing in front of the door a little one side.

Q.—How near the door? A.—They must have been very near it.

Q.—Was that blow given when the Doctor was standing or when he was upon the floor? A.—While he was standing, no doubt.

Q.—The evidence of the blood on the wall settles that fact? A.—Beyond question it does.

Q.—If struck in the neck, and by a blow from a person standing in front intercepting him at the door, what would have been the natural manner for him to have thrown his head and neck. A.—Away from the blow of course; that would account very satisfactorily for the spots of blood upon the wall.

Q.—Would the blood spirt until the dagger was withdrawn. A.—It would not, the hand and the dagger would prevent it.

Q.—When the dagger was withdrawn there would be spirted blood? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Would the time which it would take for the jet of blood to come out depend upon whether the person was inhaling his breath or not? A.—It would depend upon the pulsation of the heart to a greater or less extent.

Q.—I ask you medically for your opinion as to whether one person of equal strength with Dr. Burdell could have inflicted those wounds upon him with the resistance which would result without himself or herself having marks of violence? A.—I can only judge by probabilities; it is probable that he might receive marks of violence.

Q.—Would you expect to find marks of violence upon the person who committed the act? A.—I should undoubtedly.

Q.—Did you look particularly at Mrs. Burdell that day to see if she had any marks of violence upon her? A.—In the evening I did.

Q.—State to the jury whether you saw any? A.—I went up to the house and was in her room. My suspicions were very much excited against her. I observed her very closely, and when I left the room I shook hands with her on purpose to get very near her person. I did not discover any marks of violence upon her. She had on a fur cape which dropped off from her shoulders.

Q.—Were her shoulders bare so that you could see? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What kind of a day was it? A.—A chilly day.

Q.—Were people running into the house continually? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you look at her neck and hands to see whether there were any marks of violence upon them? A.—I looked at all the parts of her body exposed to view.

Q.—You observed no marks of violence? A.—I did not observe any.

Q.—You had been acquainted with her for some time? A.—Professionally.

Q.—Were you acquainted with Dr. Burdell. A.—Intimately, and I knew Mrs. C. professionally very well.

Q.—You say that the reason you made this close observation was because your suspicions were fixed upon her? A.—Through the day things occurred there that induced me to think that some person in the house committed the murder. I observed everything with especial care for that reason.

Q.—I wish you would state what traces of blood you found after you got out into the hall? A.—As you go out of the door there was a spot of blood on the door-sill.

Q.—Similar in character to the round drops of blood here? (pointing to the drops of blood as depicted in the painting.) A.—Yes, Sir, there was a round drop of blood on the outside.

The Court—Was it on the sill or in the hall? A.—It was on the sill of the door, and there is no question that the door must have been closed during the struggle.

Q.—The drop must have got there after the door was opened? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where did you next observe any traces of blood? A.—Going down stairs, in the upper hall, on the right hand side.

Q.—Which flight of stairs? A.—The first short flight.

The Court—How far up from the floor was this blood? A.—It was on the base moulding of the stairs.

[The witness here pointed out on the engraving the exact locality.]

Q.—Where next did you see any traces of blood? A.—The next I saw was on the right-hand side of the wall.

Q.—Would it be a place where a person going down stairs would naturally put his hands to the wall, if going down in the dark? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where next did you see any drops of blood? A.—On the base moulding, just back of the parlor door, on the right-hand side, as a person would go towards the basement; there was also a spot of blood on the opposite side, by the mahogany railing on the base board, about the middle, right by the bannisters; the next spot of blood which I discovered was on the door at the foot of the basement stairs, leading into the basement hall; on the basement front door there was a finger mark in blood on the hinge side, very much like a spot which one would have made feeling for the knob of the door with his fingers.

Q.—Did you go into the basement and see if you could find any blood there? A.—I could not discover any there.

Q.—Where did you find blood first? A.—I found a drop of blood near the inside hall door, on the floor, right by the sill.

Judge Dean—Point it out on the diagram to the Jury if you please.

The witness then pointed out the locality.

Q.—Will you, in your judgment as a medical man, tell the Jury how the drops of blood in Dr. Burdell's room to the south and west of the centre-table got there? (referring to the spots on the floor near the window and on the paper on the centre table.)

Attorney General Cushing—That hardly seems to be a medical question. It is not a matter of medical experience to tell how a drop of blood comes upon the floor.

The Court decided that the question might be put.

Q.—I ask you how to account for the drops of blood in the part of the room to which I have referred? A.—They must have come from the person who committed the deed; they could not have come from the Doctor.

The Court—You refer, I suppose, to the drops of blood in the room, which you found going round from the secretary towards the window, and towards where the body was found. Do you also include the drops of blood found upon the newspaper? A.—Yes, Sir.

The Court—Do you apply your remark also to the drops of blood that you found in the hall, and on the stairs, and upon the basement door? A.—That was the conclusion I formed.

Q.—Would the clothing of the person who committed the deed absorb the blood, so that it would not drop from the clothing.

Question objected to by the prosecution.

The Court—You may ask him the question, whether, if this blood was spirted on a person, it would be absorbed by the clothing?

Q.—If the blood was spirted upon the person would it drop off the length indicated by these maps, which show the blood in the room and the wall? A.—I should judge that the blood would likely be absorbed by the clothing.

The Court—The blood, if spirted on a person, would be absorbed by the clothing? A.—Very rapidly. These drops were very peculiar, and were round. I examined them particularly, and called the attention of other persons to them.

Q.—They were not marks of the foot? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Can any opinion be formed as to whether these blows were inflicted by a right or left-handed person on the body of Dr. Burdell. A.—The examination of the body was so miserably conducted, that it is impossible to tell with certainty, in my judgment, whether the blows were inflicted by a right or left-handed person, for, in all cases of this kind, everything depends not only upon ascertaining the external position of the wounds, but also their direction and depth, and these things cannot be accurately ascertained without a very careful examination. There are a few instances on record where such a matter has been determined, but it has always been with the greatest care, and by an accurate dissection, performed by very able men.

Q.—What was the condition of the body at the time of the post-mortem examination—was anything removed? A.—I understood that the viscera, stomach and heart had been removed.

Q.—With the viscera, stomach and heart removed, could anything be told by a probe? A.—Nothing satisfactory at that period.

Q.—I want to ask your opinion, as a medical man, whether these blows were inflicted by a person who had a good knowledge of the human body? A.—I never yet examined a body where there were so many accurate blows given.

Q.—I ask you, then, for a full answer to the question, what degree of anatomical knowledge did the party giving the blows evince? A.—He must have had a pretty fair knowledge of anatomy.

Q.—If but one blow had been given which was fatal, this blow for instance in the neck, you might have thought that accidental? A.—I should have thought nothing of it particularly; we have frequent examinations of bodies where a great many blows were given, but we hardly find more than one blow that reaches the vital point.

Q.—I ask you if in your judgment the blows in this case were accidental or were aimed by the party inflicting them at a vital part, judging from the wounds on the body?

The Court—The witness has stated already that they were very accurate blows, and that he thought they were inflicted by a person having considerable knowledge of anatomy.

Q.—You have had a large experience in post-mortem examinations at Coroners' inquests. Where persons attempt to commit suicide, how is it? A.—In nine cases out of ten they hardly ever reach the artery, and fail to accomplish the object they have in view.

The Court—I do not consider that it is hardly necessary for us to enter upon the subject of suicide here.

Q.—The blow in the right shoulder, how was that as to its being aimed at a vital part? A.—The subclavian artery, directly under the clavicle, is a vital part.

Q.—Do you know whether the sub-clavian artery was wounded in this case? A.—I do not.

Q.—Was there any mark of violence upon his face? A.—There was a slight abrasion upon the bridge of his nose.

Q.—How was that probably caused? A.—It looked like a bruise, as if he had fallen against something; it was a contusion more than any thing else; it might have been caused by falling against any substance upon the floor.

Q.—I want you to state whether your attention was called to the mark upon the neck, which has been referred to in the progress of the trial? A.—My attention was particularly called to it.

Q.—State the time when your attention was first called to it? A.—Immediately after Dr. Francis had offered his testimony before the Coroner; it was between 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning. I examined the neck closely and made up my mind that the appearance about the neck and face by lying upon his face during the entire night with his head twisted a little to one side; the appearance on the neck would have been caused by the pressure of the handkerchief; my attention was so much called to this subject that through the inquest I asked several who came to examine the neck, and they all agreed with me.

Q.—You say your attention was particularly called to this, and that you examined the neck. State what examination you gave? A.—I got down on my knees by the body and examined it with my fingers, I looked at it carefully and examined it from day to day with reference to that point, until the body was buried.

The Court—Did this mark upon the neck grow very faint from day to day? A.—There was no appearance of it after the first day, and it all disappeared.

Q.—Would an anatomical examination of the brain have determined the question of strangulation? A.—It would have done so, if there had been any considerable examination.

Q.—There was no anatomical examination of this body? A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—I want to call your attention to the wound in the left arm, which has been spoken of by Dr. Francis, and which he says he did not particularly examine himself. I ask you if you examined it yourself and saw the wound probed. Give the position of the wound, if you please. A.—I do not think the wound was probed in my presence; it went between the bones of the forearm, just below the bones of the elbow.

Q.—How was that blow inflicted, and in what position would Dr. Burdell have been? A.—That blow was given as he held up his arm to ward off other blows.

Q.—Would that blow necessarily require a good deal of strength to give it force? A.—I should judge so.

Q.—Supposing that leather and woolen had been burnt in that house from 11 o'clock to 1, how long would the odor have continued in the house?

Attorney-General Cushing—I suppose that is not a question of medical experience.

Q.—I ask you whether the instruments which were shown you last night could have inflicted the wounds? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—(By Attorney-General Cushing)—Are you the family physician of Mrs. Cunningham? A.—I have been.

Q.—For how long a time? A.—For a year and a half.

Q.—You spoke last night of the post mortem examination not being a proper one. Did you have reference to the manner or the time in which it was done? A.—The whole manner of the examination.

By Attorney-General Cushing—Q.—Was it or was it not done correctly? A.—I do not think any of it was done correctly.

Q.—Did you see it go on during it progress? A.—I did not.

Q.—What was the object of this examination? A.—It was to determine the external appearance of the wounds, their length and to decide if possible whether the knife which was shown me last night could have produced the wounds, that one part of it was not correct.

Q.—What else did you want to do? A.—We wanted on examination to determine the depth and length of the wounds.

Q.—Can you not determine their direction and length by a probe? A.—You cannot accurately.

Q.—When you went into the house you say you saw Mrs. C., that your suspicions of her were aroused, that you examined her, that she had a cape around her neck, which fell off when you shook hands with her? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How was she dressed? A.—In a dark merino dress.

Q.—How low? A.—It was not what we call a low-necked dress. It appeared to be very much like the dress which she has on at present.

Q.—Did your examinations amount to anything whatever, except that upon shaking hands with her you saw nothing? A.—I merely looked at her closely but did not observe anything.

Q.—In reference to these drops of blood which came from the persons around, you mean to be understood that in your judgment they did not come from Dr. Burdell? A.—I think they must have come from the persons who walked round in that direction.

Q.—Whether they might not have come from persons who walked round there an hour or two after his death, you do not know? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—In reference to the knowledge this person must have had who inflicted these wounds, could you strike as correctly yourself fifteen times? A.—I doubt it very much.

Q.—So then it depends upon either skill or knowledge of the fact? A.—It does in a great degree; but at the same time I might strike those blows in that way.

Q.—Did you ever see as many bad blows in a body as this?

Witness—What do you mean by bad blows?

Counsel—Those that are struck at random, as Dr. Francis stated? A.—I saw a body once that had twenty five wounds in it, and only one mortal wound.

Q.—Stabs? A.—Stabs.

Q.—Where was that? A.—That was down in Trinity-place.

Q.—As to this wound under the arm, can you tell whether that was made before or after the wound in the heart and the neck? Is there anything you can judge from anatomically or in any other way as to how that was? A.—No, I cannot tell now, because I did not dissect the wound, and I could not tell if I had dissected the wound.

Q.—Evidently when that blow was struck the Doctor did not have hold of any body? A.—No; I think in his struggles he held up his hand to ward off the blows.

Q.—You don't know whether he had his head down or not; all we want to get at is whether he could not have had hold of the assailant's hand at the time or could not have been grasping any object? A.—I cannot say that he could not have been grasping any object.

Q.—Well, it is not probable? A.—I think, as I stated before, that the blow was given as he was holding his hand up; the direction of the blow, the place and situation, and the natural appearance of the wound all combined, and everything else lead me to believe that.

Q.—Then your idea that there must have been a struggle and that the person who commited the act must have received some personal violence, depends altogether on whether the Doctor made any struggle or got hold of the other? A.—All those circumstances would modify it.

Q.—You assume that a man of his physical strength would have made resistance? A.—I assume that naturally.

Q.—And if he did and had got hold of the person, he would undoubtedly have left marks on him? A.—Yes, Sir.

By a Juror.—Q.—The leaf of the table was turned down you say—was the blood on it stains, or what? A.—There were several little round drops.

Q.—How would it drop? A.—They were round drops; I only tell you the facts of the case.

Q.—The leaves might have been turned down after the drops got on? A.—I don't know what might have been.

Q.—Did the furniture or anything in the room exhibit any evidence of a struggle? A.—There was nothing upset.

The witness withdrew.

The District-Attorney said that he would now put in as evidence paper No. 11, found in Eckel's secretary. He read it the Court, as follows:

"In consideration of the settling of the two suits pending betwixt myself and Mrs. Emma Augusta Cunningham, I agree as follows: 1st. I agree to extend to Mrs. Emma Augusta Cunningham, and her family, my friendship through life. 2d. I agree never to do anything to the disadvantage of Mrs. Emma Augusta Cunningham. 3d. If I continue to occupy the premises No. 31 Bond-street, I will rent to Mrs. Emma Augusta Cunningham the rooms she now occupies at the rate of $800 per annum.

HARVEY BURDELL."

After a pause, during which a consultation took place between the counsel on both sides,

The Court called on counsel to proceed.

The consultation having terminated, the District Attorney read the following admission in evidence: "It is admitted that on the 15th of October last, Mrs. Emma Augusta Cunningham, the present prisoner, commenced two actions against Dr. Harvey Burdell; one in the Superior Court of the City of New-York, and the other in the Supreme Court; and that one action was for breach of promise of marriage, and the other for slander; that the defendant was arrested in each of the said actions, and held to bail in the aggregate sum of $12,000; that both those actions were, on the 22d day of October, discontinued by agreement of the parties to said actions."

The Court urged the counsel for the defence to proceed to open their cases. The District-Attorney said that he had another witness, Dr. McGuire, to call, who was not in Court, but promised to be in attendance on being sent for. The Judge said he might be examined afterwards, whereupon,

Mr. Dean rose and said: If your Honor please, we have a motion to make. It is that this prosecution be dismissed.

District-Attorney—If the Court please, before any argument is made upon that, I must object.

The Court—It is a very unusual proceeding.

District-Attorney—Excuse me, if your Honor please, I will state my objection and then take my seat. The common law, and the statute based on it, provide that when two defendants are indicted together, and are on trial together—and such has been the law ever—a motion may be made to the Court to instruct the Jury then and there, at the termination of the evidence for the prosecution, that in the judgment of the Court no case has been made out against one or other of the prisoners on trial, with the view of enabling the other party thus joined and thus put upon trial, to be put upon the witness' stand and made a witness of. But, Sir, when a party is alone upon trial, when a party is alone upon an indictment, and the prosecution rest their case, the Jury must pass upon it, and the defendant may or may not put in his testimony. The case may go to the Jury upon the testimony of the prosecution, but I never heard of such a thing as a motion to nonsuit in a case of this kind.

The Court—I will hear the other side.

District-Attorney—Well, Sir, I have a still further objection, and that is that under the guise of a motion to dismiss this case, which is either a legal motion or not, as the object is stated, that any argument should be heard—

The Court—You will take your seat, Sir. I deny the motion.

Mr. Dean—If the prosecution will wait till we state what the motion is—

District-Attorney—I apologize to the learned friend on the other side. I heard him distinctly state that he would now move to dismiss the case.

Mr. Dean—Unless—

The Court—So I understood him.

District-Attorney—But without any qualification. I deny the right of the counsel to make the motion under any qualification whatever.

The Court—I will hear the counsel.

Mr. Dean—I have no doubt but that I can refer the public prosecutor to a case which he remembers very well, and in which this motion was not only made, but the action of the Court was in conformity with it.

District-Attorney—By consent of the parties. You mean the Lutener case, in which Mrs. Hayes was the defendant?

Mr. Dean—No, not the Lutener case. Our motion is this, that your Honor direct an acquittal of this prisoner, on the evidence as it now stands, unless the public prosecutor calls as witnesses Mr. Snodgrass, Mr. Eckel, Augusta Cunningham and Ellen Cunningham—parties who were in the house at the time of the homicide, who were capable of committing it, and who had proved, beyond all peradventure, that, as the case stood, it was the bounden duty of the Jury at once to acquit the defendant. The District-Attorney—in opening this case to you, gentlemen—as though he supposed that a woman, who, since the 31st of January last, has been dogged and hunted as a wild beast, when she came into a Court of Justice, before twelve honest men, would have some decency exhibited in her behalf, with a view to prevent you from giving utterance to the feelings of manly sympathy, which pervade the breast of every honest man, saw fit, in advance of all testimony, to denounce my client as the worst woman that God ever created—as a woman who seemed, by his description of her, to have been depicted by the monarch of hell himself, as his spiritual lieutenant upon earth.

I have also listened with pleasure to my learned friend in his address to Juries in capital and other criminal cases. But what was my surprise when I discovered that he, usually so fair, so candid, so conscientious, so just, had overstepped all the bounds of moderation, and not contenting himself with stating the facts of the case which he expected to prove, has, as my learned associate has said, ransacked the classics, and ancient and modern history, both sacred and profane, quite and close to collect demons—female fiends—in order that he might typify by means of them the character of my unfortunate client. But, gentlemen, the very opening of the District-Attorney, had even there been any danger to this defendant, has rendered her acquittal as sure as Almighty God permits you to live until you arrive at the end of your duties in this case. I say it has rendered it sure, because although there has been to a limited extent some prejudice in the public mind in regard to this investigation, yet I am convinced that you will decide it upon the evidence, that you will act upon the law,—in other words, gentlemen, you will act as men.

In the brief evidence which it is my intention to make to you I shall not go over all the evidence in this case. I shall not stop, as the counsel supposed I would, to depict the sorrows and the anguish which my client has suffered. I shall not stop to give you any account of that, although the abuse heaped upon her by the District-Attorney—the outrageous abuse would render me unworthy the name of a man, were I not to say a few words in her defence, which are called for by the remarks of the learned gentleman himself. Her position is painful enough at best. He told you that she came before you a "veiled picture of sorrow," and that all the sufferings which she attempted to exhibit were entirely feigned. She does come before you a "picture of sorrow," and unfortunately as she comes before you with the weeds of widowhood, it is not the first time that her heart has been pierced with anguish—it is not the first time that she has been called upon to deplore the loss of a husband. I will not, gentlemen, attempt to depict to your minds the anguish which wrung her soul when scarce three short years ago the husband of her youth was entombed beneath the sod, but gentlemen, when she lay stretched upon the bed of sickness herself, as she supposed, about to be drifted into the ocean of eternity, and even told the husband of her youth had departed this life, that his spirit had found its way to another and we trust a better world. Yet she put her trust in the widow's God. She has faced affliction before, and she has come through it unscathed. Since that time she has been rapidly but smoothly borne down the stream of time, until, unfortunately for her, she was dashed upon an epoch in her history of fearful moment. Suddenly there shone out from the horizon, not that star of Bethlehem, whose serene and hallowed light had pierced the darkness of her affliction, as the grave as she supposed had closed over the lifeless form of her husband, and her earthly hopes, which were all entombed—but the baneful star of her destiny—her ill-fated union with Dr. Harvey Burdell. The District-Attorney told you that she haunted that man for three long years,—that she dogged him at every step in public and private,—that she was spy upon his actions, and that she was his persecutor and his tormentor. Gentlemen, has the counsel proved any such state of facts? I conceive the District-Attorney was in error—if you please, honestly mistaken. He knew not that Harvey Burdell sought her,—that he importuned her with his attentions,—that he came to her,—that he courted her,—in fact, that he paid her every attention which an honorable man could pay to an honorable and high-minded woman. There are those who know not only that one did not dog and hunt him about, but that he was ready to introduce her to his acquaintances with whom he wished to stand well—to introduce her to the ton, and most reputable acquaintances he ever had. There are those who know that he was best pleased when he was heaping, as they supposed, the most honor upon her. Why did the District-Attorney make that statement? Did he suppose that he could prove it? Did he suppose that it was the subject of proof? No! He did not expect, within the rules of law, as it strikes me, to prove anything of that sort. Yet, gentlemen, why should he, usually so fair, make a statement embittered with slanders like those? Was it that he supposed you would be influenced by declamation to disregard your oaths? I can hardly think that. But why was it? Let him in his subsequent remarks, if he should address you, inform you upon point.

Before proceeding in reference to the facts of this case, I will take the liberty of calling your attention to one or two rules of law which the Court will lay down for your guidance. I draw the attention of the Court to the 1st of Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 13.

On civil cases it is sufficient if the evidence on the whole agrees with and supports the hypothesis which it is adduced to prove; but in criminal cases, it must exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of the party. In both cases, a verdict may well be founded on circumstances alone, and these often lead to a conclusion far more satisfactory than direct evidence can produce.

In other words, the rule of law which governs you in this case, gentlemen, is simply this: Unless the circumstances proved in this case exclude every other hypothesis than that of guilt, it is your bounden duty to acquit. This rule is well stated in Best, upon Presumptions, page 382, which I will read: "The evidence against the accused should be such as to exclude to a moral certainty every hypothesis but that of his guilt of the offence imputed to him." In other words, if all the circumstances proved may be true, and yet the party innocent, you must acquit. If the circumstances are consistent with either guilt or innocence, then you must acquit. And upon this point I will take the liberty of calling your attention and that of the Court to a few illustrations of this principle, for, as I shall show you presently, if the prosecution had proved twenty-four-fold more than they have, they would not have proved enough to come within this rule of law. I now read Judge Edmonds' charge to the Jury in a capital case, reported in the New-York Legal Observer, page 93.

"Another rule is this: The evidence must exclude, to a moral certainty, every other hypothesis but that of guilt. If you can reconcile the facts that are proven with the belief or supposition that the prisoner is innocent—that somebody else committed the guilty deed—then that hypothesis which the law requires does not exist in your minds. To illustrate this matter,—for I find that these illustrations are to my own mind more effective than abstract propositions—like the instance stated by counsel of the servant girl indicted for the murder of her mistress. It was proved that she was alone in the house with the murdered woman—there were no signs about the house that it had been broken into—and from the fact that she had all the opportunities of committing the deed, it was conceded that she was the guilty person. One would have, indeed, supposed that every hypothesis but that of guilt was excluded. And yet in that very case, there was another hypothesis that was nearer the truth even than that which the jury had formed. A man had entered the house by an open window, to which he obtained access by means of a plank thrown across from the opposite side of an alley and after he had perpetrated the murder, he removed every trace of his entrance. The conviction in that case was therefore held to be wrong, because there was another hypothesis which the evidence did not exclude.

There is another thing to be taken into account—that circumstances are sometimes fabricated by innocent persons falsely accused. Take the case of the uncle; he was hard chastising his niece severely—she cried out, "You will kill me!" she was afterwards missing; nobody knew where she was; the uncle was strongly interested in her death, because he would have inherited her estate; he, alarmed at the circumstantial evidence against him, endeavored to save himself by dressing up another child and presenting it as his niece. Every fact was, as might have been expected, taken as strong evidence of his guilt. The man was convicted, and afterwards the child returned home, having run away from his severity. There can be little doubt that the fabrication of evidence by him operated most strongly in the minds of the jury, in convicting him. Fabrication is also sometimes resorted to by those really guilty, to ward off suspicion from themselves.

Take the instance of the man found on the road with the stolen horse. He was found alone with the horse, and could not give any satisfactory account of the manner in which it came into his possession, and on that evidence he was convicted. But it turned out that the real thief, finding himself hotly pursued and in danger of being overtaken, encountered this man on the highway, and asked him to hold his horse while he stepped into the neighboring field, and thus he escaped. The possibility of circumstances being thus fabricated, both by the innocent and the guilty, is therefore to be taken into consideration.

Another rule is, that the supposition of guilt must flow naturally from all the facts, and be consistent with all of them. It must be no constrained result, and if any one of the facts is utterly inconsistent with the idea of guilt, it breaks the chain, and bars the conviction which might otherwise naturally flow from the other circumstances. As in the case of the servant girl, accused of poisoning the family in food of which she partook as freely as any. The danger which she thus unnecessarily incurred was not inconsistent with the supposition of her guilt, as of itself to be regarded as destructive of the conclusion which naturally flowed from the other circumstances in the case.

Another rule is, that, in cases of doubt, it is safest to acquit."

Now gentlemen, I have quoted three rules of law,—not that I supposed there was any real necessity for it, because the Court, not having the power, as it so decided, to dispose of it,—they said as they have in civil cases, it is incumbent upon us to leave that matter to you. We not only do not regret it, but we prefer that that course should be taken, although, as a matter of form the other motion was made to the Court. We prefer that you gentlemen should discuss this case, and for this reason: we wish not only that Mrs. Burdell should be acquitted, but that she should be honorably acquitted.

I will, with your permission, I will call your attention to some of the statements in the District-Attorney's opening, which he has not only failed to prove, but utterly disproved, and which statements form the corner-stones of this case. Had he proved anything which he said he would, a very insufficient and feeble case, as respects his testimony and the circumstances, would have been made out. He first told you with a view to show that this was the work of a monster, that Emmy Burdell was stabbed in a shocking manner by the hand of a female monster—not as a man would be likely to do it, for as if bungling woman, bent upon hellish revenge. And yet, gentlemen, the very first witness whom he called—that venerable Dr. Francis—a patriarch in his profession, and upon whose countenance beamed the intelligence of a man of very high standing in the community, as you know he is—told you that in his opinion the person who inflicted these wounds had a good deal of anatomical knowledge. You heard the testimony of Dr. Uhl, who said, I think, that it was a very difficult thing for an anatomist to strike as accurately as did the assassin who murdered Dr. Burdell. That will be proved by other witnesses for the defence. Well, that ends that part of the District Attorney's case. He next told you that the body of this murdered man was laid out upon the floor of his office by the assassin, that the body was not found in the position in which Dr. Burdell fell dead, and that was another circumstance from which he deduced the inference of guilt against my client. What is his own proof upon that point? Dr. Maine, his witness, and I think Dr. Uhl, tells you that the body remained there as it had fallen. There is no evidence to show that it had been disturbed at all. Another circumstance which the District-Attorney clothed in most glowing rhetoric was this: he said that the defendant appeared next day with a fur cape, and that she did so to prevent the discovery of a red mark upon her neck, corresponding to the mark upon the neck of the deceased—the mark which the District Attorney said had been given in the death struggle. You recollect the rhetoric with which he clothed this pretended circumstance. What now is the proof upon this point? He asked his witness, Dr. Maine: "Did you observe any thing about her neck," and Dr. Maine says "No, there was nothing." Further than that, gentlemen, he tells you that it was a very cold day, that a fur cape was a very suitable article of clothing for that day, that there was nothing unusual in the manner of his lady in reference to that particular, at all events, and thus falls the next main circumstance alleged to exist against this defendant. The District Attorney says that "this woman,"—"this fiend,"—"this woman fiend," told the domestics in the house to listen to the altercations that occurred between her and Dr. Harvey Burdell. They did listen, (the District Attorney told you,) and the words were so loathsome that they shrunk back abashed. Beautiful sentiment—beautiful language! But, gentlemen, it only was the one element of beauty, which is—truth. The domestics, boiling over with rage as they did, all told you that no such fact existed. Away, then, goes this circumstance. Another, and one of the most fearful circumstances which he alleged against the defendant was, that she obtruded herself into the presence of Dr. Thompson, made known her quarrels to him and sought to enlist him in the matter, to take up her battles against Dr. Burdell. You heard Dr. Thompson's testimony upon that subject, and so far from that, he told you that exactly the contrary was true;—that Dr. Burdell applied to him in the matter, and that Mrs. Burdell called and said that he had nothing to do with the matter. There was no reason why he should be drawn into it, and Dr. Thompson said that he would have nothing to do with it, and next day wrote a note to that effect. Another circumstance that the District-Attorney alluded to was the "dramatic power" of my client, but I will not say of him as the maid of her, that he "had the "dramatics." That circumstance was, that Dr. Thompson heard the defendant ask Dr. Burdell on the Friday morning preceding the homicide in a very mysterious manner, "when will you return?" and that she knew the exact hour of his return, so that she could plan his death. He (Dr. Thompson) tells you that she said to him in a very affectionate way, "Well, Harvey, where are you going?" or, "when will you return?" just as a person ordinarily addresses you who is living in the same house. This was the fifth leading circumstance on which the District-Attorney thought to convict this woman of the crime of murder. Why, his own testimony takes away from the prosecution all the circumstances which he alleged existed against her, or, at least, the chief circumstances. I only call your attention to these matters briefly.

I ask, again, gentlemen, why was this savage attack made upon this unprotected and defenceless woman? There is only one principle on which I can understand it. You heard from the witness, Dr. Maguire, the state of feeling that generally existed between the respective members of the Burdell family. You heard enough from him to draw the inference that Dr Burdell was generally on bad terms with his relations, quarreling and making it up with them by turns, but that they (Burdell's relatives) possessed one peculiarity, which is apparent upon this trial, which is this: The moment the life left the remains of Harvey Burdell they were scrambling for his property. We know with what avidity his heirs—his blood relatives, have sought to snatch and divide up among them whatever property he left. We know how they have pursued and hunted this unfortunate woman, and I know also that the very counsel of that family appeared before the Surrogate's Court, to render if possible null and void the marriage, in order that they (the relations) might get that property; and that very Counsel, (Mr. Edwards,) although a worthy man and an able lawyer, appears here to-day to prosecute that woman. And why? You all recollect upon the Coroner's Inquest with what feelings of disgust and loathing the conduct of a certain lawyer who appeared there for the blood relatives of the deceased was viewed. He was there and took part in the proceedings. If you have mingled in this City and talked with your acquaintances and fellows, and read the papers, you must have heard the unmingled condemnation of the course pursued by that man (Ex-Judge Capron) for the indelicacy, the indecency even of appearing as a public prosecutor, and at the same time as counsel of the blood relatives interested pecuniarily in the death of my client. And yet, gentlemen I can understand why this trial has been conducted in many respects as no other capital trial was conducted. It was the handiwork of the blood-relatives of Dr. Burdell, who have an interest to the amount of perhaps $50,000 or $25,000. Those who are interested in my client's death, have sent their counsel here, work up the case, fish for testimony, screw up the witnesses, as though they were upon the rack! Do everything you can to induce a jury of twelve men to send this defendant to a felon's grave, so that they, upon the death of that woman, can rake and divide up among themselves the share of the property which must fall to her as his lawful widow. I can understand it upon no other principle, why the prosecuting counsel should travel beyond the record, and seek to be the channel for the slanders, foul and hellish as ever issued from mortal lips,—slanders, the truth or falsity of which are not to be tried in this Court, because you are sitting here to try the indictment in this case. The District Attorney told you that this lady, Mrs. Cunningham, lived at No. 31 Bond-street, and that there she kept in effect a house of prostitution. He told you—and with an eagerness he said it—that he would unroof that house. He said that she had forsaken one paramour for another, and he went on in that strain describing there her conduct for years, as that of the most infamous woman that was ever suffered to go at large in this community. And yet the District Attorney must have known that no such proof could be produced in this case, that it was wholly foreign to the issue whether true or false, and yet he suffers himself to become the channel through which those foul and hellish slanders are to be issued broadcast before this community—to be scattered over the civilized world. I ask you, gentlemen, whether, as honest men, your very hearts did not sicken within you as you heard this infamous abuse heaped upon the defenceless head of the prisoner at the bar. Gentlemen, I would have thought that one in whose veins flowed a drop of the milk of human kindness, would have been restrained by humanity, aye, by a sense of decency, from unnecessary and wanton abuse—uncalled-for abuse—of this lady in the presence of her innocent daughters. Yet the counsel sought to influence your minds by such considerations. He thought that they were suitable topics to descant upon, although not coming within the line of his duty at all, and if he has gained anything by a course like that I much mistake my reading of the human countenance, or my knowledge of human nature. Again he told you that Dr. Burdell lived without enemies and without reproach,—that no one living but my client was an enemy of his,—that no one else could by any possibility have any motive to commit that deed of horror. I wish we could have been spared from olinding to the fact, but the unauthorized statements of the District-Attorney, compelled us, as far as we could with the witness MacGuire, to go into proof upon that subject, and those unauthorized statements compel me to make this counter statement, which is true: that Harvey Burdell had many enemies: that he never was in a house in his life where he had not his quarrels, although as Mary and Hannah expressed it, if you believe them, he would get over it in a short time,—in a few days at all events. Yet he was a man who had his quarrels with every one, even with the servants upon the stand. Further than that, gentlemen, the District-Attorney called upon the defence to show who had a motive for the commission of this murder, and he said, and I will read his exact language: "And if we shall fail in that we shall claim hereafter, when the evidence which I have outlined shall be fitted together to say that that woman, whether she be called Emma Augusta Cunningham, or Emma Augusta Burdell, whether she be the mistress or the wife, whether she have the simulated, or the real marriage, that she—woman though she is—was guilty of the crime." Yet, gentlemen, but a few moments ago, when we proposed, as far as we could, to take up the glove thrown down by the gentlemen, and to meet him upon his own ground, and on his own witnesses, what did he say in your hearing? Why he objected to the testimony, and said that this was a part of the tactics of the defence to put other parties on trial, he having previously told us, that if we did not do it, our client should be hung, and when we attempted to do it, he says that it is a part of the tactics of the defence and entitled to no respectable consideration. He also told you that great preparations had been made for that murder by my client,—that no murder was ever more deliberately planned. Where is the evidence of that? Among the circumstances to which he alluded, he told you that the defendant requested Hannah to go to bed early that night, and here the most innocent act in the world was tortured into evidence as he would say, "one link in the chain of damning guilt." Hannah said that it only occurred upon that night, but Mary Donohue says that it occurred a few days before when the defendant had requested her and Hannah to go to bed. Thus one witness contradicts the other upon an immaterial point of this kind. Another circumstance that the counsel tells you about was that there was upon that door a mysterious lock, one which before had never been made, and that my client had a key which opened that door, and that no other person had access to it. Now upon the maker of it shows that it could be left in such a manner that the slightest push on the door would open it. Mr. Ullmann, a gentleman of high and honorable character, as the District-Attorney properly describes him, and against whom nothing can be said, tells you that the smallest wire, in his judgment, was sufficient to open it after it had become fixed. In this connection let me throw out a suggestion. Why did not the District-Attorney examine the premises of parties who had keys to that house? Why was not scrutiny directed to them? There were other parties who had keys to that house. I do not wish to cast suspicion upon anybody, but there were other parties. He has failed even to call those parties as witnesses upon the stand. It was proved before the Coroner—and, if important, it will be here shown that two or three other persons had keys to that house, whose names I do not think proper to mention at present. Why was no attention directed to anybody else? Was it because the official, (Coroner,) who has become a by-word of reproach, knew not how to conduct the Inquest? The District-Attorney says that my client stole a key from Dr. Burdell, and upon that he seeks to predicate guilt. I say, gentlemen, that no sentiment was ever offered by mortal men more false than that, for that key was found in an open attic among some papers, where it had probably been thrown by Dr. Burdell himself, he having lost it; at all events, there is not one particle of proof, nor any well-founded suspicion tending to show that the prisoner at the bar ever had possession of that key. Again, the key of the safe, which Doctor Burdell had at the time of his death, was obtained on the 28th of June, and was in his possession at the time of his death. In reference to the smell of burning, the District Attorney introduces evidence. In reference to that it is enough to say that Mr. Ullmann, who went into the house at about twelve o'clock, smelt nothing. The burning of woolen or linen would impregnate a house for a considerable period.

The learned counsel then closely scrutinized the testimony of Dr. Parmalee, who had sworn that he had discovered a flickering light about 11 o'clock in one of the top rooms in which it was supposed the linen on the person of the murderer was burned. Now, Mr. Uhl has mentioned to him that only last evening he had seen a similar light burning in Dr. Parmalee's house, and yet he would not think of attributing to Mr. Parmelee the crime of murder. He would not stop to criticize the peculiar manners of Mr. Parmelee, as he wished to say nothing unkind of any man, yet his relations had informed him (Mr. Clinton) that he was to some extent insane. His appearance upon the stand would enable the Jury to draw their own conclusions in that regard. The person who had mentioned this fact to him was his (Parmelee's) own nephew, and, if necessary, he would be produced on the stand. As an instance of the feeble and extremely nervous condition of Parmelee's mind, Mr. Clinton drew the attention of the Jury to the circumstance of his being frightened in the street by meeting late at night two men badly clad, whom he was afraid of on account of their mean attire.

Again, said he, the three servants were hostile to the defendant—one of them being discharged for drunkenness. Those parties were arrested as witnesses, taken into custody by Coroner Connery—the renowned—addressed by him in affectionate terms, and made to swear against their former employer, Mrs. Cunningham.

They must learn, in time that with the exception of these few alternations their relations were amicable. It was said too she said she would have satisfaction. What did she mean? Why, clearly that she had reference to the suits then pending between them. He (Dr. Burdell) had charged her with abstracting a note. He would tell that that note was. It was a note agreeing to pay Mr. Edward Pierpont, for obtaining a divorce for his brother William. Subsequently, some suits between the Doctor and William Burdell had been decided against the Doctor. He then proceeded to sue William, and not wishing to injure him in his own name, assigns a note against William to the defendant. Subsequently he wished to regain the note. At that time she was looked upon by all his friends as the future Mrs. Harvey Burdell. He was under promise of marriage; and he had indicated an inclination not to act in accordance with his promises. She had entered a suit against him and he had been held to answer in the sum of $12,000. Those suits were subsequently settled, although, if she had sought his money, she could have obtained more by prosecuting the suit for breach of promise than by marrying him and causing his death. They were settled by his marrying her. Now could not the Jury understand that parties together, as they were for a year or two, might have trifling difficulties. Was anything further shown in the case before them. The threat, if such it was, that she would have satisfaction, was thus easily explained. The other occasion on which she was said to have used angry words, was because, as had been shown by the prosecution's witnesses—because he (Dr. Burdell) was keeping, as a kept mistress, his own blood-cousin,—could the Jury blame her for not wishing such a woman to come into her family; and for protesting against it strongly. The woman did not come there again, and there Mrs. Burdell had her satisfaction. Then again, there was the alleged saying of Eckel, to the effect that he would like to be present when Dr. Burdell should be strung up. No such remark had ever been made. The fact was, that Burdell threatened to knock out the brains of poor little Snodgrass, because he, Snodgrass, arose one night to let the doctor in; and the conversation was with reference to that. A very good commentary upon the value of threats in such cases, was the above saying of Dr. Burdell. No one would pretend that the Doctor intended to knock out the brains of poor Snodgrass. And yet had Snodgrass been waylaid or garroted, what importance would have attached to that threat of the Doctor. Another point had been made, because Mrs. Burdell said, when told the Doctor had burst a blood-vessel, "I am glad he did not die by violence." Why, the District Attorney had asked, had she spoken of violence? Why, because the servant who first announced the fact, said either that he was lying dead or killed in the room. The latter, under the circumstances, being by far the most probable. Then there was the peculiarity, as it was considered, of her producing her certificate of marriage at so early a date after hearing of the murder. Now, when it was known that the marriage had been kept a secret, was it not natural for the fact to occur to a woman, and for her to speak of it, under the circumstances. With the charge that she refused to testify as a witness, until she could see counsel, he had a word to say. The disgraceful manner in which that inquest had been conducted was notorious. The previous conduct of the Coroner and those acting under his direction, towards her, rendered the necessity of such a precaution apparent to any person. They wished to examine her as a witness, while they held her as a party, and he would not as counsel, in any case, permit a person to be examined as a witness before Coroner Connery, while held as a party in the case. He had stated to the District Attorney, that if he would take her before a magistrate, he would advise her to be examined. His objections to her examination were personal to "that brute, Coroner Connery." He would not allow a decent dog to be examined before him. These were the most permanent and important charges that had been brought against his client, except perhaps, the statement that there was a mark of violence upon her neck, the day after the murder. But that too had been disposed of by the witnesses of the District Attorney. Such was the effect of the evidence for the prosecution. It had established the innocence of his client, and they need not therefore make a defense. Nevertheless, they would enter upon one. But before doing so, he wished to inquire why it was that the District-Attorney had kept from the stand almost every material witness in the case, as heard before the Coroner's investigation. Why had they not called Eckel, the two daughters, and the two little boys—all of whom were examined before the Coroner's Jury. Why had the District-Attorney not called young Snodgrass. He had held him in $2,500 bail, to appear as a witness for the prosecution. But, as the District-Attorney had not, the defence would call the daughters, and the little boys, and they would call Snodgrass, if necessary. The District Attorney had said the person who committed the murder must have been covered with blood. If so, why had not the premises of others than Eckel and Mrs. Cunningham been examined, and those living in the house. Every dress of the children, and of the others in the house had been examined, and the result should have spoken trumpet-tongued for the entire innocence of all the inmates of that house. The District Attorney had said that the person who committed the murder must have fought with the force of a whole army. If so, how could the murderer have been a weak woman, with her hands rendered almost useless by rheumatism? But besides that, all the medical testimony went to show that the person who committed the deed must have had accurate knowledge of anatomy, and also have been a very tall person. It had been shown that many other persons had been him on the fatal day and night. They knew that one person in particular Dr Blaisdell—was to be there. Why were not these persons called to the stand? The counsel for the defence were not public prosecutors, but all the information they had was at the service of the District-Attorney. Let the District Attorney ask Dr. Blaisdell whether he had not then—whether money was not to have been paid to Dr. Burdell on that night, in which he (Blaisdell) had a pecuniary interest, and let him then find that no such money was found upon the Doctor's person, or in his room. As it was, his client had been deprived of all her rights. She had been called once before to mourn the loss of a husband, whom at his death by violence; and now, when she had been called again to mourn a similar loss, every natural feeling had been outraged, and every right denied her. Had she known her rights, and shot down the wretches who proposed to strip her naked that they might gaze upon her naked form, the country would have held her innocent of crime. She was willing to have been examined by women. If they had sent for the matron of the City Prison, she could have examined her, and she would have been willing. But no. These men must examine her, that they might gratify their prurient tastes. And for that purpose they had stripped her naked, and touched every inch of her person from "the roots of her hair to the nails on her toes."

And not only herself, but her innocent daughters, had been subjected to every inconvenience, and to gross usage from Coroner Connery, and those who acted under his special direction in that particular. Then there was another item. It had been said: "How could such a murder have been committed in that house, and none of the inmates know anything about it?" In answer to that they would show that, with carpets on the floor, no screams could be heard; that the floors and the walls were deadened; and that, although parties had experimented for two hours, screaming as loud, and talking as hard, as they could, no sounds could be heard from Burdell's room, even in the room occupied by Mrs. Burdell. They had cried "Murder!" and "Help!" as loud as they could," and were not heard anywhere in the house.

Now, under these circumstances, what became of the case. The District Attorney had stated that twelve men called from the panel to be tried as to their capacity for jurors, testified to their belief that the prisoner had committed the murder, as if he supposed that a sufficient reason why the Jury should form the same opinion. But the aspects of the case had changed since then. Testimony legally before the Court had disposed of prejudices that previously obtained. The case would soon be with the Jury, and he was sure that they would find the acquittal of his client the pleasantest duty they had been called upon to perform.

During parts of Mr. Clinton's speech, in which he referred to her troubles, Mrs. Cunningham was in tears; and the Jury listened with much interest and attention.

TESTIMONY FOR DEFENCE.

Rev. Dr. Beecher of Saratoga Springs, was called as the first witness for the defence, and was examined by Mr. Dean.

Rev. Luther F. Beecher, sworn. He testified that he resided at Saratoga Springs; was a teacher, and of the Baptist denomination; he knew Dr. Harvey Burdell, and became acquainted with him at Saratoga Springs in June, 1856; he knew the prisoner at the bar, and became acquainted with her at Saratoga Springs on the 26th July last; Dr. Harvey Burdell introduced her to him at the dépôt in Saratoga Springs; she boarded at the same house with witness for three weeks; he saw Dr. Burdell at Saratoga two or three times during that time; was not certain where he boarded, but saw him at the house where Mrs. Burdell boarded; on one occasion they rode out together, and witness put them in the carriage; a daughter of Mrs. Burdell is now in witness' school; the nurse in Saratoga where Mrs. Burdell boarded was attached to the institution as a boarding house for the pupils; during the Summer vacation, she is used as a boarding house for visitors of a high grade at the Springs; Mrs. Burdell's daughter went to the school in the last week of September last, and has been there ever since; her name is Georgina; witness was in New-York on Friday, the 30th of January last, and was at the house, No. 31 Bond-street, on that day, at about one o'clock; saw there Mrs Burdell, Miss Van Nest, Dr. Burdell and a boy who admitted him; the interview was in the back parlor; Dr. Burdell came in after witness entered; when the Doctor came in there was no one in the room except Mrs. Burdell and witness, and witness noticed nothing in the Doctor's manner nor in Mrs. Burdell's that was unusual; he made an appointment with Mrs. Burdell to take her daughter to Saratoga with him the next day; Mrs. Burdell was to send Georgina to the Hudson River Railroad dépôt at eleven o'clock the next day, and witness left her with that understanding; he was not certain that Dr Burdell knew of this appointment.

Q.—Do you remember whether Mrs Burdell on that occasion invited you to return to the house and dine that day and to stay all night?

The District Attorney objected to this, as a leading question.

The question was waived.

Q.—In December last, were you paid for the tuition of Georgiana? A.—Not directly, but I received money——

The District-Attorney—I object.

Q.—You were paid indirectly? A.—Yes.

Q.—Who paid you? A.—My brother, Wm. A. Beecher.

Cross examination—Q.—You have called the prisoner Mrs Burdell; did you know her as Mrs. Burdell on the day when you were at the house No. 31 Bond-street? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—As Mrs. Cunningham? A.—Yes.

Q.—You had never, up to that time, known her by any other name? A.—No.

Questions as to Dr. Burdell's knowledge that Georgiana was to be sent to Saratoga, were ruled out.

TESTIMONY OF WM. A. BEECHER.

William A. Beecher sworn.—Witness was a brother of last witness, and had heard his testimony; he had given his brother a check for money for the tuition of Georgiana Burdell, and received that check from Dr. Burdell, upon the Artizan's Bank; the check was for $60, and dated ahead a few days.

Cross examination waived.

TESTIMONY OF DR CARNOCHAN.

Dr. John F. Carnochan, sworn: Witness testified that he was Professor of Surgery in the New-York Medical College. He was asked his age and the length of time he had practiced his profession. The Doctor stated that he practiced for eighteen or nineteen years. The question as to his age was waived, amidst laughter, which was suppressed. He was present at No. 31 Bond-street on the Monday succeeding the murder, and saw the body of Dr. Burdell, but did not examine it manually at all. He had read the medical examination, as signed by Drs. Uhl, Woodward and others, and saw two or three of the wounds measured. He noticed the wound in the neck, and considered it a very dangerous one—very likely to prove fatal. The vital organs which are located in the region where that wound was given, are two large blood vessels of the neck and the nerves of the neck; the large nerves which lead from the brain to the stomach and lungs, and other nerves. Of the wound in the right shoulder, witness was proceeding to speak, when he was interrupted by the District Attorney—If the Court please, we should be happy to hear Dr. Carnochan on any point of which he has medical knowledge; but we must require him to confine himself to what he saw. Unless comparisons of medical testimony were accompanied by simultaneous observations, we object to this evidence.

The Court decided that counsel for defence might put a hypothetical case and take the Doctor's opinion.

Counsel produced the physician's report of the medical examination, and read it section by section. Dr. Carnochan answered the questions put to him as follows:

1. The wound in the left breast below the nipple, between the fourth and fifth rib, he considered dangerous, most probably fatal.

2. Wounds in the heart are almost invariably fatal, but not so immediately fatal as a wound in one other part would be. This part was at the junction of the head with the spinal column. A wound given there kills instantly; but a man may live for a short time after receiving a wound in the heart.

3. A wound directed so as to pierce the right ventricle of the heart would most certainly prove fatal, particularly if the instrument with which it was inflicted were drawn out.

4. The wound in the right shoulder would be likely to prove fatal. One of the large arteries in proximity to the heart passes there, and a blow there would be one of the most dangerous wounds that could be inflicted.

[Witness showed, by a series of anatomical plates, the position of the principal wounds.]

Q.—Do you consider that these wounds, looking at them professionally, were inflicted by some person who had a good knowledge of the anatomy of the human body? A.—(Considering.) The fact that so many wounds were inflicted at such points induces me to believe that there must have been knowledge in regard to those localities.

Q.—Do you, from the evidence in this case, suppose it to be true, consider that those wounds were a accidental in their position, or intentional? A.—From so many wounds having been directed to important points, I should say they were intentional; that is the inference in my own mind.

Q.—You have had considerable practice as a surgeon, in looking at wounds inflicted by violence? A.—A great deal; I am surgeon to the largest hospital in the county, I believe, and besides in private practice I have seen a great deal of surgery.

Q.—Have you ever known a case where so many wounds were inflicted in vital parts? A.—I never have.

Witness further stated that he had been in the room where the murder was committed since his first visit, and was in company with Drs. Uhl and Roberts in examining the blood and marks; He gave it as his opinion that the first blow received by Dr. Burdell, was given in the shoulder, while the Doctor was sitting at his desk near the door, on the right hand side going out, as if that it was inflicted by a person standing behind him. The natural inference is that the person struck jumped up, panic-stricken, and made towards the door, that the assailing party tried to intercept him and prevent him from getting out; and that while standing face to face, or Dr. Burdell a little to one side, the left side of the neck was wounded. The relative position of the parties when the left side of the neck was struck, according to witness' theory, would be, that Dr. Burdell's face was towards the door, or perhaps slightly turned, and that the person who struck the blow had his back to the door.

Q.—Do you think this was a left or right-handed blow? A.—I should judge the right; I judge from the position of the spot of blood on the wall.

[Witness illustrated positions by a diagram of the room.]

Q.—Suppose there had been but one person to inflict these wounds, and that there were evidences upon Burdell's arms and person of a stout resistance on his part, should you judge that a person of less strength than he could have inflicted those wounds without showing marks of the struggle? A.—No, I should say not.

Q.—Suppose that one person were a woman, would the probability of marks being left upon her person be greater than on the person of a man? A.—Females show bruises much more easily than males: that is, they show signs of a bruise more easily.

Q.—Owing to what? A.—The tissues are more delicate.

Q.—Is it not a fact that a lady's arm, even when moderately pressed, will show marks there next day? A.—That is the inference, certainly.

Q.—Are not the marks which so often appear under the eyes of ladies owing to the fact that their tissues are more delicate than that of males?

The Court—The questions are wandering.

Counsel—No, Sir; we are speaking in proof—

The Court—That is far enough, Sir.

Q.—Is it not the fact, then, Sir, that the female tissues, being more delicate, will show marks the next day, in case the marks were made on the neck or on any part of the person committing such an act as this? A.—Yes.

Q.—How long would such marks appear? A.—A week at least.

Q.—Are there any indications that these wounds in the neck was inflicted by a left handed person? A.—None that I have seen or read of.

Q.—Can you, professionally speaking, judge of the probable size and strength of the parties who were engaged in this struggle?

The District-Attorney objected.

The Court allowed this question to be put in this shape: Was the person who inflicted the blow in the neck taller or shorter than Dr. Burdell? A.—The inference is that the first blow received by Dr. Burdell, was as tall at least as Dr. Burdell.

Q.—Have you made any experiments with reference to this trial, to see the amount of force necessary to inflict certain wounds? A.—I have.

Q.—Would there be resistance to a blow where there was woolen clothing to be cut through? A.—There would, very considerable resistance.

The Doctor detailed his experiments. They consisted in placing a cadaver naked in a sitting position on the floor, then striking it with a small dagger (produced in Court) in the neck, while naked, and in this posture—the force required to pierce the body being very small—then throwing a dissecting coat over the body and repeating the process with considerably increased force, when the dagger recoiled, from the resistance of the woolen substance. The experiments were conducted under the Doctor's supervision by two of his assistants.

Sundry questions to the same import were asked concerning the wound in the arm of Dr. Burdell, and answered similarly.

A question having arisen between opposing Counsel, as to the admissibility of evidence concerning witness' knowledge of the odors evolved from burning clothing, the Court ruled it in order—remarking that similar testimony was admitted on the trial of Dr. Webster, in Massachusetts, by Chief Justice Shaw.

The Attorney General—This very trial may be cited as authority.

Q.—Dr. Carnochan, have you ever made any experiments in burning clothing in a house, and if so, state the time when they were made and the effect? A.—I have; the effect of the burning of articles of woolen clothing in emitting an odor which would permeate the apartments of a house, would depend upon the quantity of the material burnt; a large amount would produce a very perceptible odor, as in the case of bed clothes, blankets, &c. taking fire; such an amount of burning woolen would produce an odor which would permeate the contiguous rooms and remain for some time; it might necessitate the cleaning out of rooms, and ventilating them for several days; I was called to see the case of a person burned by the bed clothes getting fire, and my clothes were so saturated with the odor that I had to undress when I went home; the bed clothes were considerably burnt in that case.

Q.—Suppose the burning clothes were saturated with blood, would that add to or detract from the odor? A.—I do not know that it would have much influence.

Cross examination—The question has been asked how, as one of the wounds spoken of, so many were fatal. Will you state what spot there is in the human body, between the hips and the top of the head, where a wound eight inches long and one and a quarter deep, could be inflicted and not be dangerous, whether inflicted before or behind? A.—Some wounds are more dangerous than others.

Q.—Yes; but where could such a wound be inflicted and not be dangerous or fatal? A.—Many persons are wounded in the abdomen and chest and recover.

Q.—Tell me a point where such a wound would not be fatal? A.—On the right side of the chest; a pistol bullet may pass through the chest and the man live.

Witness was further cross examined as to the position of the parties when the wound in the neck was given, but did not vary his former statement. The diagram of the room was used in illustration.

EVIDENCE OF DR. ROBERTS.

Dr. W. B. Roberts was the next witness called by the defence. He said that he was a dentist, residing at No. 56 Bond-street, and had known Dr. Burdell three years; had been acquainted with Mrs. Cunningham since August, 1855, when he was introduced to her by Dr. Burdell at Congress Hall, Saratoga Springs. He had since that time had intimate business relations with Dr. Burdell up to the day before he death; was frequently at his house; and was there on the Sunday prior to his death. Dr. Burdell on that occasion showed a daguerreotype which he very recently had taken; Mrs. Cunningham and her daughters were present; Dr. Burdell showed it to them and asked if it looked like him. NEWS OF THE DAY.

The testimony for the prosecution in the case of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, charged with the murder of Dr. BURDELL, was concluded yesterday, and considerable evidence was taken for the defence. Probably the most important of what was received from the witnesses for the prosecution, was that elicited on the cross-examination of Dr. UHL. The doctor's impression appears to be that the wounds were inflicted by a tall person, having a considerable amount of anatomical knowledge. The situations in which blood was found—in the doctor's room, on the stairway wall; on the hall floor; on the hall basement floor; on the hinge side of the basement front door, and again on the door of the main entrance, appeared to indicate that the person who committed the dead had passed out of the room, down the stairs to the main floor; then turned and passed down into the basement hall, tried to find the knob of the front basement door, and failing, had returned and passed out of the main door into the street. Dr. CARNOCHAN, called for the defence, agreed with Dr. UHL in all that pertained to the manner in which the deed was done. His theory was the same. The defence will proceed again this morning.

The Europa's mails reached this City from Boston yesterday afternoon. A semi-official Madrid print denies that the differences between Spain and Mexico are in a fair way of adjustment. The London Globe, a Ministerial paper, supplies some interesting information about the convention between Great Britain and France, relative to the Newfoundland Fisheries. According to this authority, the treaty was framed by the agent of the French Government and the British Colonial Office, and was concluded, subject to the approval of the Colonial Legislature. But as the Colonists have withheld their approval, the treaty is now at an end, and any injury which the Colonists feared from its operation must necessarily disappear. NEAL DOW has received a cordial welcome from the leaders of the Temperance Party in England, where he is about to commence a formidable campaign. A report of a crim. con. case in which Mr. W. F. BARING, of the famous house of BARING BROTHERS, appears as plaintiff and a Captain GORDON as defendant, is published in the London journals. The Jury awarded $15,000 to the injured husband.

The buildings lately purchased by the Quarantine Commissioners at Seguine's Point have been destroyed by fire, the work of incendiaries. On Wednesday night, at twelve o'clock, the servants occupying the large residence were awakened by men breaking into the house, and smashing things generally. In a few moments they found the premises on fire, and were compelled to escape by jumping from the second-story windows. A fine residence, insured for $12,000, and containing $5,000 worth of furniture and carriages, a farm-house, carriage-house, barns, sheds, and out-buildings, were all consumed; two cows were also burned. Some twenty or thirty persons, who spoke not a word during the whole transaction, were concerned in the act of incendiarism. This is one of the most shameless outrages ever perpetrated, and sufficiently stamps the character of the interested opposition which has been made to the location of Quarantine at this point. The people of that neighborhood are entitled to the distinction of having adopted incendiarism as a legitimate method of carrying a point. We trust that the guilty parties will be made at all hazards to suffer the extreme penalty of the law for their conduct. Indeed if they are suffered to escape, the buildings at the present Quarantine will probably be burned down next, and it will not be easy to say what public building of any sort, which is obnoxious to anybody in its neighborhood, will be suffered to stand.

The Police Commissioners yesterday received a letter from Ex-Judge WHITING, courteously declining the proffered office of Superintendent of the Police force. He at first thought of accepting it, but for private, family reasons he has determined to decline the appointment. The Commissioners now look anxiously for a suitable candidate. Messrs. DRAPER and BOWNE were appointed a Committee to provide a room for the Board to meet in. During the day they were flooded with applications for office. To-morrow they again convene.

The President of the Commissioners of Emigration, G. C. VERPLANCK, Esq., accompanied by the Chairman of the Castle Garden Committee, and Commissioner GARRIGUE, paid a visit to Staten Island on Thursday, officially, to receive Dr. BISSELL, the newly-appointed Resident Physician. Mr. VERPLANCK, in addressing the retiring officer, (Dr. HARRIS,) bore testimony to the zeal and fidelity with which Dr. HARRIS had discharged his duties during the two years of his official connection with the Board.

The Board of Supervisors met pro forma, so did the Board of Aldermen, but neither party did anything. Mr. VALENTINE, the clerk, stated that the authorities were not yet in possession of any certified copies of the several acts passed by the Legislature, organizing the several heads of departments. They might arrive in a day or two. Under such circumstances, both Boards adjourned.

The Chamber of Commerce held its monthly meeting yesterday. P. PERIT, Esq., was elected President for another year. The subject of the Usury laws was handed over to the citizens. The old Marine Surveyors complained, by letter, of the new Port Wardens' bill. A Committee was appointed, with permission to pay their own expenses, to take legal advice as to constitutionality of the law.

At a meeting of the Central Park Commissioners yesterday it was announced that no copy of the new law had yet been received from Albany. Messrs. HOGG, BUTTERWORTH and FIELDS were appointed a Committee to take charge of the grounds of the Park and all buildings thereon.

The slaver Merchant's case was adjourned over from yesterday till to-day. This is the third adjournment without a hearing.

The Parish Will case was resumed yesterday, before the Surrogate. The examination will be continued daily till completed. In two weeks, the Surrogate thinks, the examination of witnesses will be concluded. Then comes the summing up by counsel, and then—

The seven trunks found on board the alleged slaver Ellen have been searched at the Marshal's office, but nothing discovered to prove that the vessel was intending to go on a slave expedition. In the supercargo's trunk was found $1,200 in gold. The money and trunks are still retained in the custody of the Marshal.

WM. BURKE, the second mate of the Cultivator, charged with cruelly beating several of the crew of the vessel, after an examination yesterday, before U.S. Commissioner STILWELL, was discharged. An examination in the case of GORDON, the first mate, arrested for the same charge, is set down for to-day. The captain of the vessel was discharged a week ago.

The fire Insurance Companies of this City have determined to make a reduction of 5 per cent. from the premiums heretofore charged on such stores and warehouses (including contents) as have parapets or fire-walls erected at not less than five feet above the roof, so as to protect more effectually the roofs and skylights in case of the burning of adjacent buildings. In consequence of this reduction in the premiums, nearly all new buildings are having their walls run up to the additional height proposed, and alterations are making upon a large number of old buildings. In the walls are left holes to let through the hose of engine companies so as to play water easily upon buildings adjacent in case of fire.

JOHN MORRISSEY and JOHN PATTERSON alias PETRIE, have been hailed to answer for their felonious assault upon CONWAY, the bar-tender of the Girard House; MORRISSEY in the sum of $5,000, and PATTERSON in $500. The bondsman for both is JAMES MULLIGAN, of No. 125 Grand-street. MORRISSEY was permitted by Justice CONNOLLY to accompany an officer in search of bail—not an unusual proceeding by the way.

The only case disposed of in the Court of Sessions yesterday was that of one indicted for stealing 21 bags of wheat from the lighter Ceres, at Pier No. 12 East River. The prisoner was found guilty, and remanded to Saturday for sentence.

On Tuesday morning a large barn, belonging to Colonel J. P. CRUGER, at Cruger's, was burned, with several cattle, a quantity of hay, &c. Two men in rescuing cattle were severely burned, one of them it is feared fatally.

The Newburg mystery remains still unexplained, the efforts of the citizens having thus far failed to identify the girl's body.

The Geographical Society met last night. Rev. Dr. ADAMSON read a paper on recent geographical discoveries in Africa, Europe and America.

At the regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company on Tuesday evening last, the subject of running the cars on Sunday was again brought up, when it appeared that several opposed to the movement when the former vote was taken, had changed their views, and after consultation the whole matter was referred to a Committee to report at a meeting to be held on Tuesday evening next.

Kansas Politics.

In the TIMES of May 1 it was stated in a letter from our Washington correspondent that the Free-State men in Kansas, under the leadership of Gov. ROBINSON, had declared their willingness to waive their objections to the validity of the Territorial Legislature and its enactments, and to take part in the approaching election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention. This statement, which naturally excited general attention, was vehemently denied in some quarters and doubted in many others. In the TIMES of the 5th, however, evidence of its truth was afforded in a letter from our Kansas correspondent, who added a brief statement of the terms upon which the Free-State men had proposed thus to take part in the coming election. And to-day, in a letter from the same Correspondent, we have the text of the document in which the leading Representatives of the Free-State Party, with Gov. ROBINSON at their head, assure Gov. STANTON of their willingness to "overlook the past,"—to waive their objections to the character of the Legislature and their attachment to the Topeka Constitution, and to "go into the election of delegates to a Constitutional Convention," provided the laws for conducting it can be so modified as to guard them against fraud. We take it that this evidence will convince even our neighbors of the Tribune, that our original statement on this subject was not made without due warrant and authority.

The Free-State proposition is eminently just and fair. The law authorizing the election upon its face is not obnoxious to censure, except in restricting the suffrage to those inhabitants who were in the Territory previous to the 1st of April. But the officers to whom the execution of the law is intrusted,—those who have the enrollment of the voters, the revisal and correction of the lists, the reception, canvass and return of the votes,—are, in the main, and with some exceptions, men in whose justice and honesty no portion of the people of Kansas can have any confidence whatever. A large portion of them certainly are notoriously, not only the most violent and unscrupulous men of the ultra Pro-Slavery faction, but the open and active enemies and persecutors of the Free-State settlers. They are the appointees of the usurping Legislature, and have shown themselves throughout all the turmoils of the Territory, to be personally without character and politically the reckless and unprincipled tools of the extreme Southern Party. It is perfectly natural that the Free State men should be unwilling to intrust their rights and their interests in the hands of such a class of officers, and that they should ask guarantees and securities against an abuse of power on their part. And the guarantees which they have asked are in themselves perfectly just and right. They ask no undue advantage,—no position which could possibly give them any such advantage,—but merely an equality of right with their opponents.

And yet we are not greatly surprised to learn as we do by telegraph that Mr. STANTON has not accepted these propositions and made them the basis of the election. But we cannot concur with the Tribune in the very sweeping assertion that > "This proposition Secretary STANTON has declined—of course because the Pro-Slavery Party, who have entire control of the bogus census and registration, and who mean to hold the election and count the votes without check or scrutiny, will not consent to abate one scruple of their "pound of flesh." They have, at great expense of effort and wear of conscience, got their machinery all oiled for making Kansas a Slave State, and they will not forego their advantage. A fair election will prove their ruin, so they will none of it. And the Federal Administration, which, for the honor of human nature, we must believe, would gladly feel at liberty to take the side of justice in the premises, is constrained by its obligations to the Slave Power to back its minions in Kansas in refusing the Free State men that fair election so often promised them, and which is all they ask."

These assumptions dispense with a great deal of argument and considerable fact. They offer a very short and easy mode of deciding all questions of policy and of law which arise in connection with the affairs of Kansas. But they do not strike us as either evident or conclusive. As Gov. STANTON's reply to the Free-State proposition has not reached us, we cannot state the grounds upon which its refusal is based, nor the motives by which it was prompted. It is quite possible that his acknowledged desire that Kansas should come into the Union as a Slave State may incline him not to interfere with the machinery which has been cunningly devised for the purpose of accomplishing that result. But we confess we do not see what power Mr. STANTON has to modify, abrogate or dispense with any portion of the Territorial laws touching this election. He is in Kansas simply as an Executive officer. His duty is to enforce law, not to make it. And as the Federal Government has recognized the validity of the Territorial enactments, we do not see how it is possible for the Governor to do otherwise than see to their execution. The letter of Gov. ROBINSON and his associates, speaking of this point, says:

> "That you have the power to secure a fair election, we have no doubt. It is not material that the letter of the law calling the election should be strictly followed; indeed, no law at all is requisite, so that the will of a majority of the people can be ascertained."

This may be so; but inasmuch as the law calling the election, whether it be "requisite" or not, has been enacted, and recognized, we do not see how the Executive of the Territory can ignore its existence or disregard its requirements. If this can be done, we hope it will be; and the dispatch which announces Mr. STANTON's reply affords ground to hope that, in some respects at all events, he feels authorized to modify the regulations for holding the election. He is represented as saying that he "can do nothing which denies the authority or validity of the Territorial laws,"—but that "respecting the judges of election, he hopes there will be appointed one Republican, one Democrat in favor of a Free State, and one Democrat in favor of a Slave State." This would give the Free-State men a majority of the judges in each election district, and is thus more than they have asked. But it would be worth but little, practically, unless they can also have a voice in preparing or revising the lists of voters. How this matter stands, we shall know better when we receive the text of Mr. STANTON's reply.

The Tribune closes its article upon this subject thus:

> "Let the Free State men simply stand on the impregnable ground they now occupy, and give no shadow of countenance to any such fraudulent sham election as the Border Ruffians are concocting. The civilized world will applaud their conduct, and a grateful posterity hallow their memories. And, should they be called to suffer anew for their principles, they will not be left to suffer alone. If the cause of Human Liberty needs more martyrs on the soil of Kansas, all the Free States will eagerly contribute them."

As melo-drama this is decidedly good,—but we do not understand its practical bearing. What does the Tribune mean by talking of Free-State martyrs, hallowed memories and a grateful posterity, in such a connection? It does not advise War, nor do we see on what grounds it can apprehend it. The issue is simply whether the Free-State men shall go to the polls, or stay away. It advises them to stay away;—but such a course certainly can hardly involve bloodshed and civil war. They will not fight the Pro-Slavery men because they see fit to vote,—nor will the Pro-Slavery men fight them because they prefer not to vote. So far then as this election is concerned, it strikes us that these vague menaces of renewed commotion and civil war are not only meaningless but mischievous. The Free-State men in Kansas, we are persuaded, neither wish nor anticipate any such renewal of past contentions. They will do all in their power to secure their rights,—but it will be done by peaceful and political action rather than by armed resistance to Territorial authority. They are engaged in the pursuits of industry,—in establishing homes, building up towns, erecting stores, mills and dwellings, clearing the soil and preparing it for culture, projecting railroads and laying the foundations of their future State in the solid interests and concerns of practical life. Nor do we detect, either in their conduct or in their language, any indication of a disposition to abandon these pursuits and plunge again into civil strife. They will go to the ballot-box,—if not now, bye and bye; sooner or later they must and will take part in the Elections of the Territory;—and no one who properly appreciates the influences that decide the political character and destiny of large communities, can doubt that this agency, whenever they see fit to use it, will make Kansas a Free State.

Parties and Politics.

WAS BURKE, after all, in the right, and GOLDSMITH in the wrong, when the poet so cleverly lashed the politician for "giving up to party what was meant for mankind?"

If there be any faith in our practice, we Americans of the Nineteenth Century must swear by the Statesman and pooh-pooh the Satirist. For the rule of our public life is, that nothing was meant for mankind which can by possibility be given up to party. In parties we live, and move, and have our being—in them, and by them, for the matter of that. We make, at once, a trade of parties and a deity—we traffic in and adore them. Through the week they kindle all our rapacious and pugnacious passions, as if they were great joint-stock enterprises—say Potosi Lead Mines or Parker Vein Companies—and on the Sabbath they inspire our preachers, and clothe themselves with all the attributes of reverence.

Poor blundering GOLDY would doubtless have said that Government was meant for mankind. We give it up to party. Superannuated citizens profess to believe that the metropolitan systems of police—the arrangements which wit is to devise and fidelity to execute, for protecting six hundred thousand people from the dust that blows by day and the burglar that creeps by night—from the rascality which is always with us, and the pestilence which visits us by fits—superannuated citizens, we say, profess to believe that all this expensive machinery of our municipal life was meant for the good of mankind in general, and particularly of the aforesaid six hundred thousand dwellers on this Island. We who know better have given it all up to party!

Patriotic thinkers imagine that Journalism—that the power which watches, and records, and criticizes, and directs the daily life and daily thoughts of great and free communities, was meant for the good and the instruction of mankind. We have given it up to party. So utter has been our abandonment of ourselves, and of all that we are, and of the forces that we control, to the service of this mysterious, insatiable Moloch, that to profess independence of party—to doubt the divinity and abjure the allegiance of this shadowy tyrant, is to invite the scorn or the pity of every third man one meets.

It matters nothing that all the parties which for so many years bullied and despotized the Union, have gone or are going to pieces. We are like savages, who worship convenient gods of potter's clay. When one idol has been hopelessly smashed we can always buy, or beg, or steal another around the corner. We do not dream of emancipating ourselves and living a new life. We are as fond of our partisan obliquities, as tender of all the bigotries and injustices, and idiocies into which we are continually betrayed by party, as JOHN WILKES' lady admirer was of that portentous cast in her hero's left eye. No question is so grave, so earnest, so practical that we will not study it thus askance, rather than look boldly into it.

Take the case of Kansas in the past and in the present. Here were a hundred statements, yea a thousand, published to the world, announcing the degradation of the American idea and the oppression of American citizens in a Territory of the Union. All sorts of witnesses concurred in testifying to the atrocities, the indecencies, the deviltries perpetrated upon American freemen and their families, in order that a half-drunken horde of borderers might establish Slavery with all its stupidity, sinfulness and ruin within the borders of a great American State. Was this a party question?

Should we not have expected to see Americans of all parties, as of all sects, unanimous in demanding the truth on this question, and in denouncing the villainies to which their brethren were subjected?

But no!—the wrongs of Kansas must help or hinder the march of parties; and so, while one "party" set them up in letters of blood on its banners, the other derided them, despised them and disbelieved in them!

So now again, when the freemen of Kansas are trying to adjust their difficulties, and to conquer by Peace what they could not win by War, party organs peal out again for new and fiercer struggles, in such a fashion that one would suppose the end and aim of the existence of Kansas was to furnish themes for flaming leaders, and material for enormous enterprises to the chiefs of some great party foreign to the Territory!

We have said that this passion for parties was a national passion. This is not quite correct. It is the passion of the politicians who have so far controlled the policy of the nation. As for the people themselves, we believe they are heartily sick of the stupid idolatry. We believe they are rapidly coming to a conviction that the practical end of politics is a practical policy, and that statesmanship is the skill that governs a State. We believe they do not care an iota what set of men do a good and needed thing, provided the thing be done, and well done. And we look for such a revolution in our political life as shall somewhat astonish the "parties," and leave their dogged devotees where the recent English elections left the stubborn "party of the Manchester Man." Very instructive is that spectacle of a knot of clever, honest and distinguished public men quietly sent home to their private cotton-spinning and corn-growing, simply because they would persist in believing that the country was for their "party" more than for the great objects in which parties take their rise. It is but natural of course that the men who make a party, build it up, fortify it, erect platforms for it, put it before the world and generally pet it, should cling to it as children cling to the dolls they have dressed. But it is at least just as natural that the nations should not find time or inclination to share this fond infatuation; and welcome indeed will the day be when mankind in America shall insist on enjoying its own again, and bring parties and party-mongers to a "realizing sense" of the true end and only excuse of their existence.

Judge Russell's Charge to the Grand Jury.

The terrible increase of crime in our City has been the subject of universal remark during the past twelve months. Looking over our files for the past year, we find under the City head an array of highway robberies, murderous assaults with knife and pistol, bludgeon-beating, counterfeiting cases, forgeries, patent swindle operations, policy gamblings, cases of arson, rape, burglary, grand larceny, with violence and wilful murder—a horrid catalogue, unequalled by the reports of any preceding year, and only to be accounted for under a system where the police force is perverted from its proper calling and made the political machine that it notoriously has been and still is.

Such being the facts of crime, as within the knowledge of every paper-reading citizen and the experience of too many, it would follow that whoever strove to defend the conduct of our City guardians should commence by showing that, as crime had increased, there had been a proportionate, or even larger, increase of convictions, and that the number of persons consigned to punishment kept pace with the aggravated nature of offences, and the increase of our population, as well native-born as foreign. This would be the course of a logician—of any reasoning man—suddenly called upon to defend the police; and, if he found on examination that the statistics were against him, he would either avoid the subject altogether, or deal only in those high-flown generalities of which the Mayor's last message to the Common Council may be cited as a striking illustration.

But Judge RUSSELL, with the instinct of a bolder genius, despises the necessity of a syllogism, and uses the sword of sophistry to cut a Gordian knot that common sense had failed to disentangle. In his plea to the Grand Jury for the existing police, as administered by Mayor WOOD, he lays violent hands on the very statistics that prove the inefficiency of the police force, and, by mere audacity of assertion, endeavors to twist the faithful figures into an argument upon the other side.

In the year 1855, the number of persons sent to our various places of incarceration from the Courts of Oyer and Terminer, and General and Special Sessions, amounted to one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three. In the year 1856, with a larger population, and crime so rampant that violence appeared an epidemic, the number of persons so incarcerated amounts to but one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three—a falling off of exactly fifty from the convictions of the preceding less crim-

[illegible] a falling off of 14 per cent. during the last year on the whole number of convictions obtained for offences of every sort within our City. This calculation is one of figures, and therefore within the reach of all. It takes no notice of the increase of crime to which we have before alluded; but, were it to do so, who can doubt that the deficit of 14 per cent. would be increased to one of 25?

But the facts, even in their most mitigated form, point to an inevitable conclusion, and that conclusion the exact reverse of the one Judge RUSSELL pretends to have arrived at. Unless the learned dispenser of "prompt and practical justice" is prepared to show that the morality of New-York has improved at least 14 per cent. within the preceding year, the deduction is unavoidable, that the efficiency of our never very efficient police must have deteriorated just that amount within the corresponding period. We cannot so "readily perceive," as he desires us, "that crime is on the decrease," from a state of facts which only tends to show that crime enjoys a wider latitude and impunity; nor can we agree with him that statements which argue a very suspicious inefficiency to every thinking mind, are proofs demonstrative "that the police force is not as inefficient as they have been represented, but are as a class, men of intelligence and good conduct, and faithful, prompt and energetic in the discharge of their public duty."

Let Judge RUSSELL's reasoning be pushed to its legitimate conclusion, and the police, by making no arrests at all, can prove a state of efficiency, intelligence, good conduct and energy never before paralleled in any city of the world! Let them devote themselves entirely—as they already do for the most part—to politics and electioneering in favor of their great protector; let the Courts shut up shop, and the various places of incarceration be leased out to New-England firms for manufacturing purposes; let the District-Attorney cease to indict and the Grand Jury to find true bills, and then—according to Judge RUSSELL's theory—the millennium of universal virtue will have been established on the island of Manhattan! Convictions have decreased, he says, and, therefore, commissions must have been less frequent. Fewer doctors have been consulted, and, therefore, there is less sickness in the vicinity. But has the learned Judge never read in his discursive researches, of epidemics so awful and so prevalent that not a Doctor in the neighborhood but was more or less a sufferer himself, and, therefore, unable to give that attention to others which his own case just as imperatively demanded?

We most respectfully submit, with all due deference, that, as things are now, neither the number of convictions, nor yet the number of arrests, should be taken as the standard for the measurement of City crime. We know ourselves one most extraordinary case in Chatham-street—and doubtless the learned Judge will remember it—where two brothers were arrested on what appeared to be the most conclusive evidence; and yet in this case no conviction was had, the parties being discharged on a summary process, at which the whole City stood aghast.

We most respectfully submit, that the amount of crime is not to be judged by the paucity of convictions; but rather that the paucity of convictions should be judged by the amount of known and unpunished crime. This seems to us in every way the sounder theory; and we submit it, for what it may be worth, to the attention of all those who read the other-colored charge to the Grand Jury, delivered not many weeks ago by Recorder SMITH—a charge of a very different hue, and one to which we called attention at the time, in two articles, that could hardly have escaped the learned Judge's observation.

The Burdell Murder Trial.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In common with the whole community I have followed with eager and anxious expectation the efforts which have been made to develope the mystery of the BURDELL murder. I have shared the general conviction that the parties in this house must, in the nature of the case, have known something about that awful deed.

At the Coroner's inquest which I attended nearly every day, the evidence of Dr. BLAISDELL made upon my mind an indelible impression. It tended far more than any thing else offered as testimony, to fasten my suspicions upon Mrs. CUNNINGHAM. Dr. BLAISDELL knew BURDELL intimately. He had closer, and according to his own statements more confidential relations with him, than any other person who was examined as a witness. It was to him that BURDELL made those repeated declarations of his hatred and fear of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM,—of the troubles she gave him and of the apprehensions which haunted him that she would do him some violence. He told him that while in that house he was absolutely afraid of his life,—and on the very day of his death begged him to come and live with him for the purpose of protection. Dr. BLAISDELL is almost the only person who saw much of BURDELL on that last day of his life. He saw him in the morning; called again to see him in the afternoon, and had an appointment to meet him at his room at 9 o'clock that night. His business with him was of so private and delicate a character that Dr. BLAISDELL was excused from revealing it before the Coroner. And it was to Dr. BLAISDELL, and to him alone, that BURDELL stated that he had made a will—a fact which, taken in connection with the non-appearance of any such instrument, went far to fasten suspicion on the woman who stands indicted for the murder.

With these impressions, thus received, I looked forward to the trial as certain to clear up the mystery. And when I read Mr. District-Attorney HALL's opening speech, much as I disliked the unwarrantable, repulsive, and utterly savage tone in which he speaks of a woman whose position should have shielded her from abuse as unprofessional as it was needless and ungentlemanly, I certainly expected that he would leave nothing undone which could tend to clear up the question of her guilt.

But I see from this evening's papers that the prosecution has closed; and yet Dr. Blaisdell has not been called to the witness' stand at all. What does this mean? Is the public to be amused with a sham trial? Is Mr. HALL merely going through the forms of law, and purposely excluding all the really pertinent and important testimony which has a bearing upon the case?

Not a word has been said of the sham marriage which figured so largely at the inquest. Only one of the inmates of the house,—neither SNODGRASS, ECKEL, nor either of the daughters—has been examined. All this, perhaps, belongs to the defence. But the public will not be content with the result of this trial, if it is allowed to close without the examination of so important a witness as Dr. BLAISDELL. Yours, JUSTICE.

We publish the above although it conflicts somewhat with our purpose not to enter upon any discussion of the case while the trial is pending. The question which it asks is certainly one which the public will echo. But it is quite fair to presume that the District-Attorney is the best judge of his duty, and that he best knows whether the evidence of any particular witness is likely to aid, or to injure, his cause.

There are two or three points in connection with this affair which deserve attention.

1. It is not known to the public where Dr. BURDELL was from 5 o'clock that afternoon until he returned to his room at night.

2. It is reasonably certain that he was not alone; that he was in company with other persons somewhere, engaged in conversation, play or other occupation of some kind; and that the parties who were with him intentionally conceal the knowledge of that fact, and of his whereabouts, from the public and from the officers of justice.

3. And it is clear that their motive for so doing must be a guilty motive; that they must have some strong reason, in involving their own characters or safety, for hiding from the public a fact of such general interest and one so profoundly important to the ends of justice.

Of course these suggestions can be of no service in tracing the crime, but they are not without significance in connection with the pending trial.

CUSTOM-HOUSE CORRUPTION.—The soul and liver of corporate, immaculate Philadelphia may rest in peace. The authorities at Washington have heeded their complaints in relation to the dire and foul malefactions which are hourly perpetrated by New-York Custom-House officials, and have devised a remedy. In the centre of the large rotunda, bounded by Pine, Nassau and Wall streets, a smuggler pound has been erected, into which no one, with evil intent upon his conscience, can fail to tumble. It occupies the greater part of the space hitherto vacant in the large hall, and has been constructed of an oval shape, in order that an oyster stand may be erected at one end, and a bar at the other for the convenience of prisoners. Two employes of the Government are to be immediately detached from the Treasury Department to "tend," and we rejoice to learn that "Prince's Bays" and "Sounds" are to be excluded, and that bivalves from Virginia are to be exclusively dealt out to customers. This will be gratifying to the South, in view of the present gloomy condition of Southern commerce.

Various surmises were started in relation to the probable use of the pound in question, before its true intent was made known. We are enabled to contradict these reports upon the highest and most undoubted authority. It was not put up, as has been maliciously said, by the entry clerks themselves, as a barricade to exclude Mr. SCHELL from future entrance into the Collector's room, nor to prevent Mr. REDFIELD from "going out" on the 1st of July. Neither was the alarm felt at a rumor, which was in current circulation yesterday morning among merchants' clerks—that they were to be driven into the pen at 10 o'clock each day, and not released excepting on bail, or until the goods they came to pass were examined—any better founded. The real object of the architect was to facilitate the instant imprisonment of individuals attempting to evade the revenue laws, and we congratulate the Philadelphia public upon his complete success. It might be considered most fortunate that those who once get in can with the greatest difficulty escape, were it not that both the Collector himself and his Secretary were missing yesterday from their usual places of business, and it is feared lest they may have themselves been lost in some of the labyrinths of the newly-constructed prison.

TIME'S CHANGES.—The whirligig of Time brings about strange revenges, and before laying friend and foe together on the same dead level, it causes, now and then, most unlooked-for reconciliations. Seventeen years ago New-York was thrown into a commotion which has hardly subsided even now, by the famous "pipe-laying" disclosures. Two of the gentlemen most deeply implicated in the charges made against the leaders of the then great and powerful Whig Party, were Mr. SIMEON DRAPER and Mr. JAMES BOWEN. The two most active men of the opposite party who were engaged in detecting and bringing the supposed culprits to punishment, were a police officer named MATSELL, and a sharp criminal lawyer named WHITING. These two gentlemen greatly distinguished themselves by their activity in the pipe-laying prosecutions; one by arresting the suspected parties, and the other in prosecuting them. It is only seventeen years ago, and now, Messrs. DRAPER and BOWEN, as Police Commissioners, offer the post of Superintendent of the Police of the City to Mr. MATSELL, and, on his declining it, they offer it next to Mr. WHITING, who declines it at their hands. If there are any honorary appointments in the department to be filled up, perhaps the Commissioners will offer a place to Mr. GLENTWORTH, who was in some way connected with the old business, as a compensation to him for the loss of the Havre consulate which he was to have had.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—A farce in two acts called "One Coat for Two Suits," was produced here on Wednesday evening, and repeated last evening with success. It is from the pen of Mr. C. M. WALCOT, a gentleman who shines to greater advantage as an actor than as an author. The plot of the piece is extravagant, and the treatment "talky" and inflated. Mr WALCOT has, however, introduced some extremely absurd situations, and their effect is irresistible on the audience. The plot is as follows: Mr. Galliard Gaffles, a seedy swell, receives an invitation to a ball at Staten Island, which he accepts in spite of iron fortune and a deficient wardrobe. At this ball he hopes to effect the conquest of an heiress with twenty thousand dollars in her own right. He is, consequently, particularly anxious on the subject. The daughter of his landlady, a washerwoman by profession, prepares his only shirt, and a friend loans him a dress-coat. The feelings of the female referred to have been worked on by the gallant Galliard, and she believes that she will soon exchange the washing tub for a happier condition of life. Galliard professes eternal love and leaves her to pack up his carpet-bag. Whilst engaged in this task she discovers the invitation to the Staten Island ball, and suspects that Galliard is faithless, and means to deceive her. To revenge herself and frustrate his designs, she purposely omits to place the dress coat in the bag. The amusing part of the piece now begins. Gaffles arrives at Staten Island and discovers too late the absence of the essential garment, and for the remainder of the piece exercises all his ingenuity in getting one. He succeeds in purloining one from a friend's room, and then the friend's agony commences. The incidents are extremely extravagant, but laughable. The piece has no literary merit. Its tone is broad and somewhat vulgar, and the puns with which it is liberally interspersed are beneath the standard of the lowest comic periodical; they are not bad enough to be good even on the stage.

The three principal characters were excellently played by Miss MARY GANNON, Mr. WALCOT and Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND.

A THEATRICAL NOVELTY.

A remarkable application of science to the domestic purposes of life will be made in a few days at one of our most popular theatres. It is intended to light up the innumerable burners before and behind the scenes entirely by electricity. Instead of a clumsy gasman staggering beneath the weight of a long pole and a taper, two wires will be touched, and instantly every light in the house will be illuminated. The effect is in the highest degree startling and beautiful, and the process by which it is produced will doubtless come into general use. The lighting of public buildings as at present conducted is a slow and troublesome job. After the introduction of electricity it will be effected with the rapidity of thought.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Attitude of the British Government Towards New-Granada, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, May 6, 1857.

I learn that the British Government has used some influence for the formation of a better understanding between New Granada and the United States, and has given the Granadian Government to understand that it has, in the opinion of the British Government, acted very badly, and ought to make reparation to the United States. There is no doubt of the fact, but it is to be questioned whether it will have any influence upon the Government of Granada.

The United States Government will not reopen the question of its right to reparation, on account of the Panama riot. The attempt of the Granadians to show that the riot was provoked and caused by JACK OLIVER's attack on a native is disproved by facts. The attack on our citizens occurred some hours afterwards, and the Government and people of Panama took part in it. While fifty or sixty of our citizens were killed or wounded, only one or two of the natives were hurt—a fact which of itself shows on which side was the aggression.

But a new difficulty has arisen. The Granadian Government has determined to enforce those laws imposing tonnage duties on American vessels, and a tax upon American mail transportation. This design they had at one time relinquished.

The extent of the orders for the protection of the Transit is now known. The Transit is to be kept open, by landing a suitable force wherever necessary. Thus we take into our own hands the future security of American citizens and property on the Isthmus but still the Government is desirous of avoiding any act of war. The Panama Company would, no doubt desire the United States Government to take possession of the Isthmus, or purchase a cession of it, for the benefit of private speculation, but the Government has no idea of attempting to do anything of the kind.

There is a probability that a change of the Government of New Granada will change the temper of their people towards the United States. X. Y. Z.

THE FATE OF A MISSING MAN DETERMINED.—The friends of WILLIAM A. WHITE, late of Watertown—whose mysterious disappearance in Wisconsin, in October last, attracted so much attention—have received a telegraphic despatch, announcing that his body has been found on the Bluffs at Milwaukee; cause of death unknown.

It will be remembered that Mr. WHITE left the hotel in Wisconsin temporarily, but never returned, and was supposed to have been murdered. A special act was passed by the Legislature, empowering the wife to administer upon his estate.—Boston Traveller.

MASS MEETING OF THE CITIZENS OF BROOKLYN, OPPOSED TO STEAM ON ATLANTIC-STREET, AND IN FAVOR OF CITY CARS

The undersigned, citizens of Brooklyn, feeling a deep interest in the prosperity and welfare of the city, respectfully invite all persons in favor of the removal of steam from Atlantic-st., and the substitution of city cars, to meet at the large hall of the Athenæum, on FRIDAY EVENING, the 8th inst., at 8 o'clock.

The original petition of the "Brooklyn and Jamaica Railroad Company" to the Common Council, asking the privilege of laying rails in Atlantic-st., says: "As to the propelling power, the Company cheerfully submit it to the decision of your honorable body. They do not desire to use steam within the limits of the contemplated avenue, believing horse-power to be equally advantageous, and in this view, they have already determined not to place their locomotive depôt on this side of Parmentier's Garden."

The object of this meeting of the citizens is to devise the best means of requiring the Company to carry out the original design of their petition.

AT HOME.

BY BAYARD TAYLOR.

The rain is sobbing on the wold,
The house is dark, the hearth is cold;
And stretching drear and ashy grey,
Beyond the cedars lies the bay.

My neighbor at his window stands,
His youngest baby in his hands;
The other seeks his tender kiss,
And one sweet woman crowns his bliss.

I look upon the rainy wild;
I have no wife—I have no child;
There is no fire upon my hearth,
And none to love me on the earth.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1857, by ROBERT BONNER, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court, for the Southern District of New-York.

THE WIDOW OF TOLEDO,

A TALE OF "LOW BIRTH AND IRON FORTUNE."

BY DR. S. P. BRONSON.

CHAPTER I.

THE RUFFLED MARQUIS.

"I say I will, Count!" cried the young Marquis de Sorbano, to his companion, the Count de Ponz as they walked along the Plaza Real—the great square or lounging ground in the good old city of Toledo. The Marquis was in his five-and-twentieth year; an only son; very proud, very sensitive, very rich, and, from boyhood up, very much accustomed to have his own way.

The Count, his companion, was a bachelor, nearer thirty-five than thirty, with a bold, commanding air, a moderately good-looking face, of modest fortune, and with a fine reputation as a soldier, having had the honor, with a small handful of men, of thrice rescuing the standard of his native city, in a single battle, from the Moors. He was a laughing, careless, good-humored gentleman, with no particular object in life except to amuse himself, and was withal, partly from nature and partly from experience, somewhat of a philosopher.

"I say I will, Count!" cried the Marquis, who, as the reader will readily understand, was considerably excited. "I will call him out and run him through. My honor demands it."

The Count laughingly shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh, if your honor demands it," he returned, "I have nothing more to say. Still, I would like to urge one little thought for your attention."

"What is it?" asked the Marquis.

"This: What if Juan, who, as I can testify—for he gave me a sword thrust once for treading incautiously on his shadow!—what if Juan, I say, who wields as dexterous a rapier as any man in Toledo—"

"Except Leon, the fair widow's secretary," interrupted the Marquis.

"Of course—always excepting Leon," laughed the Count. "But what if Juan should refuse to be run through? He is proud, and, if you will take pains to remember, not over apt to follow any man's bidding. He is impulsive, high spirited, brooks neither threats nor counsel, is wiry, supple, and quick of eye and hand. As for myself, though I have seen some service, and am considered to possess some skill in the use of the sword, I should be careful to fee a priest for masses for my soul, ere I voluntarily went out to match my blade with Juan's!"

"But my honor demands it!" repeated the Marquis, upon whom this gentle admonition had no effect. Juan must meet me!"

"O, you will not have to ask him twice," laughed the Count. "But, seriously, now—you would not fight a man about a woman who would consider it a blessed thing if seven eighths of her suitors—Juan and yourself amongst them—would only kill each other, and thereby relieve her of their importunities?"

"No matter!" said the Marquis, proudly. "I will fight him!"

"Ere you do," said the Count, as they approached a noted tavern, the resort of the "fast" cavaliers of the day, "let's in to the 'Lodge of our Blessed Lady,' and try a flagon of 'Cadiz.' Since nothing I can say will drive this thought out of your head, let's see if the generous grape will not be more successful."

The Count, followed by his companion, pushed his way through the garden, which fairly hummed with the voices of a gay throng, to an unoccupied table near the fountain, and after giving an order for two flagons of his favorite "Cadiz," he ran his clear dark eye rapidly around to observe his immediate neighbors, and perceiving an old acquaintance smoking a cigarette in a brown study, and occasionally moistening his lips with a measure of wine, he smilingly muttered—

"Poor Lopez! he is meditating upon the lecture that awaits him from the gray mare, and wishing himself a free cavalier once more!"

"Stay!" said the Marquis. "Something is going on!"

He made this remark on noticing that there was a general movement on the part of the throng toward the entrance of the garden. Looking in that direction, he and the Count beheld a short, stout personage with a small, round head, a sugar-loaf hat, a turned-up nose, small, thin lips, a retreating chin, round shoulders, and short arms, standing in scarlet trunks and hose, on a large table between two alguazils, one of whom held in his right hand a long, narrow rod emblematic of his office as a constable, and in the other a small hand-bell, which, at a sign from the short, stout individual, who was none other than the city crier, he now rang to attract attention.

"Hear, hear, all ye people!" cried the crier, in a wheezy voice. Then turning to the alguazil on his right, he commanded him to "sound;" whereupon that worthy raised a long narrow trumpet to his lips, and blew a loud, shrill blast, which grated on the ears of the crowd with a sharpness that caused many to shrink back with every nerve on edge.

The crier, unfolding a roll of parchment, from which dangled a large circular blue seal, held it up, and cried aloud in his wheezy tone, which was scarcely heard through the din:

"Hear, hear, all ye people! In the name of his most Catholic Majesty, Charles the Second, by the grace of God and the Spanish Monarchy, King of Spain, give audience!"

"In the name of the King!" shouted the alguazil with the trumpet, in a voice of thunder.

Every voice was hushed and every hat off, in an instant.

The alguazil smiled triumphantly and glanced at the crier to proceed.

The latter cleared his throat, with an air of importance that provoked a general smile, and then read as follows:

"Whereas it has been represented to us that Don Garcia de Vega, whilom of this county, is living concealed under a false name in our good city of Toledo, this is to inform all to whom this, our proclamation shall come, that whosoever is cognizant of his abiding place shall reveal the same to the judge of the city tribunal, who is hereby charged to deliver him, bound hand and foot if needs be, into our royal hands. And if any person or persons, to whom this proclamation shall come, be aware of the abiding place of the said Don Garcia de Vega, and shall withhold his knowledge of the same from the officer aforesaid, such person or persons shall forfeit all he or they may possess to the crown, and his or their bodies be publicly burnt in the market place. Signed, with our hand and sealed with our most royal seal. CHARLES REX."

Having finished the reading of this epistle to the Toledane, the crier, throwing up his short, round arm, shouted "Long live the King!" and then, followed by the alguazils, stepped carefully down from the table, and, with a ludicrous air of assumed dignity, took his departure.

As he disappeared, the spectators breathed freer and resumed their se

MRS. GASKELL'S MEMOIRS OF CURRER BELL.

D. APPLETON & CO., NOS. 346 AND 348 BROADWAY,
PUBLISH ON SATURDAY,
THE LIFE OF CHARLOTTE BRONTE.
Author of "Jane Eyre," "Shirley," "Villette," &c.
BY MRS. GASKELL.
Author of "Mary Barton," "Ruth," "North and South."

With a Portrait of Miss Bronté, a view of Haworth Church and Parsonage, and fac-simile of handwriting of Miss Bronté. In two volumes, 12mo., cloth. $1 75.

From the London Athenæum.

The story of a woman's life unfolded in this book is calculated to make the old feel young and the young old. Persons who have been conversant with society and manners as they existed in the remote corners of England within the century, will feel themselves strangely recalled to the narrow homes, the grim prejudices, the few pleasures and privileges belonging to a period of heavy taxation, costly literature, and limited intercourse, by the picture of a provincial parsonage and its inmates here set before them. Some of those, on the other hand, who are bursting into life and brimming with creative power, may feel pained (as it were by some cold prophecy) while they follow the record of a career of self-denial and struggle, sustained to the last with courage, principle and genius, but without hope. Nevertheless a true tale of what may be achieved in spite of disabilities, be the facts ever so cheerless let the pilgrim's lot have been cast on ever so rugged a road, let his cup have been ever so full of the waters of bitterness, can hardly be followed to its close without some strength being gained for the reader. By all this book will be read with interest. As a work of art, we do not recollect a life of a woman by a woman so well executed. The materials were not large, and the difficulties of execution were obvious. If there may have been reasons why the publication of this biography should not have been postponed, but these reasons subject surviving relatives of the deceased to close description and free comment; since to write the life of a woman not to omit a clear development of the circumstances which formed her character and influenced her hopes is impossible.

Protracted life and success, and increased experience with what is best in society, (not what is most convenient in observance,) might have ripened, and mellowed, and smoothed the creations of this singular novelist without destroying their charm of force and individuality. But conjecture stops at the grave-side. At the time when "the silver lining of the cloud" began to show itself, when domestic cherishing and prosperity seemed to await her after so many hard, dark, cruel years, the end came. All this is gently and sadly told by Mrs. Gaskell, with whom the task has been a labor of love, little, alas, of defence,—and who, we repeat, has produced one of the best biographies of a woman by a woman, which we can recall to mind.

From the New-York Tribune.

Strong in its intense individuality, bold and self-sustaining in the absence of wide and tender sympathies, and of a deeply tragic cast from purely impersonal causes, the life of Charlotte Brontë, as portrayed in these volumes by her congenial biographer, has not a little of the same fascination which throws such a potent spell around the pages of "Jane Eyre" and "Villette." Mrs. Gaskell, as will be seen on the perusal of the Memoirs, had before her a task of uncommon delicacy. The vein of bitterness, the pictures of hard and bare reality, the want of hopeful glimpses of the future, which mark the writings of Currer Bell, had their foundation in her own experience, were the combined products of her character and her history. Involving the misconduct of others, as they often do, it was no easy matter to decide how far justice to the dead was compatible with mercy to the living. On this point, Mrs. Gaskell has acquitted herself with fidelity to the truth, with commendable frankness of statement where publicity was allowable, but with a modest reserve in regard to incidents which belong essentially to the domain of private life. Her narrative is wholly unaffected, perhaps slightly tinctured with the severity that naturally grows out of the subject, but often relieved by picturesque details of the local scenery and customs in the quaint region which will henceforth be associated with the name of Charlotte Brontë. * * * * Let her memory be left where it is committed with tender earnestness by her admirable biographer, not with "the critical unsympathetic public, who are inclined to judge severely because they have only seen superficially and not thought deeply, but with that larger and more solemn public, who know how to look with tender humility at faults and errors; how to admire generously extraordinary genius, and how to reverence with warm, full hearts, all noble virtue."

NEW-YORK CITY.

The City Finances.

Comptroller FLAGG has made the following communication to the Common Council concerning the City Finances:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 6, 1857.

To the Common Council:

The City Treasury during the last sixteen months has labored under severe embarrassments, and for a considerable portion of the time has been unable to meet the heavy and constantly increasing demands made upon it.

With an annual tax of seven or eight millions of dollars, those who are not familiar with the extensive operations of the Treasury do not readily appreciate the cause of this embarrassment.

It may not be inappropriate at this time to show what the Treasury has been called to perform during the last sixteen months—the means at its command—and the magnitude of the work it has accomplished.

The ordinary expenses of the City Government for the year 856 was shown in the recent annual report of the Comptroller, page 39, equal to $4,589,925 72. This sum was provided for in the tax levy of 1856.

The total amount paid to the State for the State Schools and the support of the State Government in 1856 was $638,633 37, (see page 38.) There was also paid on account of the Free Schools of our own City, in addition to the sum received from the State School Fund, the sum of $268,284 35. The foregoing sums were included in the tax levy of 1856.

On the 5th of February, 1856, the Supreme Court confirmed the report of the Commissioners for the acquisition of lands for the Central Park. The awards for these lands amounted to $5,189,000. The Park law required that these awards should be paid by the City Treasury; immediately after the confirmation of the report. There was not a dollar in the Treasury to pay this large sum, and how were the Corporation to get the money? The act provided that the Corporation might borrow for the purpose; declared that the interest should not exceed 5 per cent. The Comptroller advertised for a loan at 5 per cent., but, as money could not then be obtained at this rate, a large portion of the awards for the Park could not be paid.

On the 5th of May, 1856, a debt of $516,000 for building stock became payable, and was paid from the Sinking Fund.

On the 14th of August, 1856, awards to the amount of $706,000 became due on account of the acquisition of lands for the new Croton Reservoir. The law in this case also required that the money should be borrowed at an interest not exceeding 5 per cent. In this case the Comptroller did not go through the useless form of advertising for a loan, but issued circulars to those having awards, setting forth that they had a right of action against the Corporation by applying to the Common Council, and a suit before any competent Court. At the same time the Comptroller pointed out the impracticability of paying the awards without an act of the Legislature authorizing an increase of the interest to be paid. And he also informed them that if they awaited the action of tee Legislature he would pay them their awards as soon as the money could be obtained, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. from the 14th of August to the date of payment.

In the manner before described, about $3,000,000 due to individuals, whose property had been taken from them without their consent, were expended from February and August, 1856, to March and April, 1857.

In many cases those having awards were in absolute need of their pay, and it is quite remarkable that so large a sum, in the hands of hundreds of individuals, was permitted so quietly to remain in a state of suspension. It shows a commendable forbearance on the part of the involuntary creditors of the City.

The payments on account of work done payable by assessment in the year 1856 amounted to the sum of $1,164,624 64, in cash and assessment bonds.

The total receipts from all assessment sources were $1,107,999 85. Leaving a deficiency of receipts in their accounts for 1856 of $56,624 79, in addition to the large sum deficient in previous year. These details are stated in the last report of the Comptroller, p. 39.

During the fiscal year ending Dec. 31, 1856, the total payments made from the City Treasury were $29,234,145 82. This largely exceeds the payments of any previous year, as explained in the report alluded to, p. 9.

To bring us up to the 1st of January, 1857, when we commenced the fiscal year with the following balances to the credit of the Treasury, viz.:

On account of the Sinking Fund..... $710,139 60
On account of the City Treasury..... 4,441,163 23

Total..... $2 221,301 83

On the 1st of February, 1857, the Sinking Fund was called on to redeem the Water Loan stock, issued for money borrowed in 1842, to the amount of $300,000.

There has been paid to the State Treasury, since the 1st of January, the sum of $331,000, on account of the State School tax, and $140,000 on account of the State mill tax. To pay this sum of $331,000, money has been borrowed on revenue bonds, in anticipation of the tax to be levied in September next.

There was also to be paid awards on the Central Park a total sum of $1,240,000, and for award on the Croton Reservoir the sum of $706,000, equal to a total of $1,908,000. Laws were passed by the Legislature on the 13th of February, authorizing stock to be issued at 6 per cent. for 20 and 30 years, to pay these awards. The Comptroller gave notice for a 6 per cent. loan for the Croton Reservoir to the amount of $1,000,000. This loan was taken at par, the Comptroller bidding for $400,000 for the sinking fund to make up the amount.

In regard to the Central Park, the Comptroller made an arrangement with the representatives of two estates to take 8 per cent. stock at par for the amount of their claims, equal to $400,000. Notice was then given for a loan of $600,000, and the sum was taken at about par.

As soon as these loans were effected, the Comptroller gave notice that on and after the 15th of April he would issue revenue bonds at 7 per cent., from $500 and upward, in anticipation of the taxes of 1857. From the 15th of April to May 2, inclusive, loans have been made for 6, 9 and 12 months to the amount of $1,876,060. But during the same period, payment has been made of revenue bonds issued in 1856, to the amount of $1,491,643 34.

After the passage of the Tax bill very heavy payments were made on account of arrearages of 1856, and for the ordinary expenses of the City government for the first quarter of the year 1857. The sum of $61,204 10 has also been advanced in the meantime on account of assessment contracts beyond the sums collected on the same account.

All these operations have not only swallowed up the $1,876,060 borrowed on revenue bonds, and the balance in the Treasury at the commencement of the year, but have taken a quarter of a million of dollars from the sum actually provided and brought into the Treasury for the payment of awards on the Central Park and Croton Reservoir; and in many cases the drafts given for these awards have been dishonored after the claimants had actually executed releases for the bonds taken from them by the Corporation.

In report made to the Board of Aldermen, April 20, 1857, the excess of payments for opening, regulating and grading streets, &c., beyond the amount received, is stated to be about $3,000,000, and the attention of the Common Council is called to these particulars.

The Sinking Fund, for the payment of the debt, and the interest thereon, is in a highly prosperous condition.

There is a balance at the Bank to the credit of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, of $750,000 to $800,000. But, it is to be borne in mind, that that fund will be called upon in January next to pay a debt which then falls due of $3,000,000. It is absolutely necessary, therefore, to keep all the resources of the Sinking Fund in a condition to be applied to the payment of the debt from time to time, as opportunities may be presented for purchasing the stock, or be available for its ultimate reimbursement in January.

The surplus revenues of the Sinking Fund have heretofore been used indiscriminately for all demands on the Treasury. This will no longer be done. When the surplus cannot be readily invested in the Stock debt for which it is pledged, it may temporarily be loaned to the Treasury on 6 per cent. revenue bonds, payable at such times from the next levy as may secure the prompt application of the money to the redemption of the pledge of the Sinking Fund. This will secure the Sinking Fund the interest, at all times, on its surplus funds. This matter has been too much neglected heretofore, owing in some manner to the agitation of the question in regard to obtaining interest on Treasury deposits. It will not be any longer delayed in the hope of accomplishing any object of this kind for the advancement of the interests of the City. And I ask, further, that the fact, finding that we had three millions and a half of dollars in the Treasury, of which $850,000 belonged to the Sinking Fund, the Comptroller called a meeting of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund for the purpose of placing $400,000 in the New-York and United States Trust Companies, until the money should be wanted to pay the Water Loan Debt in February following. Instead of that readiness to seize the first safe opportunity for adding $6,000 to the Sinking Fund, by an interest on deposits, which there was good reason to hope for from the publicly expressed opinions of several of the Commissioners, and from the zeal for the public interest, of all of them, the Yeas and Nays taken on the occasion present only two affirmative votes. This proposition was accompanied by a report from the Finance Department, a copy of which is annexed, marked A. This information is done to the Common Council in order that they may take such steps as they deem necessary in regard to interest on Treasury deposits. The course of investment suggested at the commencement of this subject will secure interest on the surplus of the Sinking Fund, and with the prospect of a surplus in the account payable from taxation the surplus will exist only for a short period.

On Monday, the tax account at the Bank was over drawn $22,000. Appended to this communication is a statement of the account made out by the Book-keeper in the Finance Department, between the Bank and the treasury for the last two years. The overdrafts have sometimes been a little scarce, but they bear no proportion to the heavy balances which the Banks at times have had in their vaults.

The State for thirty years has had an arrangement with the Banks in Albany, the terms of which are that the Canal Fund shall receive 3 per cent. interest on its surplus funds, and shall pay to the Deposit Banks 6 per cent on overdraft. The Treasury Banks of this City have at all times from one to three and a half millions of dollars or the public money, without payment of any interest at all; and I respectfully submit to the Common Council that, on a full view of the subject, they will be convinced that the Finance Department, in occasionally overdrawing, has not dealt harshly with them.

All which is respectfully submitted.

A. C. FLAGG, Comptroller.

The Newburg Mystery—The Body of the Girl Still Unrecognized.

Another attempt was made yesterday at Newburg, by the Coroner and Sheriff, to solve the mystery which still hangs over the fate of the young girl, but so far nothing whatever has been disclosed to lead to the identification of the body, or to point to the cause of her death. The town is still intensely excited upon the subject, and nothing else is thought of or talked about; every imaginable theory is proposed, but nothing is proved. Some are inclined to connect the tragedy with the mysterious trunk found in the open field not far from the body. This trunk may have contained the body, which was large enough for the purpose, and the body have been brought from a distance to the spot where it was discovered. Others suppose the girl may have been landed from the opposite shore alive, and met her fate near the spot where she was found; whilst others consider the body an anatomical subject, which after being stolen and carried part of the way to some doctor's dissecting-room was found too far decomposed for dissection, and to save trouble or detection in attempting to reach the river, was left in the open field.

NEWBURG, Thursday, May 6, 1857.

To the Editor of the New York Daily Times:

In an article in your issue of this morning headed "A Case of Circumstantial Evidence," and in which you refer particularly to the case of the young woman found dead near this place, you made use of the following language:

"Now be it remarked, that the body was interred hastily, and without any competent medical evidence—at least none that has found its way to us—to show that the deceased did actually die of the wounds and other marks of violence which were visible 'about her neck and head;' no sufficient autopsy was made to demonstrate that these marks were not designedly made upon a body already dead, &c."

This is simply a mistake, and in justice to those who have acted in this matter, as well as myself, I would state that

First—The body which was found on Thursday was not interred until Sunday following, and was then deposited in a vault where it can be seen and examined so long as it may be in condition to be identified.

Second—A thorough and complete post mortem examination was made of the body on Saturday by myself, assisted by at least half a dozen competent physicians. The fact that the blow received upon the head behind the ear was given before death, and that it was the cause of death was fully and satisfactorily determined, and the deposition of the physicians at the inquest on Saturday explicitly so stated.

By publishing this you will do away with a wrong impression in the minds of those who have read the article referred to, and oblige yours, &c.,

SMITH ELY, M. D.

COUNTERFEIT ON THE PARK BANK.—Some one-dollar bills of the Park Bank altered to tens, were shown us yesterday. The alteration is made in a very bungling manner, the 8 on the dollar not being added, so the counterfeit bill reads "Ten Dollar."

Fires.

IN BESTER-STREET.

A fire broke out in the six-story brick building, rear of 199 Bester-street, owned by JOHN SNOAR, and occupied by JACOB ZEIGLER, as a sofa and chair manufactory. The damage done to the furniture, stock, and tools, is estimated at $4,000; insured in the Beekman Company for $2,000. The building was damaged to the extent of about $3,000; insured in the Rutgers Company for $4,000. The fire is supposed to have ignited accidentally.

IN THIRTY SIXTH STREET.

About 10 o'clock, Wednesday morning, a fire broke out in BERRY's cabinet-shop, in Thirty sixth street, near Tenth-avenue, and soon spread to some other buildings. The entire loss amounts to not more than $2,000. The origin of the fire has not been ascertained.

IN THIRTY THIRD STREET.

A fire broke out at 3½ o'clock A. M. yesterday among some stables in Thirty-third-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues, belonging to JACKSON FOWLER. Two horses and a cow, belonging to Mr FOWLER, were burned to death, and the stables were damaged to the extent of about $1,000. No insurance.

IN PEARL-STREET.

At a few minutes past 1 yesterday afternoon, a fire broke out in the large fancy goods store of W. H CAREY & Co., No. 243 Pearl-street. It was soon put out, but considerable damage was done by water.

SUICIDE.—LORENZO DENGLER, a German, aged 40 years, committed suicide on the Battery between 11 and 12 o'clock Wednesday night, by shooting himself in the breast with a pistol. The body was taken to the First Ward Station-house, where an inquest was held on it by Coroner PERRY. Various papers in German, and addressed to his friends, were found upon the person of deceased. In some of them his intention to commit suicide was avowed. Want appeared to be the impelling cause. Verdict—"Suicide by shooting."

☞ JERRY MCGOWAN, alias "Red-headed Jerry," was committed yesterday by Justice CONNOLLY on a charge of knocking down and robbing MARTIN W. DOYLE of his watch, a few nights since, in the Fifth Ward.

THE COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Julia Mahoney and Margaret Money were next placed at the bar charged with assaulting Ellen O'Connor. They pleaded not guilty, and announced their readiness for trial. A great many witnesses were sworn, and a strong effort made to show that the prisoners were innocent; but they were adjudged guilty. They were each sentenced to imprisonment in the City Prison for ten days.

Julia Burns was sent to Blackwell's Island for two months for stealing one dollar's worth of cotton from one of the docks. The Court were of opinion that it would be a charity to send her to a place where she could be taken care of.

The National Hotel Disease.

No. 403 F-STREET,
WASHINGTON, Tuesday, May 5, 1857.

The first account which I received of the extraordinary disease in the "National," was from a gentleman who had been employed as steward or head waiter in the hotel. At the time he communicated the information, he was in the employ of Mr. MURRAY, at whose house I was boarding. He said a large number of persons were sick; that Dr. HALL was overwhelmed with business; that the hotel was poisoned, and that people would find out it was poisoned. Having many friends at the National, I inquired particularly his authority for such statements. He said he had been employed at the "d—d place," and that he had just left it because it was nothing but a hospital, which no one could remain in it with safety. He then indulged in a perfect torrent of abuse of the proprietors; his invective was personal and continual, and he never failed to improve an opportunity to urge a boarder to leave the hotel, or to prevent a stranger entering it. His regular and extraordinary abuse of the proprietors, whom I had always found to be as gentlemanly and courteous as any men with whom I had ever had any intercourse, satisfied me that there had been some misunderstanding, and that his charges were prompted by no motive short of the gratification of personal revenge.

Having, in conjunction with a large number of friends, spent a portion of almost every evening of several weeks at the National—having drank the water almost as regularly as that of any other hotel in the place, and believing it next to impossible for anything like a plague to break out in the middle of Winter, I did not credit the ex-steward's statements, but was surprised to find, a short time after he had made them, that several of my friends, who had been in the city but a little while, were already suffering severely from sickness, which they had contracted after their arrival.

In answer to an inquiry, the man stated two distinct and incompatible causes of the disease, viz.: copper saucepans and poisoned rats.* I have no evidence that his own course was not justifiable, and merely allude to him as one that might be able to throw some light upon the mystery which eashrouds the National malady.

I learned, yesterday, from a man employed at the President's, that he did all in his power, after leaving the hotel, to secure the situation of steward at the White House, and that, failing in his efforts, he left Washington for Boston, or some other city of the East, where, I believe, he had formerly lived.

G. P. BUELL.

It will be remembered that our Washington correspondent "S," in a letter discussing the endemic and its causes, published several weeks ago, stated that the "rat" story originated with a discharged waiter. We understand that the person referred to by him is the one to whom Mr. BUELL alludes. His own statement that he left the hotel voluntarily because of the sickness is false. On the contrary, he was discharged for insulting lady boarders, who complained of his impertinence, and to one of whom he had proposed to introduce a stranger gentleman boarding at the house, who, as he said, had fallen in love with her. After his discharge he went to the Murray House, and gave currency to reports against the National Hotel as above related. It will be seen that his statements under such circumstances are worth little as evidence, unless it is charged that he himself was a party to a scheme for administering poison. The copper saucepan story has been contradicted repeatedly upon abundant and satisfactory evidence. Whatever the cause of this mysterious sickness, the malignant statements of this waiter throw no light whatever upon them.

* He did not seem to rely much upon the rat story, but urged, with great earnestness and confidence, his theory that the provisions were poisoned, and that all who should eat at the house would die. His language at so early a day, when no one imagined the disease would prove fatal or become general, seems to have hardly been without the unction of prophecy.

The Europa's mails—from Boston, early this morning—reached this City late this afternoon. They contain nothing of any real importance not previously mentioned in the summary of the news received by telegraph from Halifax. In reference to American Securities, SATTERTHWAITE writes from London, under date April 24, thus:

"There has been only a moderate business in American Securities in London during the past week. Illinois Central Shares were in good demand, and brought advanced prices, until the arrival of the New-York mail. The lower quotations from New-York have caused a check, but holders here are unwilling to resound to a movement which is believed to be entirely speculative. Construction Bonds advanced to 92, but have since been done at 91¾. The Six Per Cent. Bonds have brought 87. We note moderate sales of Michigan Central Eight Per Cent, 1839, Bonds at 91 and 90¾, carrying accrued interest; also of Michigan Southern Sinking Fund Bonds at a slight advance: end of Pennsylvania First

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Secretary Stanton's Reply to the Proposition of the Free-State Party.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
LECOMPTON, K. T., Thursday April 30, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: Yours of the 25th inst. reached me only by last night's mail. I proceed without delay to reply to the proposition you make in reference to the election about to be made for Delegates to a Constitutional Convention.

As I take a different view of the laws of the Territory from that which you express, it will be impossible for me to consent to any new proceeding of organization to that which has been sanctioned by the legislative authorities.

I did not hear from Gen. [illegible] any such admission as you represent him to have made. That gentleman spoke only of his [illegible] action in the particular mentioned, and [illegible] that action was right or wrong, or whether [illegible] in that individual instance only, or in [illegible] others, by men either from Missouri or [illegible]achusetts, it could not invalidate the laws which [illegible] enroll in the Territory. If I believed [illegible] and believe—your assertion that the laws [illegible] were "enacted by a Legislature elected [illegible] people of an adjoining State," it would still [illegible] impossible for me to set them aside—the attempt [illegible] would be an act of gross usurpation, not less objectionable in its character and effects than the fraudulent interference which you attribute to the people of Missouri. I must, therefore, say to you in the simplest language, that I can do nothing which [illegible] the authority and validity of the laws enacted [illegible] this Territory. Congress alone has power to [illegible] them.

I have no authority over the Probate Judges. It is not my province to advise them in relation to the performance of their judicial functions. Yet it will not be improper for me to say, that it would be very judicious and becoming in them to obtain every possible information from respectable men of both parties in order to enable them to correct the list of voters. If such impartial men of their own will, and within the time limited by law, could take a new census and present it to the Probate Judges, with sufficient proof of its fairness and accuracy, I think the Probate Judges would be bound to adopt it, and return it to the Governor as the true list legally corrected. I should be sorry to see any Probate Judge in the Territory refuse to receive the sworn testimony of two respectable men, differing in politics, as to any matter within their knowledge, connected with the residence of citizens and their qualifications as voters. I do not believe such a wrong can possibly have occurred, and I therefore say, that if you had been desirous of obtaining a correct list of voters for the coming election, you had it in your power to accomplish that object in perfect conformity with the law.

It is not my purpose to reply to your statement of facts. I cannot do so from any personal knowledge enabling me either to admit or deny them. I may say, however, I have heard statements quite as authentic as your own, and in some instances from members of your own party, to the effect that your political friends have very generally, indeed almost universally, refused to participate in the pending proceedings for registering the names of the legal voters. In some instances they have given fictitious names, and in numerous others they have refused to give any names at all. You cannot deny that your party have heretofore resolved not to take part in the registration, and it appears to me that without indulging an generous suspicions of the integrity of officers, you might well attribute any errors and omissions of the sheriffs to the existence of this well known and controlling fact. I forbear to say anything of the nakedness of your requirement that we shall set aside the law in order to accomplish what you have refused to do in obedience to it provisions, but I will be most happy to learn that you, gentlemen, and your party friends generally, have been at work in earnest with a view to enable the Probate Judges to present a true and perfect list of the legal voters of the Territory. You have had power to correct the lists—if you failed to do it, the fault will be your own.

In reference to your proposition to appoint four Judges of Election at every place of voting, I have to say that the law very wisely authorizes only three. The Governor has nothing to do with their appointment. It is not in my power, therefore, to adopt your suggestions in this particular. If I had any authority in the matter. I would, in every instance, appoint as Judges of Election one Republican of your party, one National Democrat in favor of a Free-State, and one National Democrat in favor of making a Slave-State. This would be quite as fair and impartial a mode of proceeding as ever is, or, indeed, can be adopted, by political parties in any country. I most sincerely hope the Probate Judges may adopt this suggestion, or any other which may better avail to secure a perfectly fair and independent expression of the popular will.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
FREDERICK P. STANTON,
Secretary and Acting-Governor of Kansas Ter'y.
To C. ROBINSON, WM. HUTCHINSON, EDWARD CLARK, and others.

STATEMENT OF GEN. L. A. MACLEAN.

I have briefly to state that in the course of a few remarks made at the supper table, while on a recent visit to Lawrence, in company with Secretary STANTON, I was repelling the general accusation of the interference of the Missourians with the ballot-box, and stated that, perhaps, my own case was the most flagrant which could be found. For years previous to the organization of the Territory, I had determined to reside in Kansas when it should be thrown open for settlement, but not being able to remove into the Territory at that time, and being naturally anxious to have a voice in moulding the institutions under which I designed to live, I voted there, and went back to Missouri, considering myself a citizen of Kansas, and have never since exercised the elective franchise in Missouri, but have been actual resident of the Territory for the last two years. I feel, moreover, that in voting as I did, for the first time in Kansas, I did no wrong; nor am I conscious of any impropriety in the exercise, at any time, of my right, either at the ballot-box or elsewhere, as an actual bone fide citizen of Kansas Territory.

A Southern View of Kansas Matters, Appointments, &c.

From the South, (Richmond, Va.,) May 6,

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 4, 1857.

Late advices received here from Kansas, as I have been able to ascertain them, are very interesting. No doubt is entertained but that a Pro-Slavery constitution will be adopted by the Convention. Only two weeks now remain for registering the names of the voters; and so far the Free State men were not preparing to take part in the Convention. Dr. J. H. STRINGFELLOW, the editor of the Squatter Sovereign, was a candidate for the nomination for Delegate to Congress, for which a Convention was to be held on the 2d of July. His chances, however, were not considered very favorable.

Colonel ISAACS, the Attorney-General of Kansas, and also a prominent candidate for the nomination to Congress, is now in this city attending to an important purchase of Indian lands in the neighborhood of Leavenworth City. He is accompanied by a delegation of the Delaware and Munchee Indians, who attract much attention here.

The importunities of the Maine office-seekers have excited no little indignation here, as it is known that Mr. CLIFFORD is now in the city, using all his influence to enforce the demands of that State for still more Federal patronage than she has already obtained. The greediness of these Maine cormorants has become absolutely disgusting. It is a matter, too, of serious indignation that a State that was the first to go over to the Black Republicans, and to sell herself to FREMONT, should now make such demands and pretensions, and really assume to herself the best offices, as if she were to be the pet of the Administration. In the Executive Departments, Maine is already most unduly represented. Besides the appointment of Mr. APPLETON as Assistant Secretary of State, there are two heads of Bureaus in Mr. COBB's Department, (the Treasury,) from Maine, viz: Gov. ANDERSON, Bureau of Customs, and Mr. FULLER, Second Auditor. The latter gentleman was a member of Congress at the last session from Maine; and he is known to have voted against the Kansas-Nebraska bill.

The foreign appointments, as has already been announced, are to be taken up definitively on the 15th of this month; and I can assure you that the designation of the prizeholders in the mammoth lottery is the merest guess-work. Gen. CASS is very close on the subject. He said to one of the applicants, who presented the most ample testimonials to place his case beyond a doubt, "I wish you to understand, Sir, that I make it my practice never to allow any one to leave the threshold of my office under the impression that I am pledged to him in any way." By the way, the stories that have been going the rounds of the rural newspapers, that the old statesman's health was failing under the pressure and various cares of business, is all nonsense. He has not been looking better for many a year, and his vivacity, tempered with his beautiful simplicity of manner, is as charming as ever.

I have had the pleasure of meeting here a number of political acquaintances from California. The adoption of the principle of rotation for that fast country was no doubt appropriate; and I am told that the new appointments, particularly that of Judge WASHINGTON, formerly of your State, as Collector of the port of San Francisco, gave great satisfaction. The Navy Agent, whose office, from the commissions on the vast expenditures in the construction of the Navy-Yard at Mare Island, and in the way of supplies, is in singularly fat one, will also be rotated at the expiration of the commission of the incumbent in September next.

The entire list of appointments in and from California is altogether of new material or cast, and represents, in a measure, for the first time, the better class of politicians in that country. Although California was not represented in the Cabinet, as it was supposed she would be in the person of Col. WELLER, still her claims appear so far to have been amply recognized by the Administration; and in no case more satisfactorily than in the late appointment of Gen. DENVER as Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Gen. DENVER was formerly Secretary of State of California, and then a member of the House at the last term; and he is undoubtedly one of the most substantial politicians of the Union—of strong, vigorous mind, laborious habit, and of the most unblemished and undoubted political integrity. In this last respect, his character, even in California, never suffered the slightest imputation, and his bold and independent stand taken by him against the celebrated California Land bill, and other monstrous schemes of that nature, will be remembered by the entire country.

GOV. WALKER AND THE CABINET IN CONSULTATION ON KANSAS AFFAIRS.

WASHINGTON, Friday, May 8.

The Cabinet to-day were almost exclusively occupied with KANSAS affairs, Hon. ROBERT J. WALKER being present for several hours. He will take the oath of office here as Governor before leaving for Kansas, on Monday or Tuesday. The official and private accounts daily received induce both him and the Administration to believe that there will be no serious, if any, obstruction to the adjustment of the pending difficulties in that Territory.

J. MCLEOD MURPHY, who recently had a difficulty with DANIEL E. SICKLES, has been removed as Engineer of the Brooklyn Navy-Yard.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 7.

There will probably be three changes of masters at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, and the instructions to that effect will be given this week.

The Capitol enlargement business will disappoint those who hoped that the House of Representatives would get into their new quarters next December. This is now out of the question. The portion of the building destined for their use will not be ready for use before next Summer, if then.

Canal Navigation.

ALBANY, Friday, May 8.

The rumor of a breach in the Seneca River and Port Byron Aqueducts is ascertained to be unfounded. The whole middle division is ready for the passage of boats and an active business is doing.

High water on the Oswego Canal will prevent its navigation for several days.

The breaks reported last night, in the Genesee Valley Canal, it will take twenty four hours to repair.

As this end of the Canal is now in good order and no breaks are at present reported it will take only a day or two to repair. The boats clearing now from Albany will be able to get through without detention.

The Dalton Divorce Case Given to the Jury.

BOSTON, Friday, May 8

The Dalton Divorce case was given to the Jury at 6 o'clock this evening, after a charge by Judge MERRICK. It is doubtful if the Jury will agree on a verdict before to-morrow. Judge MERRICK, who is in ill-health, at the close of his charge fainted, and was carried from the court-room by the Sheriff and others. He soon revived, but was evidently greatly prostrated by the fatigues of this protracted trial and the atmosphere of an overcrowded court-room.

The America Outward Bound.

Conviction of McKim, the Murderer of Norcross.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, Penn., Friday, May 8.

DAVID S. MCKIM was, last night, convicted of murder in the first degree, and was this morning sentenced to be executed for the murder of NORCROSS. He strongly protested before the Court his entire innocence, asserting that his conviction was effected unfairly by the perjury of witnesses.

Fire at Richmond, Va.

RICHMOND, Va., Friday, May 8.

The drug store of Messrs. BENNETT, BEERS & FISHER was burned this morning. The loss on their stock is estimated at $28,000. They are insured for $20,000 in the Richmond offices. The building was damaged to the extent of $5,000, but is covered by insurance. A portion of the goods were saved.

The Outrage at Seguine's Point—The Incendiaries Described.

There is a great deal of interest felt as to the identification of the perpetrators of the outrage at the new Quarantine Grounds at Seguine's Point—the burning of the buildings, on Wednesday night, lately purchased by the State. Mrs. MARY ATKINSON, an intelligent colored woman about 28 years old, was in Mr. WOLFE's house when the incendiaries broke into it, and saved her life by jumping out of a second-story window. She furnishes us the following account of the affair:

"There were," says she, "only two persons at the house at Seguine's Point with me—SAMUEL FITZPATRICK, a boy, and JAMES MURRAY.

"On Wednesday night last JAMES MURRAY, who takes care of the horses, came in very late from the stables, and I questioned him as to the cause of his being so late; he said, 'Never mind—you needn't wonder if you are all burnt out to night, for it has been threatened to burn these houses down;' to this MARY replied, 'Why? what makes you think so?' MURRAY said 'There were two men rowed ashore in the afternoon and asked if he knew the doctor's name who was going to live there? He told them No—he didn't know them; they then asked him who were within the house, and he told them there was a woman, one boy, and himself, who slept there. MURRAY and SAMUEL then went to-bed, but I sat up in my bedroom, for I felt uneasy, and had suspicions that there was somebody already in the house below. It was near 12 o'clock when I went to-bed, and just as I had fallen asleep I was awakened by the noise as of something falling, on the same floor, in the main building, which shook the whole house. My impression was that the large wardrobe in the second room of mine, had been pushed over; had no light burning, but there was a bright moon shining. As soon as I heard the noise I got up and put on some of my things, and went to MURRAY's room and told him there was somebody in the house; MURRAY replied—"I guess not;" I then went to my bedroom window, from which I could see the main part of the house, and discovered that it was on fire; the fire had been kindled on the inside, and I saw the flames through the window blinds, and the smoke was pouring out through the windows; there was no matches in that part of the house; I had only one box, and that was in the kitchen in the theatre; the Commissioners were there during the day but did not dine there; they took dinner at Mr. MORRISON's; I did not see any person smoking cigars in the house that day; if they had done so, I should have known it; I called to MURRAY and said this is all the way we can save ourselves—by jumping out—you jump first and then I will follow you; MURRAY then jumped from the second story window to the ground, and I also jumped; when I was down, I told SAM to jump after me, but he did not, as he was afraid; I had on only one dress and a skirt, my stockings and only one shoe; the smoke came up so fast I was partly smothered, and could not find it; I saw nobody about the house, inside or out; I started with MURRAY and ran down to the farm-house, and before I reached it I heard Mr. MORRISON calling to MURRAY and crying out that his house was on fire; I then went down to Mr. SEYMOUR's house to get some clothing as the night was chilly, and I was cold; in about half an hour I returned with Mrs. SEYMOUR, and as I got no as far as the lawn, I saw nine men; they were standing in groups of three each, a short distance apart; there were three others who came up to me and said, "Where is the woman that was in the house? are you the woman?" and I answered "Yes"; they were all strangers to me; one of them then said, "You may be glad that you are out—it is all I wanted to see you—we thought you was burnt up—now by G—d we are all right"; then turning to one of his companions he said "now, Jack, if I had all the furniture that was in that house, I would get married to-morrow, and go to house keeping; MARY then said, "How do you know what was in the house—was you there?" but he made no reply, and got the other men together, and all of them started off down the shore road, towards Amboy; they all looked like rowdies, or Short Boys; the men who spoke to me was a small man, and talked very fast; he was a little freckled in the face—small features, and lisped a little when he spoke; it was bright moonlight; he stood close to me, and I should know him if I saw him again; he appeared to be the leader, as he had all to say, and the rest said nothing; by this time, which was only half an hour from the time I jumped out of the window, all the buildings were nearly burned down—the roofs had all fallen in, and the ruins lay upon the ground; I saw down by the tree, near the beach, a champaign wine bottle which I had packed among the things; I knew it by a string by which I tied the cork in—the wine had been drank; I staid until half past seven in the morning, and then took the stage for New York. MURRAY is about 22 years of age, and was greatly frightened; he ran away bare footed as fast as he could go. SAM was a little worse scared than MURRAY, and only jumped out of the window when he could stay in the house no longer.

Mr. JACOB WOLFE owned all the furniture in the house, and was only partially insured. The furniture was of the finest description throughout, costing him about $6,000. He had decided to remove the goods to the City several days before, but was prevented by the heavy rain-storm that prevailed. On Wednesday morning, however, he had carts on the way to remove everything to the City, which were met by the messenger at the Quarantine landing, with information that everything had been destroyed the night previous.

The Commissioners have given notice to the following Insurance Companies, of the loss by fire of the buildings at Seguine's Point:

National Fire Insurance Co. having	$4 000
New-York Equitable Insurance Co.	5 800

There is the following clause in each of these policies: "Provided always, and it is hereby declared, that this Corporation shall not be liable to make good any loss or damage by fire which may happen or take place by means of any invasion, insurrection, riot or civil commotion, or of any military or usurped power."

A large number of contractors have been to inspect the plans and specifications for the buildings, and the time for receiving proposals expires on the 13th at noon.

NEW-YORK SLAVERS.

Another Supposed Slaver.

The schooner Evangeline, which has been the past week lying off the Battery, is strongly suspected of having intended to go on a slave voyage to Africa. On Wednesday the United States District Attorney notified her Captain of his being suspected as a slaver, and gave him instructions not to leave port until adequate bonded security was given that she was going on a legitimate voyage. All effort to obtain satisfactory security has thus far failed. Yesterday Captain PITMAN, of the Evangeline, called on Mr. MCKEON, and promised that if he would allow the vessel to proceed to sea, she would abandon her intended voyage. He did not deny that the vessel had cleared for Africa, but rather than have her seized, or any litigation concerning her ensue, he would prefer to sell the vessel at once. The District-Attorney expressed no objection to the sale of the vessel, but before such sale took place, he should insist, he said, that the contents of the schooner, which seemed to indicate her intentions to go on a slave expedition, should be disposed of. The Captain gave no promise as to this, and thus the matter stands at present.

The Evangeline is a light, though staunch schooner, of 150 tons. She was built in Prospect, Maine, in 1855, and has been lately repaired and repainted. Captain PITMAN, who belongs to Brewer, Maine, is her present owner.

Examination in the Slaver Merchant Case.

The examination of the parties arrested on board the schooner Merchant, seized on the 23d ult. by Marshal RYNDERS, as a slaver, after three unsuccessful attempts at a commencement, was entered upon yesterday morning before Commissioner MORTON. Mr. MCKEON, the United States District Attorney appeared for the prosecution and Messrs. DONOHOE and BLACK for the prisoners.

Captain FAUNCE of the Revenue Cutter Washington was the first witness called. He testified as follows: A warrant for the seizure of the schooner Merchant was placed in my hands on the 22d of April last; I seized the vessel on the ensuing day; it was understood that she would sail on the night of the 22d; I engaged the steamer Satellite and with two officers and ten men kept watch of the Merchant all night; about 7 o'clock on the morning of the 25th the Merchant left her dock and proceeded down the bay in tow of the Birkeck.

In about half an hour I followed with my vessel and passed the Merchant between the middle and west bank; I could have overtaken her before she reached Governor's Island, but I wished to allow her to start fairly off to sea. The Birbeck towed the Merchant about two miles outside the Hook and then left her; we were then some four miles outside the Hook; I gave orders to watch for the schooner; when within a mile and a half of her, another steamer was observed coming down and making for the vessel; I ordered my ship to run off to the right of a large vessel that then lay outside; the steamer soon reached the Merchant, and went alongside of her; she took a hawser from the schooner, and commenced towing her East Southeast; we lay still until the two got off a considerable distance; I then gave orders to pursue her; the Captain of the schooner soon discovered us coming, and directly cast off from the steamer. I directed to place men on board the schooner, and then told my Lieutenant to take the Satellite and pursue the steamer, which had cast off from the Merchant. After I boarded the Merchant I took her in tow, and had her hauled alongside my cutter Washington, in Buttermilk Channel. The Birbeck was also brought to the same place. Capt. JONES, who is present in Court, represented himself as Captain of the Merchant. The crew were about ten in number, and were nearly all Spaniards and Portuguese, and I saw some chests of Africa on board the schooner. I did not see anything thrown overboard, nor any attempt to throw anything overboard.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

My warrant to detain the Merchant came from the United States Marshal. I did not read the warrant, as the Marshal told me it was all right. No resistance was made to my boarding the Merchant. Capt. JONES gave his papers to me. I had no warrant for the arrest of the Captain or crew.

Captain RYNDERS, the United States Marshal, was next placed on the stand, and gave the following evidence: I received information that the Merchant was intending to go on a slave expedition; I placed a watch upon her and watched her myself; the vessel lay at Pier No. 43 East River; I got a pea jacket and went to the dock and passed myself off as a sailor looking for a brother; I went on board a schooner at the end of the wharf where the Merchant lay; they told me about the vessel and her intention to go to Africa on a slave voyage; I did not go out on the Satellite, but waited her return in order to take the men in custody; most of those arrested told me they were going to Africa, but would not tell the nature of their business; Captain JONES said he did not know the names of the owners of the Merchant, or what trade she was intending to engage in.

The cross-examination of the Captain developed no new facts. At the conclusion of his evidence the case was adjourned till Monday noon.

The Trans-Atlantic Telegraph.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

AM I not correct in saying, that a large portion of the community look upon the project of uniting England and America by means of the sub-marine telegraph as being likely to prove a failure on the first trial? That it will ultimately succeed no one doubts, or that all obstacles will be finally overcome. Indeed it would not be viewed as a failure if success enough not attend the first trial of this great work of the nineteenth century, for really, when we look under taken with the past fifty years, what the single exception of steam, that will compare at all with it to magnitude?

By the way, Mr. FIELD, allow me to inquire if there is any perceptible time in the transmission of a message over the wires on a long distance—say 2000 miles—or will a message travel that distance as soon as it will any less say 3 miles? Is there no velocity annihilated?

W. J. P.

SALISBURY, Conn., Wednesday, May 5, 1857.

To the Editor of the London Times:

Will you allow me to assure the writer of the article under the above heading in your impression of to day that his apprehensions in regard to the Atlantic line are groundless, and that the form of cable now being manufactured has not been hastily adopted.

I will not remark upon the kind of cable which he so earnestly advocates, for the columns of a scientific journal are more suited to such a discussion, but I must say that I do not wish any antagonist so certain a loss as the indorsement of Mr. ALLAN's theories by an experiment of their value upon a large scale.

I do not know upon whose authority he ventures to rush in upon me so boldly with the assumption that our conducting wire is "ridiculously small." I have had some practical experience for some years in working telegraphic lines, and have had, as engineer to the Magnetic Telegraph Company, the charge of the greatest length in the world of subterranean wires, the conditions of which are electrically the same as those of submarine wires; and Mr. WHITEHOUSE, the electrician to the Atlantic Telegraph Company, has been engaged for a long time in experiments upon submarine conductors.

We are not oppressed by any fears as to the electrical success of the cable, and, to my mind, the alteration in the conductor, by using return wires, which your article alludes to, would be (to follow up the writer's simile) like laying an additional pair of rails over a long line of railway, when a modification in the form of locomotive employed would answer every purpose.

It would be more graceful for those who are without that knowledge of telegraphic matters which practical experience alone can teach, to pause before they thrust forward their theories so positively.

The Transportation of the Fillibusters in British Frigates from Aspinwall to New-Orleans.

The Aspinwall correspondent of the New-Orleans Delta, writing on the 20th ult, gives some particulars respecting the transportation of the fillibusters from Aspinwall to New-Orleans that have not been previously published here. We quote:

"Just after the Tennessee, on her last trip, had left the harbor of San Juan, the Rescue appeared in sight with the remainder of the men of LOCKRIDGE's force. They immediately commenced endeavoring to devise some arrange means for securing transportation to the United States. In the first place, however, they gave up their arms to LOCKRIDGE. It was suggested to some of them that their arms might be used as security for their passage, and that if they would deliver them, to be placed on deposit, and submit themselves to such other arrangements or contracts as might be necessary, one of the English gunboats could be had to take them to the United States. This suggestion was confirmed by Mr. MARTIN, Mayor of Greytown. Subsequently, Mr. M. stated that he could not carry out any such arrangement. The men, however, organized themselves, and demanded the arms and ammunition of LOCKRIDGE, who handed them over. They then delivered them up to Mr. SCOTT.

On the 12th the steamer Chas. Morgan arrived down the river with Col. CAUTY, an Englishman, in the Costa Rican service, who had commanded at various points on the river, and lastly at Castillo, and between one and two hundred Costa Rican soldiers. A cordon of boats from the fleet was immediately formed between the Charles Morgan and the Point, and the little steamer Rescue was placed alongside one of H. B. Majesty's ships.

Shortly after these arrangements for protection had been consummated, Mr. SCOTT was summoned on board one of the men-of-war to meet Col. CAUTY. There he was informed that the senior officer of the fleet and Col. CAUTY wished the fillibusters to be sent away, and to this end it was desired that he should draw a draft on MORGAN & SON for the payment of their passage. This he was reluctant to do—and it was proposed that the arms, ammunition, &c., that had been in the hands of LOCKRIDGE's men, should be held as security for the payment of the men's passage, provided the draft should not be paid, and to be given up to whoever should pay the draft, &c.

Finally, an agreement was made and signed between the three parties above named, with the following provisions:

1. That J. N. SCOTT should draw on CHARLES MORGAN & Son for the payment of the passage of the three hundred and seventy-odd men (who were at Punta Arenas, and who had been under LOCKRIDGE's command on the San Juan River) from Aspinwall to the United States; that the arms and ammunition, and the little steamer that had been used by these men, should remain in Mr. SCOTT's care, and under guard of the British fleet, as security for the payment of the said passage of said men, to be delivered to whoever should pay the draft, or if not paid, to the holder of it.

2. That none of the property should be used for any unlawful or fillibustering purposes, while on deposit with Mr. SCOTT.

3. That the said property, or any other property on the premises, in Mr. SCOTT's charge, should not be molested by Col. CAUTY, or on the part of the Costa Rican Government.

4. That Mr. SCOTT, or an agent of his, should go to Aspinwall to make such arrangements as might be necessary for the passage of these men.

5. Any arms that might hereafter be found in the hands of the men, not private property, should be included in the inventory.

6. Any cases of contagious disease among the men should be kept at Punta Arenas at the mutual expense of Costa Rica and MORGAN & SON, until recovery, and then forwarded to the United States by the first opportunity.

7. Any reference of this agreement, or any of its terms to any other parties (than those represented and concerned therein) private or national, should subject the property and everything belonging to the Company or Mr. SCOTT to an abandonment of the British protection now insured to it.

8. Neither the property herein specified as security nor the remainder of the property on the Point shall be transferred or relieved of its present jurisdiction until an arrangement respecting the transit route is made between a legally constituted company and the Costa Rican Government.

Accompanying the agreement was an inventory of the articles pledged for security. They consisted of 269 loose muskets, 12 cases of muskets packed, 197 half and quarter kegs of powder, 1,000 pounds of lead unpacked, 20 kegs and boxes of lead packed, six mounted brass pieces, of from four to nine pounds calibre, 108 cartridge boxes, three cases of percussion caps, 43 boxes made ammunition for small arms, and one box of same for cannon, several cases of hardware, boots, etc., etc., and the steamer Rescue, formerly called the Clayton, an iron propellor.

Mr. J. N. SCOTT drew the draft under evident circumstances of compulsion. He sent an agent to Aspinwall, ostensibly to negotiate for the passage of these men, virtually to protect him (SCOTT) as much as possible, and to have the manner and nature of the draft and security understood. The draft was indorsed by Col. CAUTY as the representative of Costa Rica.

The eighth provision of the agreement plainly nullifies that concerning the delivery of the security to the party who shall pay the draft, until it may suit Costa Rica.

The Costa Ricans say that VANDERBILT has not complied fully with all the terms of his agreement with them, and until he does he cannot put his line on—they can transfer the right to an English company when they desire—they will take formal possession of Punta Arenas and Greytown, when the passage of these men and some other little matters shall have been arranged. Meantime, they were to hoist their flag on the next morning after the British men-of-war left with LOCKRIDGE's men) in some conspicuous place on the side of the harbor near Punta Arenas.

British Influence in Nicaragua.

JEFFERSONVILLE, N. Y., Thursday, May 7, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: I find in the DAILY TIMES of the 5th inst. a communication from Gen. HORNSBY, of Nicaragua, to Lord NAPIER, relative to English interference with the affairs of Americans in Nicaragua. Being one of the number of the many Americans who were recently driven from the shores by British influence, I feel in duty bound to show my indignation towards that nation, who have been the cause of our defeat.

In reference to Gen. HORNSBY's letter, I am perfectly willing to testify to all the accusations he has set forth; and I am further willing to certify that two-thirds of the correspondence published in the Herald and other journals, concerning Nicaraguan affairs, are false, and without the least foundation. I was with Col. LOCKRIDGE's command from their first attempt to ascend the San Juan river in February last, up to the time it was disbanded at Punta Arenas on the 1st of April, through British interference.

Col. LOCKRIDGE's character as a soldier has been assailed by journals friendly to Britain's cause. These, and all publications detrimental to the character of Col. LOCKRIDGE, are false. He has labored night and day unceasingly for the cause of Nicaragua, and to reopen the San Juan River, which he would have accomplished in a few weeks from the time he left Punta Arenas in February last, had he not been repeatedly detained by the British vessels of war lying in the harbor of San Juan, while in the act of transporting provisions to his command, then at Fort Serapiqui, thirty-five miles up the river. This was their aim, to dishearten his men, and then by every exertion in their power, encourage them to desert the noble cause—in which, I am sorry to say, they but too well succeeded.

Very respectfully yours,
GEORGE W. BOGARDUS,
1st Lieut., Ordinance Department, Nicaraguan Army.

THE BURDELL MURDER.

TRIAL OF MRS. CUNNINGHAM.

Additional Testimony Relative to the Relations Existing Between Dr. Burdell and the Prisoner.

Occurrences on the Day and Night of the Murder.

THE BOND-STREET ODOR ACCOUNTED FOR.

The Evidence in the Case Closed.

COUNSEL TO SUM UP TO-DAY.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

Before Judge Davies.

FIFTH DAY....FRIDAY, May 8.

The evidence in the case of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM on trial on a charge of having murdered Dr. BURDELL, was concluded on Friday afternoon, and the case will doubtless be given to the Jury on Saturday. There were no new facts developed during the day, except the reason for the absence of ECKEL from the house at an unusually early hour on the morning after the murder, and the source of the unpleasant odor observed by some of the witnesses on the night on which the murder was committed. The partise immediately interested appeared in Court as heretofore, and the audience was usually large. During the day there was a large number of ladies present, who were accommodated with seats inside the bar on the right of the bench. At nine o'clock the trial proceeded.

EXAMINATION OF DR WALTER R. ROBERTS RESUMED.

Q.—You were speaking last evening of the relations that existed so far as you knew between Dr. Burdell and the defendant. Have you seen them at other places than the house No. 31 Bond-street—at other places than you named yesterday? A.—I have seen them at No. 2 Bond street on two or three occasions.

Q.—When? A.—A year ago last Winter I would state that I had seen them together at private houses; I do not wish to give the names of the people whose houses they visited, as they would not like to have their names mentioned.

Q.—When and how often have you seen them at private houses together? A.—I saw them together last Fall, on two or three different occasions, and during the Winter, in the street, quite often; I would state that where I board is at No. 2 Bond-street, and my my office is at No. 55, and consequently I pass the house No. 31 to my meals six times a day for the three last years, and during my acquaintance with them I met them a great many times in coming into or going out of the house.

Q.—In the times when you have called at No. 31 Bond-street and seen the defendant, was it an ordinary thing also to see the Doctor with Mrs. Burdell or was it very seldom? A.—During the past Winter, or since she has lived in the house, I would see them oftener together than I did during the time they boarded together, because I called on going to or returning from my dinner, from 5 to 6 o'clock; this was the hour at which the Doctor went out visiting, and he would often go into the parlor and stay a few moments, and say that he was going out or going to dinner; he most generally spoke to Mrs. C. and informed her that he was going out.

Q.—Do you know anything about the lock which was put on the door last? A.—I have passed through the door on several occasions.

The Court—How did you generally get in? A.—I generally rang the bell, and a young man or boy that attended to the door often came; sometimes the girls have admitted me, after office hours.

Q.—What girls do you mean? A.—The servant girls; sometimes the little boys, sometimes the young ladies, whenever they saw me coming. On two occasions I rang the bell and took hold of the door-knob; found that the bolt was not catched, and opened the door; it was after the lock had been remodeled.

Q.—Did Dr. Burdell ever come to the door when you rang the bell? A.—A great many times.

Q.—In the daytime or in the night? A.—Generally in the daytime; the Doctor's business was something like my own which confined him in the daytime; and in the evening he almost always went out.

Q.—These times when you found the door so that you could open it from the outside; was it in the daytime or evening? A.—Just at evening.

Q.—Do you know within your own knowledge whether the Doctor ever took the defendant to places of public amusement? A.—I know that upon one occasion he took her.

Q.—When and where? A.—It was some time last Spring, I think, after she had taken the house, and it was to the Broadway Theatre they went.

Q.—At what time in the morning of Saturday did you hear of the death of Dr. Burdell, and under what circumstances? A.—I was informed by Mr. Snodgrass coming to my room at No. 55 Bond-street and ringing the bell.

Q.—Name the hour of the morning? A.—I think it was between eight and nine o'clock; it was raining very hard at the time; I had been out the night previous, and I laid in bed rather later than usual that morning, and I did not expect any one in upon so rainy a morning.

Q.—You say you had been out the night previous; I will ask you what hour you came home? A.—I was at the Academy of Music at the opera, and I suppose it broke up between eleven and twelve o'clock.

Q.—You came down directly to Bond-street from Fourteenth-street? A.—I came down the Fourth-avenue, the Bowery, and then turned into Bond-street.

Q.—Did you smell anything peculiar? A.—Nothing at all; it was a hazy night, when smoke would naturally descend.

Q.—In consequence of the information you received from Snodgrass what did you do? A.—I dressed myself as quick as possible; as I was coming down stairs in the hall I met Hannah, and I then went over to No. 31 Bond street; I ascended the stairs to the Doctor's door, and there I found Dr. Main's student at the door, with the key on the outside; he had locked the door, standing by it; I saw Dr. Main at the foot of the stairs.

Q.—Dr. Main was at the foot of the stairs leading to the third story? A.—Yes, Sir; I think Mr. Staples was in the hall also, the next neighbor; the young man unlocked the door of the Doctor's room; I looked round the room some and then stepped into the hall; Dr. Main told me to go up stairs.

Q.—What did you next do? A.—I then went up stairs after looking into the room where the ladies were.

Q.—Did you at the time you looked into the room make a critical examination of it? A.—Not at that time.

Q.—You say you went up stairs. In what condition did you find Mrs. C.? A.—As I opened the door I found her sitting in the rocking-chair just by the side of the bed; Snodgrass was holding her. Shall I state where the young ladies were?

The Court.—No, Sir. You may state anything relating to the defendant, or anything that produced action or non-action by her.

Q.—What was Mrs. C. doing, and what did she say? A.—She was crying, and the first remark I think I heard her make was that if the Doctor was dead she could not live, that in the Spring he had promised to make everything right.

Q.—What further did she say? A.—She said she knew he would do it.

Q.—Did you say anything to her? A.—I tried to quiet her; I told her if he was dead it could not be helped; she made the remark then: "You do not know the secret;" or, "there is a secret you do not know;" I think those were the words that were used.

Q.—Was there any further conversation before you left the room? A.—There was some other conversation that occurred, but I recollect very little of it; I remember that remark, because it startled me exceedingly, not knowing to what it referred at that time.

Q.—You had never heard of any marriage or any pretended marriage? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—She said nothing about it in that conversation? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—What else occurred then? A.—As she could not help herself we laid her upon the bed, and I being so startled at the secret I immediately went down stairs to the room where the body was; at that time there was no police officer; he then entered the room and the body was—

The Court—It is not worth while to go over this matter, as we have had the position and appearance of the body described with great minuteness and particularity by Drs. Francis and Main. I am willing to admit any new fact which the witness knows.

Q.—I wish to call the attention of the witness particularly to the drops of blood as described upon the painting.

The Court—Ask him as to any fact which does not involve a repetition of what has been already given in evidence.

Q.—I wish to call your attention to the drops of blood south of the centre table. A.—I would state again, that at this time when I got there, the policemen wanted to report the cause of death.

The Court—You must not repeat anybody's conversation.

Witness continued—The policeman, myself, and somebody else assisted in ascertaining the cause of his death.

Q.—I want to call your attention to the spots of blood you saw south and around the centre table. A.—I traced the blood immediately leading from the Doctor's head, between the couch and the centre table to the desk or bureau: case which stands between the two windows; these drops were nearly round drops, as if dropping from above.

Q.—You think they were drops rather than spots made by touching? A.—Yes, Sir. It was dark blood, looking more like venous blood than arterial; there were more drops upon the instrument case right in front of the desk; from this point there the attic. Hannah, he believed, went up to bed after them. Witness heard her talking, and they came down stairs and told mother of it; then mother told him to wait till George Snodgrass went up with them. There were in the room when he went down his mother, Augusta, and Helen. Geo. Snodgrass was also at the time in his mother's room, marking some clothes for Helen, who was going away to school next day.

Mr. Clinton interrupted the examination, to state that Dr. Eric Parmly was in Court, and obliged to leave and attend upon his mother, who was very ill. He (counsel) was therefore anxious that the Doctor should be examined now, especially as his testimony could be taken in a few minutes, and the District-Attorney would not object.

The Court—Certainly.

TESTIMONY OF DR. ERIC PARMLY.

Dr. Eric Parmly then took the stand, and in reply to the counsel testified that he resided at No. 1 Bond-street, and was the son of Dr. Eleazer Parmly, and the nephew of Dr. Samuel W. Parmly, who had testified on this case in Court. Dr. Samuel W. Parmly had a conversation with witness on the Monday evening after the murder. Witness called at his uncle's house about seven o'clock in the evening, and there heard from him the statement as conveyed to counsel in the note which he (witness) had sent him. He (Dr. Samuel W. Parmly) stated that between nine and ten o'clock on the evening of the murder he went out to take a walk, and noticed a very strong smell as of something burning and he thought the basement carpet must be on fire, but thinking that he did not smell this until after he opened the front door, it must have been on the outside of the house. He said he went and took a walk of about twenty minutes and returned, but said nothing that witness recollected about perceiving a different smell in the evening. Witness did not recollect his (Dr. S. W. Parmly's) saying anything of having seen a flickering light in the attic window of No. 31 Bond-street that night.

The Court—Dr. Parmly did not say that he told him so.

Mr. Clinton—I believe your Honor is right.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE D. CUNNINGHAM RESUMED.

Witness proceeded to state that he staid in his mother's room till George Snodgrass went up stairs with him to bed. They had a light to go to bed by; they used to use sperm candles in the attic. It was only a little while, about fifteen minutes, from the time witness went up first with his brother till he went up again with George Snodgrass—the bed-room. Witness slept in that room that night. George Snodgrass and his brother slept in the same bed with him. He heard no noise and smelt nothing that night. He was at breakfast next morning; besides himself there were also his mother, Augusta, William, and Mr. Eckel. George Snodgrass was at breakfast also. Witness believed there was a letter brought for Mr. Eckel the night before; he believed his mother took it; he did not know who brought it, but supposed it was brought by the postman. He did not know what time it arrived, and did not remember opening the door for a person who brought any bird-seed that evening.

Here the direct examination closed.

The Attorney General observed that the prosecution had been assailed for not putting this witness on the stand, and the Coroner had been assailed because he did put him on the stand. He could see nothing in his evidence, however, which required cross examination.

TESTIMONY OF REV. DR. SNODGRASS.

William D. Snodgrass, being sworn, testified that he was a clergyman, and that his present residence was Goshen, Orange County. He formerly officiated as clergyman of the Presbyterian Church in this City. He had known the defendant and her family since the year 1844 or 1845, he was not certain which. He had been in the same house and at the same table on a few occasions with the defendant on and after the 13th of December last, when he was a few days at her house. He arrived at her house on Saturday morning, the 12th of December, and left on the Monday or Tuesday after, certainly not later than Tuesday after breakfast. He left his wife there, and then she returned on the Thursday of the same week. He did not go for her, but she followed him herself. Witness never noticed whether Mrs. Cunningham was left handed; he thought he had opportunities of noticing if she used her left hand in eating or carving, but had not noticed that she did. During part of the time he was there in December he saw Dr. Burdell and the defendant together two or three times, but was not very confident about how often. When he saw them together he heard them converse. [A question as to whether their conversation was friendly, or whether he had observed anything quarrel, some in their language was ruled out and exception taken.] He observed nothing in their demeanor that attracted his attention different from what might be expected, from the relations he supposed them to sustain towards each other. The demeanor of each to the other was not inconsistent with her residing in Dr. Burdell's house as a tenant, and he residing in the same house as a dentist. That was witness' meaning. He saw them together on Monday morning between nine or ten o'clock. The occasion was that of a conversation on the part of Dr. Burdell, witness' wife, Mrs. Cunningham and witness himself, in relation to some professional business which the doctor was to do for his (witness') wife. Mrs. Cunningham had nothing to do with the professional business of Dr. Burdell and himself and wife, that he (witness) was aware of. He did not think he could repeat correctly a sentence uttered by any one of the party. It was a general conversation relative to the arrangement of a piece of work that Dr. Burdell was to do for witness' wife, and which caused her to remain behind him. Mrs. Cunningham had visited witness' house, in Goshen, about seven years ago, shortly after his removal from this City to Goshen. She then spent some ten or three days with his family. The residing of witness' son in Mrs. Cunningham's house was with the approbation of his wife and himself.

The witness was not cross-examined.

DR. CATLIN'S TESTIMONY.

Samuel H. Catlin was next examined by Mr. Clinton. He described himself as a physician, residing in Brooklyn. He had known Mrs. Cunningham for five years, and was her family physician during the lifetime of her husband, Mr. Cunningham. Three years ago she was attacked with inflammatory rheumatism, which affected both shoulders, but more particularly the right shoulder, the right elbow, and the right hand. The effect upon the joints of her hand was to enlarge them. Those joints were not at present in a natural condition. The right hand was especially affected, and the joints of both hands were stiffened and weakened. She had not the same power of grasp now, as before she was afflicted. The strength of the parts affected would naturally be very much diminished.

Cross-examined by Mr. Edwards—Q.—Doctor, when did you cease to be the regular medical attendant of the Cunningham family? A.—About two years ago, when she removed from Brooklyn.

Q.—When was the last time that you attended her professionally, and what did you notice on that occasion? A.—I do not know that I attended her professionally after she left Brooklyn.

Q.—Have you examined her hands within that time? A.—I have, within the last two years.

Q.—Were her hands at that time in the same state as when you attended her professionally? A.—They were not so much swollen.

Direct examination resumed by Mr. Clinton—Q.—How recently have you examined her hands? A.—Within three weeks.

The witness was directed to examine Mrs. Cunningham's hands, in the presence of the Jury. He did so, and explained their present appearance, but his remarks were inaudible to the reporters.

Cross-examination resumed—Q.—Did Mrs. Cunningham wear rings when she was under your care for rheumatism? A.—I have no recollection.

Q.—You remarked that she now wears rings; look at them now, and see if they are the ordinary size for her fingers? A.—[After examination]—I should say they are of a proper size for her fingers as they are now.

Q.—Are her fingers swollen at present from their natural size? A.—They are enlarged, but not to any considerable extent.

Edward Pierpont was next examined.—He said he was a lawyer, and knew Dr. Burdell, but had never seen Mrs. Cunningham till in Court, this morning. The judgment that had been spoken of, in connection with the name of the witness, had been canceled, and Mrs. Cunningham had never any interest therein. There was no assignment.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE VAIL SNODGRASS.

This gentleman was sworn and examined by Mr. Clinton as follows:

Q.—You are the son of Rev. Dr. Snodgrass? A.—I am.

Q.—What is about your age? A.—I am 19 years old in June.

Q.—Do you know the defendant? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Mrs. Cunningham? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How long have you known her? A.—I cannot say how long. I have been intimately acquainted with her since the last of July.

Q.—But prior to that how long were you acquainted with her, or with any of her family? A.—I have not the least idea.

The Court—He did not know them until the last of July.

Q.—Were you acquainted with them when you and they resided in Irving-place, when you were quite a boy? A.—I believe I was, although I do not remember at the present time.

Mr. Clinton—That is all upon that point. At the time of the homicide in question, you resided at No. 31 Bond-street, I believe? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—For how long previous to that time had you resided there? A.—I think from the middle of November to the 1st of December, I think it was then when I came there.

The Court—In other words you came there the last of November? A.—Yes.

The Court—He means he went there about the last of November.

Witness—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—For how long did you continue to reside there? A.—Up to the 31st day of January.

Q.—At that time you and Mr. Eckel were taken into custody, I believe? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—You subsequently have been put under bonds to appear as a witness in this case by the prosecution? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—State how you came, Mr. Snodgrass, to reside in that family?

The Court—I do not see the materiality of that; he was living there, and that is enough. It must be presumed that he lived there for an innocent and lawful purpose.

Mr. Clinton—Certainly, your Honor.

Q.—Were you engaged in any occupation at that time? A.—Yes.

Q.—Were you a clerk in a store? A.—Yes.

Q.—In Mr. McMurray's store? A.—Yes; but not at the time that I went to Mrs. Cunningham's.

Q.—But during the latter part of the time? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where is Mr. McMurray's place of business? A.—At No. 262 Pearl-street.

Q.—Is his a hardware store? A.—No, a brush store.

Q.—Did you see Dr. Burdell when you resided in that house at different times? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—State whether you saw him on the Sunday preceding his death? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you see him in the presence of the defendant? A.—I cannot say, Sir, as to that.

Q.—Did you see the defendant during the day—the Friday—on the night on which it is alleged this homicide was committed? A.—I did, Sir.

Q.—About what time, as nigh as you can recollect, did you come home to dinner that day? A.—About half-past 6 or 7 o'clock.

Q.—Were you in during the evening? A.—A portion of the time, Sir.

Q.—Well, from half past six until about what time were you in the house—before going out, I mean? A.—I think it was about half-past seven when I went out.

Q.—With whom, and for what purpose? A.—Miss Helen Cunningham wished me to go out and purchase some things with her.

Q.—To purchase a veil? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where did you go for that purpose? A.—We went up Broadway, and over to Fourth-street in the Bowery, and from Bond-street to the house.

Q.—Did you stop any longer than to enable her to purchase the veil? A.—No, Sir, but we purchased other things at different stores.

The Court—You did not stop except to make purchases? A.—No.

Mr. Clinton—Were you long at the store at which you stopped? A.—I do not think we could have been outside above three quarters of an hour.

Q.—You then returned to the house No. 31 Bond-street? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—When you returned where did you go to? A.—Into the back parlor, Sir.

Q.—The back parlor first floor? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where was Mrs. Burdell when you returned? A.—I have no distinct recollection whether she was in there or not, although she might have been; I think she was: I think herself and the two boys were there.

Q.—George and Willie? A.—Yes.

Q.—State whether you remained in the house from the time you returned as you have stated until the next morning? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you at any time go up stairs into the front room in the third story that evening? A.—Yes.

Q.—About what time, as nigh as you can recollect? A.—I should judge it to be about half-past eight o'clock, Sir.

Q.—About how long did you remain there? A.—I staid there until eleven o'clock.

Q.—For what purpose was that room used?

The Court—We have that already most distinctly.

Mr. Clinton—I wish to prove that it was the sitting-room for all the members of the family.

Mr. Clinton—Who was there? A.—The whole of the family, excepting the servants.

Q.—Enumerate, if you please, those who were in the room during the time, or any portion of the time, you were in there. A.—Mrs. Cunningham, her two daughters, her two sons, Mr. Eckel, and myself.

Q.—About what time did Mr. Eckel come in? A.—He came in very shortly afterwards.

The Court—Shortly after you went in?

The Witness—Yes, but I cannot say the time.

Q.—State about what portion of the time, from half past eight to eleven o'clock, the defendant was in that room. A.—All the time. I think, Sir.

Q.—All the time? A.—I think so, Sir; I have no distinct recollection.

Mr. Clinton—What is that?

The Court—He says: "I have no distinct recollection whether she was there or not, but, I think she was?

Mr. Clinton—Q.—About what time did the parties in that room separate for the purpose of retiring? A.—I think the boys went to bed about nine o'clock—it might have been a little after—say half past nine.

Q.—Did they come down afterwards? A.—George did.

Q.—At eleven o'clock your whole party separated for bed? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did Mr. Eckel go out? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you? A.—Yes; before I went to bed however I went down stairs.

The Court—Where did you go, and what did you do? A.—I went down to the kitchen for the purpose of getting some cider and some water; I was unable to get the cider, and so I brought the water up stairs.

Q.—For whom? A.—Mrs. Cunningham and her two daughters.

Q.—About what time was that? A.—That was about eleven minutes or a quarter before eleven o'clock.

Q.—Was the hall lamp out at that time? A.—It was totally dark; I lit the hall lamp adjoining Dr. Burdell's room at the time.

Q.—You lit the gas? A.—Yes, adjoining his door.

Q.—As you went down? A.—Yes.

The Court—What had you in your hand as you went down, a candle or light of any kind? A.—With a match.

Mr. Clinton—Q.—State when you returned whether you did anything in reference to the gas. A.—I put it out.

The Court—At which door was it—at the door of the front or back room? A.—The door at the back room, right at the head of the stairs.

Mr. Clinton—And you put it out as you returned? A.—Yes.

Q.—About how long was it before you returned? A.—Three minutes.

Q.—Were you gone any longer than to go down, get your water, and come back? Did you tarry? A.—No; I tried to get the key to open the door where the cider was, but could not find it.

Q.—When you came back, where did you return? A.—Immediately to the bed room, and I put out the light as I returned.

Q.—You went to bed exactly at eleven o'clock? A.—Exactly at eleven, as I have said.

The Court—When you returned to the defendant's room, who was in that room? A.—Mrs. Cunningham and her two daughters; I think Mr. Eckel was, although I am not certain whether it was before or after I went up stairs from the basement that he returned, I cannot say; I think it was before.

Q.—You think he left the room before he went down stairs? A.—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—And then you went up stairs to bed? A.—I did, Sir.

Q.—State who slept with you—in the same room with you? A.—The two boys, Sir.

Q.—George and Willie? A.—Yes.

Q.—Have you occupied a room separate from them at any time previously in that house? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—And subsequently changed it for what reason? A.—It was so cold, Sir—that is all.

The Court—I want to ascertain which room it was. Was this the front room in the attic nearest to the Bowery? Yes.

Q.—What kind of a partition was there between those two rooms? A.—A wall partition.

Q.—Lath and plaster? A.—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—You stated that you had formerly occupied another room in the attic—which room was that? A.—The one at the left hand.

The Court—The one where the fire-place was in? A.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Clinton—Do you know when you went to bed that night in the attic, whether you closed the door or kept it open? A.—I think I left it open when I went to bed; but I am not certain that I left it open.

Q.—Is there any circumstance by which you can recollect that? A.—Yes.

Q.—State it? A.—I was going to get up to shut it on account of leeing some coats, and from Mrs. Cunningham making the remark that she wished the door to be locked or shut.

The Court—Did you get up and shut it? A.—No.

Q.—Why not? A.—It was too cold, Sir.

Q.—You thought of it, and did not do it? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Clinton—Did you hear of any noise that night? A.—Not a particle, Sir.

Q.—Did you sleep in the same or a different bed with the little boys? A.—In the same bed, Sir.

Q.—About what time did you get up the next morning? A.—Half past seven to eight o'clock, Sir.

Q.—Did you breakfast with the family? A.—I do not know whether the whole family were there or not; I breakfasted with a portion of the family.

The Court—Where did you breakfast? In what room in the house? A.—In the front basement, in the dining-room.

Q.—Was the defendant present? A.—Yes, Sir, she was there, and a portion of the family came to breakfast at that time.

Q.—Do you recollect who? A.—I think the two daughters and mother; I do not think the children—the boys—were there, at any rate not until after we had got through.

Q.—State whether you observed anything unusual in the appearance of the defendant?

The Court—Let him state what he observed.

Witness—Nothing at all, Sir, except that she said that she would like to have known that Mr. Eckel had been going out so early, for then she would have got breakfast for him; she was not aware of his going out.

Q.—Did you go to business that day? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you know anything or recollect anything in respect to a light in the open attic? A.—I think that light was occasioned—

Mr. Clinton—State what you recollect.

The Court—In the first place state when.

Mr. Clinton (to the witness)—Do you know anything?

The Court—He says that he does not recollect.

Mr. Clinton—The question is whether you recollect anything in respect to light in the open attic? A.—I have an indistinct recollection as to that.

Q.—What is that? A.—That light was standing on a large chest that stood against the wall in the attic.

Q.—For what purpose? A.—It was left there for me.

The Court—When you went to bed? A.—Yes.

Q.—I think you stated that the boys went up before you? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—State whether the family was doing anything particularly the night before with reference to the departure of any member of the family? A.—Everything, Sir.

Q.—When I say the night before, I mean the Friday night. A.—They were doing everything.

Q.—For what purpose? A.—To facilitate the travel the next morning; they were getting the things of Miss Helen ready to send her to school at Saratoga.

Q.—State whether they were packing, or what they were doing—with reference, I mean, to packing trunks or anything of that kind. A.—I think the mother was occupied in packing trunks; she was getting some other things and her sister.

Q.—They were engaged about that matter a good deal that night? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you hear in Court the testimony of Mary Donahoe, or Hannah, the cook, in respect to some remark at the breakfast table in reference to Dr. Burdell?

The Court—Did you hear her testimony?

Witness—No, Sir.

Mr. Clinton—Did Eckel, at the breakfast table, at any time you were present, make a remark in reference to Dr. Burdell: "By jingo, I would like to be at his stringing up if I had not to pull the cord too tight to kill him?" A.—I never heard any such remark made.

Q.—Nothing of that kind? A.—No, Sir. He said, I think, that it was a shame for him (Burdell) to abuse me.

Q.—Abuse you—in what respect? Did you let him in that night? A.—Yes; that is the reason.

Mr. Clinton—State the circumstances about that.

Attorney-General—This has nothing to do with the matter.

The Court—Yes. This is to explain the remark that was made at the table, and I admit it only so far as it is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. Clinton—And it is only in that point of view that I offer it.

The Court—(to Mr. Clinton)—Ask him what was stated at the table as to anything that passed between him and Dr. Burdell.

Mr. Clinton—I want to prove—first, the act of the party, letting alone the declaration, the act of letting Burdell in that night.

The Court—(to the witness)—What did you state at the breakfast table?

Mr. Clinton—Your Honor misunderstands us, or we have misunderstood the previous ruling. We wish to know a fact to which allusion was made by other witnesses, who could not know the fact, as they were not present. I stated explicitly in my opening what the fact was.

The District-Attorney—Do I understand you to admit the conversation that ensued between Dr. Burdell and this gentleman?

The Court—(to the witness)—Did you let him in on a certain night? A.—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—At what time? A.—I suppose in the neighborhood of two o'clock.

Q.—Why do you judge it was that hour?

The Court—It is sufficient that he has stated it. We will assume it.

Mr. Clinton—I want to ask how he came to let him in?

The Attorney-General—I do not see the materiality of this.

The Court—It is enough as it now stands.

Mr. Clinton—(to the witness)—You did go down and let him in? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Was the conversation to which I alluded a moment ago, with reference to that subject? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—State, if you please, all that was said at the table in reference to that matter.

The Court—Ask him thus: Whether he stated at the breakfast table what had transpired between him and Dr. Burdell.

Mr. Clinton—Q.—Did you state at the table the next morning, or was anything said as to what had transpired between you and Dr. Burdell an the night that you let him in?

The Court—Tell the whole story.

The Witness—I said that Georgy, Willie, my brother and myself, came down to let him in, and he was in a great state of excitement, swearing and cursing, and he (Burdell) said that he would knock my head in. I told him that I did not know how the door became locked, but I was certain that it was not locked at the time I opened it. He called me a liar, and said that he would knock me down.

Q.—Now, what did Eckel say in reference to that? A.—Nothing whatever, excepting that he (Burdell) ought to be ashamed of himself; no threat whatever was made.

Q.—What did the defendant (Mrs. Cunningham) say? A.—She said that it was just like his abuse to her—similar to his abuse to her.

Q.—Was that all that was said as far as you recollect? A.—That is all I think.

Q.—Was anything said in regard to his being a passionate man, but that he would get over his passion very soon? A.—Mrs. Cunningham may have said something of that kind, but I have no distinct recollection of it, Sir.

Q.—Did you perceive any offensive smell at that time, like burnt woollen, or burnt rags, or burnt leather? A.—None whatever.

Q.—Are your smelling powers in good order? A.—Excellent, Sir. [Laughter.]

Q.—I will ask you this: Do you know anything in respect to the discharge of Mary Donahoe? A.—Yes.

Q.—State what you know of your own knowledge upon that subject? A.—I know she came in very much intoxicated, or she did not come in intoxicated one morning, but you could see the effect of the liquor.

The Court—She came in showing the effects of intoxication? A.—She came in one morning, after an absence of about four days, I think, and much marked and bloated, I think.

Q.—Marked and bruised? A.—Yes.

Q.—Well, then what transpired? A.—Mrs. Cunningham threatened to discharge her, and she began to cry and beg and so forth.

Q.—Did she go down on her knees to Mrs. Cunningham? A.—I think she did.

Q.—What did she do? A.—I think she went down on her knees, but I am not sure; she made a great time there; this was a long while before the murder—some three or four weeks.

Q.—Some three or four weeks before the homicide? A.—Yes, Sir, I think so.

Q.—State, Mr. Snodgrass, the first intimation you had of the death of Dr. Burdell? A.—From the cook, Sir.

Q.—Hannah, the cook? A.—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—State the particulars.

The Court—You need not go over that again. It is not necessary.

Mr. Clinton—Did you see the corpse? A.—I did, Sir.

Q.—Did you go for any one, and if so, whom? A.—For Dr. Roberts.

Q.—You went for Dr. Roberts? A.—Yes.

Mr. Clinton—(To the Court.)—I do not know, your Honor, how far it is necessary to go over details.

The Court—It is not necessary unless you have some new fact.

Mr. Clinton—I was about questioning the witness as to the conduct of the defendant.

The Court—That seems to have been very fully gone into, and it is unnecessary to go into it unless there are some new facts that you desire to elicit. If anything occurs to you, Mr. Clinton, you can ask it afterwards.

Mr. Clinton—Oh, Yes. (To witness)—How is it in respect to there being a stable in the rear?

The District-Attorney—Do you know anything about that? A.—I believe there is.

Mr. Clinton—Is there a building in the rear? A.—Yes, Sir, and it looks like a stable at any rate.

Q.—You have never been through it? A.—No, Sir.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE DISTRICT-ATTORNEY.

Q.—You said that you closed the door, or thought of closing it, because of the stealing of the overcoats? A.—I do not think that would make any impression Sir, upon my mind at all; I was not afraid of anything of that kind.

Q.—Then what was the impression that caused you to do it? A.—Nothing at all; it was only that Mrs. Cunningham made the remark to me about closing the door.

Q.—But it made no impression upon your mind? A.—It made no impression upon my mind.

Q.—Therefore you did not get up to close the door? A.—I did not, Sir.

Q.—How long before this was the incident of the overcoats being stolen? A.—I could not say, Sir.

Q.—Was it while the old lock or the new one was on the front door?

The Court—Before the alteration? A.—I think the coats were taken twice, and the second time was when the new lock was on; the door was open at that time.

Q.—Previous to your going on this little last visit to Mrs. Cunningham you had known very little of herself and the Doctor; I think previous to this last January, when you went there this last visit, you had seen very little of the Doctor and Mrs. Cunningham? A.—I had not seen a great deal; before that time I had seen very little of them.

Q.—I think you stated that you knew of no unfriendly feeling existing between Mrs. Cunningham and Dr. Burdell? A.—I did not know of any.

Q.—When you went out the evening in question, the Friday night, where did you first go to? A.—I think it was at the corner of Amity-street and Broadway, or the corner of Fourth street and Broadway.

Q.—And you left the house at what time? A.—I do not know; perhaps in the neighborhood of eight o'clock.

Q.—Did you wear a watch at that time? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was your time then matter of supposition or of recollection, from seeing your watch? A.—I may then have worn a watch, but I do not know that I did.

Q.—What is your idea of the time that your left this house on this Friday night? A.—I should judge, Sir, it was near eight o'clock—not the time that I left; that was about half past seven, I should think.

Q.—Did you walk with this young lady (Miss Helen) to the corner of Broadway and Fourth-street, at a slow, or at a rapid pace? A.—At my general gait, Sir.

Q.—You walked with her, with your general gait, as you would do, when you are alone? A.—Yes.

Q.—Is that gait of yours, Sir, slow or rapid? A.—It is not very rapid, or very slow.

Q.—How long were you in the store at the corner of Broadway and Fourth-street? A.—No longer than time enough to purchase some writing paper.

Q.—How long was it? A.—Two or three minutes.

Q.—And from thence where did you go to? A.—We went from there down to Fourth-street.

Q.—That is towards Washington-square? A.—Yes, and to the Bowery.

Q.—It would be what we call, in Knickerbocker language, over to the Bowery? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Did you turn the corner of Bowery into Fourth-street, up or down? A.—Up.

Q.—How far up? A.—Not over two blocks.

Q.—Where did you stop, if anywhere? A.—I do not know. We stopped in a dry goods store.

Q.—How long were you there? A.—We were there some little time.

Q.—About how long? A.—I do not know, Sir.

Q.—One minute, or twenty minutes? A.—It was not twenty.

Q.—Was it fifteen? A.—I should judge not.

Q.—What were you purchasing there, if any thing? A.—A veil, I think, Sir.

Q.—Were there many patterns looked to, or not? A.—Two or three, I should think.

Q.—Were you there ten minutes? A.—We may have been that length of time, but I do not know.

Q.—But there was some looking at patterns, however? A.—Yes.

Q.—You then left there together, and where did you go then? A.—To No. 31 Bond street.

Q.—You went through the Bowery to Broadway and down Bond street to the house again? A.—Yes.

Q.—And from there you went up stairs, as I understand it? A.—We went into the back parlor.

Q.—Were you furnished with a night key for the house? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you have one or two? A.—I had one.

Q.—What time the next morning was it that the cook came up into the room? A.—Nine o'clock, as far as I could judge.

Q.—Did you notice how her hands were? A.—There was dough upon her hands.

Q.—You were in the house nearly all Saturday, were you not? A.—Until I was taken to the Station-house.

Q.—And you were in custody during the Coroner's Inquest? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Clinton—Now, as to the night-keys that you have spoken of—do you not know that Dr. Smith and son had night keys? A.—Yes, Sir.

A Juror—Did you strike a light next to the Doctor's door? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—How did you find the way down stairs? A.—The light was sufficient for me to go into the kitchen.

Q.—Did you light the gas in the kitchen? A.—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Clinton—Did you put it out when you left? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where is the cider kept?

The Court—Never mind that, Sir; that is not important.

Mr. Clinton—Very well; it is a little fact of locality and that is all. (To the witness.) Have you ever seen Mrs. Cunningham eat and carve? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did she use the right hand or left? A.—As far as I perceived she used the right hand.

Q.—Have you ever noticed that she was left-handed? A.—Never did.

District Attorney—She carved as well with the one as with the other? A.—Yes.

EVIDENCE OF MRS. VAN NESS.

Mrs. Hester Van Ness was next called by the defence. She said she was acquainted with Mrs. Burdell and her daughters, and had known her, more or less, since her eldest daughter, Augusta Cunningham, was two years old. She first saw Dr. Harvey Burdell two years ago in Twenty-fourth-street, at Mrs Cunningham's house. Since that occasion she had often seen Mrs. Burdell and the Doctor together. She had been with them to Saratoga. She once remained there a week with Mrs. Cunningham. Dr. Burdell called on her every day, sometimes twice a day, and generally spent his evenings with her. He rode out with Mrs. Cunningham and witness. She had also seen them together at Mrs. Cunningham's house in this City. Had never observed anything that indicated unpleasant feelings between them. She understood they were engaged to be married, and their conduct was in harmony with such an understanding. Dr. Burdell had alluded to the marriage in her (witness') presence. He used to talk to Mrs. Burdell about her dress; wished her to throw aside her mourning and dress in colored gowns. He one day expressed his satisfaction that she had cast off "her black rags," and put on a brown dress. One afternoon, in the latter part of last Fall, witness was in the basement of No. 31 Bond-street, with Mrs. Burdell. The Doctor came down, and they conversed together. There was nothing to show that their former pleasant relations had changed. Witness was in the house twice on the Friday prior to the Doctor's death, the first time, at one o'clock P. M., the second time, at 4 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Beecher, of Saratoga, was there on the last occasion. Witness first heard of the Doctor's death about nine o'clock on Saturday morning. Little George came for her. She went to Mrs. Burdell's room. Mrs. Burdell was there with her two daughters, Snodgrass, Dr. Roberts, and a lady who was bathing Mrs. Burdell's forehead. Mrs. Burdell was lying on the bed. She appeared insensible, and took no notice of witness for some time. Afterwards, when witness took her hand, she opened her eyes and said, "Oh, isn't this horrible?" Witness could not recollect what happened during that day, so many persons were in and out of the house, and there was so much excitement. There was all the excitement and alarm that such a scene would naturally occasion.

Cross-examined by the District Attorney.—Q.—Where do you live, Mrs. Van Ness? A.—At No. 107 Fourth-avenue.

Q.—Are you not a friend of Mrs. Cunningham's family? A.—I am.

Q.—You are her dress-maker, are you not? A.—I have been employed as such.

Q.—Do you know Dr. Roberts? A.—I have met him at Mrs. Burdell's house a few times.

Q.—He went with you to Saratoga, did he not? A.—He did.

Q.—In what month was that? A.—In July.

Q.—I notice that you call the defendant Mrs. Burdell; did you know her by that name prior to the murder? A.—I did not. I only knew her then as Mrs. Cunningham.

George Hewlett, Jr., was next called by Mr. Clinton. His testimony was without the slightest importance. He merely said that he called at the house No. 31 Bond-street, on the night of Jan. 30, to leave some bird seed which Mr. Eckel had ordered, and that he observed nothing unusual in the appearance of things.

DR. SMITH'S TESTIMONY.

Dr. Daniel D. Smith was then examined by Mr. Clinton. He said he was a Doctor of medicine and resided at No. 35 Bond-street, two doors from Dr. Burdell's. For a long time he had been in concert with his son, conducting some experiments with a view of testing the power of the electric current on various articles, such as alcohol, phosphorus, &c. He had occasion, in these experiments, to use pieces of leather, and shellac, for joining tubes, and scraps of woolen rags, for cleaning instruments. The woolen and leather so used, became saturated or impregnated with chemical fluids. When a quantity of leather or rags accumulated, it was his custom to burn them up. On the afternoon of Friday, January 30th, intending to spend the night out of town, he gathered a heap of woolen rags and pieces of leather, and threw it upon the remains of an anthracite coal fire, opened the window of the room wide, locked the door, went off and took the cars. The room in which he burnt these rags was the front room third story, adjoining No. 33. On his return to the house, the next morning, he found that the smell of the smouldering rags and leather pervaded the whole premises, and so strong and unpleasant was it, in the room in which they had been consumed, that he had to fumigate it. It was a mixed smell of burning leather and woolen, saturated with chemicals.

Cross-examined by the District Attorney.—Doctor, what time do you say you left your room that afternoon? A.—About half-past three o'clock.

Q.—How was the fire when you left it? A.—It was low, and was not replenished.

Fernando O. Smith, the son of the last witness, was next called. He said that on the night before the murder of Dr. Burdell was discovered, he came home between ten and eleven o'clock, wearing a large grey shawl and a cap; he remembered the offensive smell in his father's room the next morning; his father, he stated, was in the frequent habit of making chemical experiments, and used woolen rags and pieces of leather in making them. These rags were burnt when they accumulated; he had burnt them himself often.

EXAMINATION OF CATHARINE DENNISON.

Mrs. Catharine Dennison was next called. She testified that she was a cousin of Dr. Burdell's; that she had long known him prior to his death, over 20 years. The first time she ever met Mrs. C. was in 1856, and she had seen her frequently since in company with the Doctor; had seen them together at No. 31 Bond street frequently, and had seen them together at her own house in Brooklyn, in the winter of 1856. The witness testified that their relations to each other were of a most friendly character, and she detailed at some length a conversation which took place on one occasion between the Doctor and Mrs. C., in her presence, at No. 31 Bond street. She never observed anything that was quarrelsome between the Doctor and Mrs. C.; had been at No. 31 Bond street eight or nine times.

EXAMINATION OF HERBERT W. TREADWELL.

Herbert W. Treadwell was next called and examined. Said he had walked in company with four other gentlemen in Bond street, the Friday night on which the murder occurred. It was about twenty minutes after twelve o'clock when he got into Bond street from Broadway; he remained on the corner of Bond street and the Bowery from fifteen to twenty minutes; noticed nothing unusually offensive in the atmosphere; it was n dark and obscure night.

Mr. Dean—I would like to have it determined now whether the Jury are to have the privilege of visiting the premises.

The Foreman of the Jury remarked that the Jury had no objections to going.

The Court announced that there would be a private arrangement made between the Jury and the Court to visit the premises.

TESTIMONY OF MISS HELEN CUNNINGHAM.

Q.—You are the second daughter of the defendant? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where have you resided for the last year? A.—No. 31 Bond-street.

Q.—Are you there still? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Had you made arrangements to leave home the Saturday after the murder? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Were you home Friday at the house with your mother? A.—I was a short time away, from half-past two in the afternoon until four; with that exception I was in the house all day and evening.

Q.—At what time did you dine that day? A.—I think it was about six o'clock, or a little after.

Q.—During the day what persons do you remember seeing at the house? A.—I saw Dr. Beecher a few moments in the parlor, and Mrs. Van Ness; I do not remember seeing any one else that day.

Q.—Do you remember having a dressmaker in the house? A.—Yes, Sir; Susan Cary.

Q.—Was she there all the day? A.—She was there until dinner.

Q.—You were out shopping in the afternoon? A.—No, Sir; I was taking music lessons in the afternoon.

Q.—You went out in the evening? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Can you tell about the time you went out. A.—I think it was about 7 o'clock.

Q.—Who accompanied you? A.—George Snodgrass.

Q.—Where did you go? A.—I went out to buy a veil; I purchased it and then came back.

Q.—Who were to dinner that day at your house? A.—My mother, Augusta, George, William, Mr. Eckel and Susan Cary. George Snodgrass came in after we got through our dinner.

Q.—Did he eat his dinner? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—It was after he had done his dinner that you went out? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Do you recollect where your mother was when you went out? A.—I think she was in the front room, third floor.

Q.—When you came back with Mr. Snodgrass, where did you find her? A.—I found her in the front room of the third story.

Q.—What did you do the rest of the evening, from the time you got in; do you recollect whether your brothers were out when you came home? A.—They were both out.

Q.—From the time you came in, I wish you would state what occurred in the house, as near as you can recollect. A.—I brought in the veil and showed it to mother; I then went to folding up some of my clothes and putting them in the trunk which I was to take away with me.

Q.—Do you recollect what next occurred? A.—After I had been in the house a short time, mother returned with Mr. Eckel and the two boys.

Q.—After Mr. Eckel came into the room what occurred? A.—Mother brought up some candies and oranges to send to my sister, who was at school.

Q.—Do you recollect about your brother's going up to bed and coming back? A.—Yes, Sir; they came back and mother told them to wait until George Snodgrass was ready to go with them, and they did wait.

Q.—Do you know at what time George and your brothers started to go to bed? A.—I think it was very near 11 o'clock.

Q.—When you returned from the street after getting your veil, did your mother have on the same or a different dress from that she wore when you went out? A.—She was dressed in the same way.

Q.—Did she wear that dress until she went to bed? A.—She did, and she had it on since morning.

Q.—What kind of a dress was it? Q.—It was a black silk one.

Q.—Was it the same dress she had on the next morning? A.—It was and she wore it until the Coroner had it taken off.

Q.—Where did you sleep that night. A.—I slept with my mother in the front room of the third story.

Q.—Who slept there besides you and your mother. A.—Sister Augusta.

Q.—What time did you retire? A.—I think it was about a quarter past eleven o'clock.

Q.—Did you go immediately to sleep? A.—My sister and I laid awake and talked a short time.

Q.—In what position did you sleep? Who slept in the middle? A.—My mother.

Q.—Did your mother get up from the time you retired to your knowledge? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you observe any unusual odor in the house? A.—I did not.

Q.—When you got up in the morning did you notice any unusual odor? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did not notice anything unusual until after you heard of the Doctor's death? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you breakfast with the family? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Who was at breakfast? A.—My mother, George, William and George Snodgrass; they were at breakfast together, and then Augusta came down a few moments afterwards.

Q.—Did Mr. Eckel take breakfast with you that morning? A.—No, Sir, he went out before breakfast.

Q.—Did your mother go down before breakfast was ready that morning? A.—She did not; I went down with her when she went down stairs in the morning.

Q.—Did your mother eat her breakfast? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—

Q.—Do you remember when Mr. Ely's note arrived? A.—I do not.

Q.—Did you see the note in the back parlor? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When did you hear first about it? A.—When my mother spoke about it up stairs.

Q.—Did you and Helen go up to your sleeping-room that night. A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—What was the reason for your sleeping down stairs that night? A.—For the reason that sister was going away the next morning to school.

Q.—Who gave the pistol to your mother,—the pistol which has been spoken of? A.—Dr. Burdell.

Q.—Was it while you lived in Twenty-fourth-street, or after you came to Bond street? A.—It was while we lived in Twenty fourth-street.

By a Juror.—Q.—Does your mother sew with her left hand? A.—Sometimes she does.

Q.—Do you know the reason? A.—On account of rheumatism.

Q.—Was she right or left handed previous to the rheumatism? A.—She was right-handed.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN PERKINS.

Mr. Perkins was the next witness called. He testified that he was a jobber in boots and shoes, at No. 29 Cortlandt-street. His residence was now at No. 92 Second-avenue, but he resided at the time of the homicide at No. 82 Bond-street. Did not know Dr. Samuel W. Parmly by sight or otherwise.

Q.—Do you know anything about Dr. Parmly's dog of the King Charles breed?

The Judge.—I do not think that the dog has anything to do with this case at all.

Mr. Clinton.—We want to shew that the dog frequently went with this witness.

The Judge.—I cannot permit any testimony of this kind.

TESTIMONY OF HENRY S. SMITH.

Henry S. Smith was next called to the stand and sworn.—He testified that he had been, since the recess of the Court, to the rear of the premises No. 31 Bond street; there was a shed covering the piazza immediately under the window of Dr. Burdell's room; the distance from the shed to the window was about six feet or less; the height of the shed was about fifteen feet, and the width of it was, perhaps, not more than eight feet; there was a fence dividing lot No. 31 from that of No. 33, which ran up to within four feet of the top of this shed; there were three windows on the second story rear to that shed, and there were other sheds immediately adjoining of divers heights, but nothing to prevent access from one to the other; the door of the stable in the rear of the house No. 31 was fastened by three or four nails on the inside; there was an entrance to the stable from Bleecker street; witness also noticed a ladder in rear of the premises.

By a Juror.—I want to know whether you observed how far a person could pass each way over these sheds.

The Judge.—That is speculative, and is not legal evidence.

Mr. Clinton then asked little George Cunningham, the late to the Court and Jury whether there was any ladder in the yard in the latter part of January last.

Mr. Hall objected to the question first, because it was exceedingly illegal in tone, and second, because it should not be asked of a child when the prosecution had purposely abstained from cross-examining.

The Judge then suggested that one of the daughters should be asked the same question. It was put to Helen Cunningham, and she said there was a step-ladder in the yard, and it was the same one which is there now.

Mr. Clinton now proposed to introduce evidence to show that Mr. Eckel had been separately indicted from the defendent for the same offence.

The fact was admitted by the prosecution.

Counsel for the defence then announced that they had no further testimony to offer.

The District-Attorney after a brief consultation with his Attorney-General, informed the Court that they did not see anything in the defence which called for a reply.

The Court then said it would assign four hours to each side in which to sum up, and he would leave to counsel to arrange among themselves as to the distribution of the time.

Mr. Dean then moved that the Court adjourn until to-morrow morning, and urged the necessity of some leisure in which to arrange the case for the defence. After considerable conversation, during which Mr. Romeyn unsuccessfully moved the Court to call on the prosecution to state the points on which they meant to rely, before the defence commenced summing up, the Court finally, and with apparent reluctance, ordered an adjournment until nine o'clock this morning.

The treasures of the Philadelphia Library have received a valuable accession through Hon. GEORGE M. DALLAS, from the British Government, being a complete set of the publications of the British Patent Office. This work is in 187 royal octavo volumes of text, 137 folios of plates, and 20 volumes of index. The work was not only kindly granted to the Philadelphia Library by the British Commissioner of Patents, but, at his suggestion, an exception was made to the rule adopted by the Board, requiring the books to be expensively bound before leaving England.

MRS. GASKELL'S MEMOIRS OF CURRER BELL.

D. APPLETON & CO., NOS. 346 AND 348 BROADWAY,

PUBLISH ON SATURDAY,

THE LIFE OF CHARLOTTE BRONTE.

Author of "Jane Eyre," "Shirley," "Villette," &c.

BY MRS. GASKELL.

Anthor of "Mary Barton," "Ruth," "North and South."

With a Portrait of Miss Brontë, a view of Haworth Church and Parsonage, and fac-simile of handwritiug of Miss Brontë. In two volumes, 12mo., cloth. $1 50.

From the London Athenæum.

The story of a woman's life unfolded in this book is calculated to make the old feel young and the young old. Persons who have been conversant with society and manners as they existed in the remote corners of England within the century, will feel themselves strangely recalled to the narrow homes, the grim prejudices, the few pleasures and privileges belonging to a period of heavy taxation, costly literature, and limited intercourse, by the picture of a provincial parsonage and its inmates here set before them. Some of those, on the other hand, who are hurrying into life, and brimming with creative power, may feel pained (as it were by some cold prophecy) while they follow the record of a career of self-denial and struggle, sustained to the last with courage, principle and genius, but without hope. Nevertheless a true tale of what may be achieved in spite of disabilities, be the facts ever so cheerless let the pilgrim's lot have been cast on ever so rugged a road, let his cup have been ever so full of the waters of bitterness, can hardly be followed to its close without some strength being gained for the reader. By all, this book will be read with interest. As a work of art, we do not recollect a life of a woman by a woman so well executed. The materials were not large, and the difficulties of selection were obvious. There may have been reasons why the publication of this biography should not have been postponed, but these reasons subject surviving relatives of the deceased to close description and free comment; since to write the life of a woman and to omit a clear development of the circumstances which formed her character and influenced her hopes is impossible.

Protracted life and success, and increased experience with what is best in society, (not what is most convenient in observance,) might have ripened, and mellowed, and smoothed the creations of this singular novelist without destroying their charm of force and individuality. But conjecture stops at the grave-side. At the time when "the silver lining of the cloud" began to show itself, when domestic cherishing and prosperity seemed to await her after so many hard, dark, cruel years, the end came. All this is gently and sadly told by Mrs. Gaskell, with whom the task has been a labor of love (a little, also, of defence)—and who, we repeat, has produced one of the best biographies of a woman by a woman, which we can recall to mind.

From the New-York Tribune.

Strong in its intense individuality, bold and self-sustaining in the absence of wide and tender sympathies, and of a deeply tragic cast from purely impersonal causes, the life of Charlotte Brontë, as portrayed in these volumes by her congenial biographer, has not a little of the sombre fascination which throws such a potent spell around the pages of "Jane Eyre" and "Villette." Mrs. Gaskell, as will be seen on the perusal of the Memoirs, had before her a task of uncommon delicacy. The vein of bitterness, the pictures of hard and bare reality, the want of hopeful glimpses of the future, which mark the writings of Currer Bell, had their foundation in her own experience, were the combined products of her character and her history. Involving the misconduct of others, as they often do, it was no easy matter to decide how far justice to the dead was compatible with mercy to the living. On this point, Mrs. Gaskell has acquitted herself with fidelity to the truth, with commendable frankness of statement where publicity was allowable, but with a modest reserve in regard to incidents which belong essentially to the domain of private life. Her narrative is wholly unaffected, perhaps slightly tinctured with the severity that naturally grows out of the subject, but often relieved by picturesque details of the local scenery and customs in the quaint region which will henceforth be associated with the name of Charlotte Brontë. * * * * Let her memory be left where it is committed with tender carnestness by her admirable biographer, not with "the critical unsympathetic public, who are inclined to judge harshly because they have only seen superficially and not thought deeply, but with that larger and more solemn public, who know how to look with tender humility at faults and errors; how to admire generously extraordinary genius, and how to reverence with warm, full hearts, all noble virtue."

AN AMERICAN MERCHANT

IN EUROPE, ASIA, AND AUSTRALIA:

Letters of an American merchant from Java, Singapore, China, Bengal, Egypt, the Holy Land, the Crimea and its Battle-Grounds, England, Melbourne, Sydney, &c.

BY GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN, OF BOSTON.

With Introduction by FREEMAN HUNT, A. M., Editor of Merchants' Magazine.

One Volume, 12mo., 523 Pages. Price, $1 25.

"These letters of a "Young American Merchant," contain much information of use to the mercantile community. They are remarkable for the intelligence, difficult of access, which they embody; their graphic history of the rise and progress of that new world, destined to wield the sceptre of the Southern Seas; their statistical knowledge; the glow and sprightliness of their descriptions, and the amusing incidents they relate. The history of the countries through which the traveler passes is compressed into a few pages, and the commercial details are enlivened by humor and wit. Received with distinction by the merchant princes of the lands he visited, his opportunities were rare and enviable—opportunities which he has not failed to improve.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, charged with having murdered Dr. BURDELL, was continued yesterday until 4 o'clock, when the evidence in the case was closed. It will, doubtless, go to the Jury to-day. The testimony received yesterday was of the same character, generally, as that taken previously, in relation to the occurrences of the day and evening preceding the murder, and the subsequent morning. The reason why ECKEL left the house at an earlier hour than usual, on the morning after the murder, was explained by a merchant, who said he met him on business, at 8 o'clock, in accordance with a request left by the witness at ECKEL's residence on the previous night. The odor noticed by Dr. PARMLY and others in Bond-street, on the night of the murder, was accounted for by a witness living in a house near the Doctor's residence, who said that on that night he had burned leather and woolen cloth, in a room in which he was trying chemical experiments. The Judge announced that he would limit counsel to four hours on each side, to close the case. The Court meets at 9 o'clock this morning.

DAVID STEINGER MCKIM, who has been on trial for several days at Hollidaysburg, Pa., for the murder of young NORCROSS at Altoona last Summer, was on Thursday night convicted, and yesterday morning sentenced to be executed. He protested his innocence, and asserted that his conviction had been effected by the perjury of witnesses.

The Cabinet was in consultation for several hours yesterday with Gov. WALKER on Kansas affairs. The Governor will start for the Territory on Monday or Tuesday next.

A dispatch from Washington states that Secretary TOUCEY has removed J. MCLEOD MURPHY from his position at the Navy-yard, and that his successor will be immediately appointed.

In the Board of Councilmen, last evening, the sitting was very brief. Nothing was done beyond a struggle to defeat the appropriation of $500 to pay for the assistance of a clerk to the Special Committee appointed to examine the Comptroller's accounts. The appropriation was lost for want of a constitutional vote, and will be reconsidered. The Special Committee on the reorganization of the Finance and City Inspector's Departments brought up their report, which was laid on the table. The Board then adjourned.

The Police Commissioners held two secret meetings yesterday, but they say no business of public interest was transacted. As Judge WHITING has refused the office of Superintendent, the choice of another proper man for that birth occupies most of their attention.

Mr. BENSON, one of the Quarantine Commissioners, who went to Albany to confer with Governor KING upon the burning of the building at the new Quarantine Station, had not returned yesterday, and nothing further is known as to the course he will adopt. The Commissioners will not be interrupted in their plans by what has transpired, but will go on as though nothing had occurred.

There is a clause in the Policies of Insurance which vitiates the claim in case the fire is caused by a riot, a mob, or by civil commotion.

MARY ATKINSON, the colored servant of Mr. WOLFE, who was in his house at Seguine's Point when it was set on fire on Wednesday night, has given the particulars of the affair as she witnessed it, and describes minutely one of the incendiaries who conversed with her. The moon was shining—she stood near enough to discern his features, and says she would know him if she saw him again. She fully puts at rest the absurd story that the fire originated from a lighted cigar, or matches.

A desperate attempt to destroy life and property was made a few nights since at Mr. L. M. ARNOLD's Poughkeepsie Foundry. Some scoundrel entered the engine-room of the establishment, and after drawing the water from the boiler, placed a quantity of powder therein, with the intention to blow up the establishment. Mr. ARNOLD has offered a reward for the arrest and conviction of the offender.

The examination in the slaver Merchant case was commenced yesterday before U. S. Commissioner MORTON. Capt. FAUNCE, of the revenue cutter Washington, who seized the vessel, and Marshal RYNDERS were the only witnesses called.

The Isaac Newton is still lying at Verplanck's Point, undergoing whatever repairs can be made before she is brought to this City and placed on the Dry Dock. It is the intention to pump the water out of her, and stop the leaks with canvas.

THE MARINE SURVEYORS AND THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—Quite the most remarkable action that has grown out of any of the laws of the last Legislature affecting this City, is that of the Board of Marine Surveyors, who have been abolished by the Port Warden law, and the exercise of their former functions declared illegal and made punishable by a heavy fine. The Marine Surveyors had two courses open to them, the only proper one being to disband and obey the law; the other was to follow the example of Mayor WOOD and Mr. SELAH, and rebel against the law, and run the risk of fine and imprisonment. But they have not done either. They have sent a communication to the Chamber of Commerce, and asked the advice of that respectable body in reference to what they call their "unpleasant predicament." Their predicament may be an extremely unpleasant one, but their duty is as plain as a pike-staff, and the Chamber of Commerce should promptly tell them that there is but one proper course for them to follow, and that is to obey the law. The Chamber, however, which has no more legal authority to act in a case of this kind than it has to declare war with a foreign nation, gravely appointed a committee of five highly respectable ship-owners to consider the matter. But they will doubtless remember the old adage, which belongs to their special business, about obeying orders if you break owners, and counsel the Marine Surveyors to submit to the higher powers. If there is any class of citizens who should feel the importance of strict accountability under the law, it is that of merchants, for they are always the first to feel the effects of any disregard of the properly constituted authorities.

The Burdell Murder.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM for the murder of Dr. BURDELL is substantially closed. Both the prosecution and the defence had submitted last night all the testimony on either side. Each will review it to-day and endeavor from it to infer, one the guilt and the other the innocence, of the accused party;—the Judge will do what he can to dissipate the mists with which contending counsel will surround it;—and then it will be for the Jury to decide whether our boasted system of criminal law has succeeded in detecting the author of this most atrocious and bloody crime.

We shall express no opinion upon the case as it stands,—not because we have none, but partly because its expression at this stage of the trial might be deemed improper, and partly because it is unnecessary. There is, however, no impropriety in saying that our accomplished District-Attorney has a task before him which will require all his own resources, with the superadded aid of the learned and versatile Attorney-General of the State, successfully and creditably to discharge. He will find it essential not so much to establish the confident assertions and bold promises of his opening speech, as to remove or soften the impression which its tone and temper have made upon the public mind. It was not a speech creditable either to his professional or his personal character,—and none read it with more pain than those who feel the warmest interest in his success.

We have always believed and we believe still that it is the duty of prosecuting counsel, acting in the name of the State, to confine himself in his opening in criminal cases, to a calm, temperate, and unimpassioned statement of the facts. He ought to tell the Jury what he means to prove, and he may legitimately point out the inferences which in his opinion are fairly deducible from the testimony. It is the greatest glory of our system of criminal jurisprudence as distinguished from every other in the world, that a prisoner is deemed innocent until proved guilty. Bearing this in mind, any invective or abuse, directed against him or her, previous to conviction, is not simply cruel and indecent, but has not the shadow of authority in law.

When the State Prosecutor comes to reply on the whole case, and has to meet and combat the misrepresentations, sophisms, special pleadings, artful appeals to the passions, and other tricks and devices of the defendant's counsel, a little warmth may be pardonable, because we cannot expect ordinary natures to remain unmoved in a struggle for victory. But as regards the opening statement, nothing can excuse or justify any departure from the rules which not simply legal etiquette, both in this country and in England, but the commonest dictates of humanity have, for more than a century and a half, prescribed for his guidance.

Mr. HALL's opening speech in this pending case afforded as gross a violation of all these salutary rules as can be discovered in the whole history of State trials since the palmy days of JEFFREYS and SCROGGS. Whatever this woman may be for the general public, whatever opinions people may entertain in drawing-rooms, and workshops, and bedrooms, of her share in the recent tragedy, when this trial opened, so far as Mr. HALL, the Court and the Jury were concerned, she was to be held as guiltless as any other member of the community. When the District-Attorney rose in Court, he rose to make a statement regarding a woman to whom in the eye of the law no blame attaches and no punishment is due until twelve men shall have fixed criminality upon her under oath. He owed it to her, not less than to the Bar, the public, and the common sentiment of humanity by which our jurisprudence is so largely influenced, to deal as tenderly and temperately with her as a gentleman can deal with a woman under circumstances of such peculiar danger, shame and tribulation. We pride ourselves upon the advances we have made in legislation. We have struck from our code the harsher features of common law procedure. The "dock," that odious instrument of torture and exposure by which unfortunate prisoners are still harassed in Europe, is unknown amongst us. We have accorded to the accused a license in the selection of the jury unknown elsewhere. The whole spirit which runs through the dealings of our law with our prisoners is eminently humane and indulgent. But if Mr. HALL's opening speech in this case is to be taken as a fair specimen, the bar, so far from having progressed with the age, is actually falling back upon a mode of conducting cases which we thought until now, expired on the day when the mob dragged the ruffian JEFFREYS to the Tower of London, and when SOMERS, the Judge and the Christian gentleman, ascended the Bench.

We find in the State Trials, that in the year of grace 1603, the Attorney-General COKE, in an age which this age calls rude and barbarous, used towards Sir WALTER RALEIGH when on trial for his life, such expressions as "the notorionsest traitor that ever came to the bar;" "a monster with an English face and a Spanish heart;" "the absolntest traitor that ever was;" "a viper;" "a vile and execrable traitor; "an odious fellow, whose name was hateful to all the realm of England," &c., &c. Who has ever read this story, or ever read of the State trials under CHARLES II., or JAMES II., and read the foul-mouthed abuse heaped upon the head of the unhappy prisoners, by venal judges and by the craven counsel, without thanking God that he lived in an age in which not only were individual rights more carefully guarded, but in which both bench and bar were animated by "nobler manners," in which the wretched defendant struggling for life under a load of anxiety and of public odium, was protected not simply against legalized injustice, but against the ribaldry of bireling tongues? What shall we, who have been congratulating ourselves upon so happy a change, say when we read that the public prosecutor of the State rises in open Court, and in presence of her own daughters, and in the face of a refined and cultivated metropolis, assails a woman on trial for her life, after three months of mortal anxiety, of incessant worrying by night and day, the object of an amount of public execration almost unparalleled, with such epithets as "fiend in woman's shape,"—a "woman of greedy and lascivious eyes,"—"of greedy and lustful eyes,"—a "lying woman," &c., and compares her in a piece of bombast, which would disgust us more, if it amused us less, and which is no less striking as an instance of rhetorical absurdity than of forensic folly, to "SERVIA, of Kingly Rome," who drove a chariot over the dead body of her father," to MESSALINA, to JEZEBEL, to AGNES, Queen of Hungary, who "bathed her feet in the blood of sixty-three knights," and to Herodias, who demanded John the Baptist's head in a charger, and finally to Regan and Goneril.

We believe the whole community read this unmanly and unworthy diatribe with unmixed pain. It did violence, not simply to literary taste, but to the public sense of justice and of right. Whatever Mr. HALL himself may think of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, when he speaks in the name of the People, the people have a right to expect dignity and sobriety at his hands. He has no right to present to the world the repulsive and degrading spectacle of two millions of people clamoring, through him as their representative, for a woman's blood with the labored and ferocious frenzy of a partisan.

It is not our province at this stage of the trial to say anything of the promises of proof with which Mr. HALL's opening speech was filled, or of the manner in which those promises have been fulfilled. Upon that point he has the right of being heard and of submitting it to the judgment of the Jury. But whatever may be the result of the trial, we believe we have only uttered the verdict which the public has already pronounced upon the extraordinary address with which it opened.

The Quarantine War.

Our neighbor of the Tribune has taken up arms in defence of the Government of New-York against the infuriated hordes of torch-bearing Islanders, whose successful onslaught upon the undefended State property at Seguine's Point we yesterday chronicled for the information of the present age and the edification of posterity.

Our cotemporary has not rushed thoughtlessly or prematurely into the fray. He has taken ample time to consider the state of the question at issue between the Quarantine Commissioners and the people of the Point, as set forth by ourselves about a fortnight since, and he now comes forward with a deliberate dignity worthy of the Circumlocution office to rebuke the intemperate inhabitants of a locality dear to the heart of every oyster-eating citizen, for their rash and riotous resistance to the will of the supreme authorities of the State—to the Commissioners who had duly inquired into their condition, and to the Governor who gravely approved the decision of those Commissioners.

We are happy to agree with our cotemporary in his conviction that there is "a moral in the whole business" of this Quarantine war, and we cordially admit the sagacity of his inference from the act of premeditated arson committed at Seguine's Point on Wednesday night, to the existence of "an incendiary" in that neighborhood; but we lament that we must question the accuracy of some of his statements in regard to matters of fact. It is not quite true, for instance, that the "the three Commissioners, one of whom was a Staten Islander, after due inquiry, decided on the location of the Quarantine at Seguine's Point." We do not mean to discuss the meaning of the phrase "due inquiry," because such a discussion would be at once tedious and unprofitable. The wolf in the fable doubtless thought he had made "due inquiry" into the hydrostatic experiments of the lamb before he proceeded to execute his own sentence upon that appetizing offender. But it is perfectly well known that the "Staten Island" member of the Commission was by no means satisfied with the selection of Seguine's Point.

On the contrary, he knew the place well enough to understand that a locality which was neither isolated from the land population nor accessible from the sea would hardly meet the objects for which a Quarantine is established.

Neither is it altogether correct to say that the Governor "examined" the location. His Excellency visited the Point in a boat, partook of a comfortable lunch which, no doubt, included some of the admirable Prince's Bay oysters, whereof the building of the Quarantino at Seguine's Point will forever deprive all of us but those who are too unfastidious to object to the consumption of bivalves fattened upon the garbage of West India brigs and Georgia schooners, and returned to the bosom of his family, we trust, well content and pleased with the proprietors of the agreeable region which he had inspected, and gratified with the natural beauties of the Bay, but probably not much enlightened upon the relative merits for the purposes proposed, of Seguine's Point, Sandy Hook and Coney Island.

There is no doubt that some excuse exists for the apparently unreasonable action of the Commissioners in establishing the temporary Quarantine Buildings in the midst of the "homes and hearths" of the people of Seguine's Point, and far away from any anchorage ground. But that excuse has not been given to the world, nor is it just at present likely to be advanced.

Be this, however, as it may, the inhabitants of the doomed locality must be made to understand that they cannot be allowed to rid themselves of ever so dangerous and disagreeable an incumbrance as a pest-house by rebellious combinations and audacious crime. Accustomed as they are to the simplicity of rural life, it may be difficult for them to comprehend the airy and unfettered views of duty which are taken by metropolitan politicians—but neither their ignorance nor their indignation can excuse such acts of vandalism as they perpetrated on Wednesday night.

The authority of the State must be maintained at all hazards, and the aggrieved oyster-planters of Seguine's Point must be taught that the impartial justice of the Commonwealth will not overlook the wrong which they have done in considering the wrong which they allege themselves to have suffered.

The rustic rebels who destroyed Mr. WOLFE's house and the cottages of the poor farmer MORRISON must be pursued and punished, and that speedily. But they must be punished in the forms of the law, according to the statutes in such cases made and provided, and not, as another of our neighbors suggests, by the conversion of the temporary erections at Seguine's Point into permanent Quarantine Buildings. There would be small justice and less common sense in visiting upon the Staten Islanders a vengeance so wide of their offence and so sure to include in its sweep the innocent commercial community of our own City. If Seguine's Point be as bad a locality for a permanent Quarantine as we believe it to be, we cannot afford so costly an exhibition of the wrath and power of our Government. It would be both much more just and much less expensive for us to march in a battalion of the Seventh Regiment, with a flank of artillery, upon the scene of action, and annihilate at once the whole recalcitrant generation of crustaceous cultivators, than to huddle the City and the State with edifices which we shall be obliged in a few years to abandon, as worse than useless for the legitimate objects of their erection.

The "Quarantine Question" will in truth be very easily settled if the partisans will have the goodness to let it alone. Our first duty is to make the oyster planters behave themselves. Our second to make the Commissioners account thoroughly for their trust. The State can neither submit to be bullied, nor condescend to bully in its turn; and the simple "moral" which we draw from "this whole business" is that politicians are a plague of the people against which no Quarantine at Seguine's Point or elsewhere seems likely to protect us, till the community shall begin to insist on a complete divorce between business and Buncombe, and the affairs of the State shall be taken out of the control of party, to be managed with some regard to economy, efficiency, and public order.

The Principle of Rotation.

Men talk of Principles now-a-days pretty much as ancient spinsters were in the habit of speaking of Electricity; whatever is untenable in proof, or incomprehensible to reason, that one sufficing word is made the cloak for not explaining.

Electricity was supposed, before its laws had been established and its scope made the subject of scientific examination, to account for all the phenomena presented by chemistry and physics: it was electricity that kept the stars in their eternal gyration, and the same subtle influence played Will-o-the-Wisp over all the swamps and marshes within the knowledge of the discussing blue-stockings. All argument dropped when the overshadowing word was introduced, and the feminine illuminatæ thereafter stirred their tea with more thoughtful spoons.

In much the same way is the word Principle used by politicians to account for, or necessitate all steps that seem essential to their interests; and as a general rule, those talk most largely concerning it, who evince least regard for its dictation in any of the practical concerns of life. The principle that lies on the side of interest is always right, and the interest that clashes with principle can always plead the support of some higher principle to justify the apparent infraction. This word has become the "little-joker" of politics, and when we think we see it plainly under one thimble—Hey Presto! and it turns up beneath another.

Now, one favorite expression—at least a favorite amongst all the "Onts" of a party after a successful struggle—is the one which forms the caption of this article. "The principle of rotation" is talked about as if it were something good to eat—and it undoubtedly means bread and very thick butter, to a great majority of its canvassers;—as if it were something tangible, ponderable, measurable, visible, smellable and audible—a thing possessing all the properties of matter, and of an existence as incontestible as the growth of the leafing trees.

Now, whether from some obtuseness of the physical faculties, or some moral inability under which we labor, it has never fallen to our lot either to see, or smell, or taste, or touch any substance of truth in connection with this Principle so universally asserted by all the "Outs," and by all the "Ins" so emphatically denied with clamorous objurgations: nor have we ever heard any reasons that satisfied our judgment of the expediency of removing faithful servants acquainted with the duties of their respective offices, for no other purpose than that their places may be supplied by new men of whose efficiency we know nothing, and who must necessarily be embarrassed in their first efforts to abstract their mighty minds from cancusses and primary meetings, and devote their undivided attention to such minor matters as ledgers, entries and account books, and the other details of business in which millions of the public interest are involved.

But, like all other great popular delusions, there is undoubtedly some basis of truth on which the fallacious superstructure rests. The principle of rotation, properly understood, should mean, we believe, that all public servants must consider themselves amenable to public criticism, and so attend to their duties that no public requirement may demand their summary immolation. This, undoubtedly, is the Republican doctrine, and may be favorably compared with the European systems under which the minion holds office, utterly regardless of the public weal or public wish, and only dependent on the continued favor of the King or Noble to whose patronage he was first indebted for appointment.

As things at present are, no man of steady business habits would much covet the subordinate posts through which the public business is really transacted; or, should any man of steady habits be so unfortunate as to do so, there is nothing more certain upon earth than that he would stand an exceedingly slim chance of having his wishes gratified. Our subordinates of the Custom-House come from quite another class; and if tasting, not guaging liquors, were the thing required, few candidates could present credentials of efficiency more flaming than we find on the faces of a great majority of these applicants. They are the refuse of what political geologists might call the primary formation, and the articulation of their official joints is quite as thick and inconvenient as their speech.

Mr. SCHELL, we understand, is most anxious to bring about a reform in the personnel of his assistants; and all who have done business at the Custom-House, will say God speed his work. At present we can but get, under the very most favorable circumstances, two decent years of practical efficient work for four of practical, subsisting pay. It takes about a year for a man of average intelligence to learn the complicated system of which he is, and must inevitably be at first, a disarranging part. Two years of decent efficiency may then, with good management, be hoped for; but, with the Principle of Rotation hanging over his head like the suspended sword of Damocles,—during the fourth and last year of his tenure his official stool becomes the insecurest of abiding-places, and he is either laying about him to find some other employment, or canvassing in Pewter Mugs and cider-cellars for an influence that may retain him at his post.

As a guarantee to the public for the full performance of all duties, the principle of rotation within the limits specified, is one of the most commendable features in our self-governing and self-defending system; but when degraded into its present form it becomes the mere watchword for universal carelessness, and indiscriminate intrigue.

Land Speculators.

Land, as an article of commercial speculation, has hardly an existence in England. The 32,590,080 acres which comprise the entire extent of that powerful kingdom, are held by a few proprietors, and sales are very rare indeed. The greatest portion of the land is entailed property, which passes from heir to heir, and is never sold at all. Leases of property are occasionally sold, and now and then a free-hold estate is disposed of at auction; but the trade in land is unknown. But land speculations with us monopolize a very considerable part of the active capital and business enterprise of the country. The annual sales of new lands are nearly equal in extent to the whole of Great Britain, and as entails are not allowed with us, the entire real estate of the country changes hands by actual sales every few years. In estimating the difference in the commerce of the two countries, we are apt to leave out of the estimate altogether the enormous business transacted in lands, which is of much greater importance to the country than the transactions in merchandise.

England adds no new lands to her agricultural territory, nor builds any new towns. She only compresses her increasing population into closer quarters, and tries to increase the fertility of her soil by more careful cultivation. The enterprise, talent and capital which are here expended in the trade in lands, are there, of necessity, concentrated upon manufactures and the commerce in merchandise. We add yearly to our lands, by purchases from the Government, about ten millions of acres, or nearly one-third of the whole surface of England. Of these ten millions of new lands, about a third are annually brought under cultivation, and the remainder are held for speculative purposes. Even at the present rate of absorption it will require nearly a hundred years to get rid of our national domain, so that the commerce in lands is not likely to be a temporary trade. In the seven new Territories there are 896,000,000 of acres to be disposed of, and the tendency to speculation is greater than it has been known to be before. The mania for trading in lands and laying out new towns at the West, is more virulent now than it was in 1834, for then speculators preferred town lots, but now the great struggle is for new land. All the Western papers represent the land fever as raging with unusual fury, and affecting all classes—farmers, merchants, mechanics, clergymen and lawyers. Country storekeepers sell out their stocks to invest in wild lands; clergymen abandon their pulpits to preach and speculate in the wilderness; and farmers, with comfortable homesteads, browsing flocks and fruitful orchards, abandon their comfortable homes to locate in the Far West. A Wheeling paper says:

"We heard yesterday that some 26 of the best men in Barnesville, Belmont County, Ohio, had all departed for the West, at the same time. This is also true of all the towns in this section of the country. The travel through Pittsburg, alone, according to the papers of that city, average one thousand a day at the lowest computation, while along the lake shore routes it is estimated at from two to three thousand."

This is but an example of the reports made by all the local journals in the great towns which lie along the various routes of travel to the West.

It is probable that land speculation is carried to too great an extent, and that serious financial troubles may grow out of the diversion of so much capital from the more natural channels of trade; but still, the financial view of the subject is by no means the most important aspect of the case. It is the moral effects of it, the deteriorating influence which this restlessness and anxiety for change must have upon the national character, which is most to be deplored. Settled habits, permanent homes, and the consciousness of having an interest in the welfare of the community in which we live, are necessary to refined habits, good morals and a thorough development of our mental and physical resources. The whole country, except in the large and growing towns, will have a raw, unfinished and semi-barbarous character, and even the patriotic sentiment of the people will be feeble, where there is no permanent population, and the people regard themselves as only temporary sojourners in the land.

But the mania for land speculations is the mania of the day, and there is no way of overcoming it but to let it run its course, and for every man to endeavor to cultivate as much as possible a love of home.

WASHINGTON IN THE PARK.—Mr. THOM's brown-stone statue of WASHINGTON has been placed upon a pedestal in the Park, in a most excellent position, in front of the City Hall. As it is close by the spot where all our great popular open-air meetings take place, the presence of even a brown-stone effigy of the Father of his Country will have a good effect upon the multitude. The speakers on such occasions will be tamed down in their fiery attempts to mislead the minds of the populace, while the calm and dignified head of WASHINGTON is staring upon them, and his right hand holds out a scroll representing the Constitution. It would have been better if the statue were bronze or marble; but, such as it is, it is better than none.

PROGRESS OF REBELLION.—From present indications the great meeting which is to take place on Tuesday next in the Park, to protest against the new Charter, and the Police bill, will not be a very brilliant or crushing affair; and, in fact, there are chances of its not taking place at all. But why not? The rebellion instigated by Mayor WOOD and Alderman WILSON, against State authority is spreading finely in the rural districts. The bold oystermen of Prince's Bay have made a most brilliant commencement by setting fire to Mr. WOLFE's house and barn and burning up a large quantity of good furniture and valuable fodder for cattle. Setting fire to houses is both a cheap and a telling form of rebellion against constituted authority. It has often been tried in the old countries, though we have never known it to lead to the repeal of an obnoxious law. At the preliminary meeting of the Staten Islanders held in Richmond before setting fire to Mr. WOLFE's farm buildings, it was resolved

"That as free American citizens, we will resist such a movement (the new quarantine) by all the powers which God has given us."

The simple-minded Staten Islanders merely acted up to their resolution, and used one of the powers which God had given them by setting fire to a barn and a dwelling-house. If a similar resolution should be adopted by the Park meeting, we may anticipate a similar result, though what buildings may be selected here as suitable objects of popular ill will it is not easy to foretell. It will be safe, however, for the new Commissioners of Police to keep their houses and stores well covered by insurance.

SPECULATING IN RENTS.—Great fortunes have been made in this city within a few years by speculating in leases. DELMONICO was offered, a few months ago, ninety thousand dollars advance in his ten years' lease of the building corner of Chambers-street and Broadway, and one hundred thousand dollars premium has been offered to HAUGHWOUT for the twenty years' lease of the store corner of Broadway and Broome-streets. A gentleman leased a store in Broadway a few weeks since for ten years, and was offered $35,000 for his bargain on the same day that he signed the papers. Yesterday the occupant of the new store on the corner of Grand-street and Broadway, sold his ten years' lease of the building for an advance of $20,000 to SINGER, the sewing-machine manufacturer.

Personal.

The Baton Rouge Gazette has seen an original letter, addressed by Gen. JACKSON to his friend and second, Gen. OVERTON, in the duel with DICKINSON. He tells Gen. O. he will either wipe out the slanders with the blood of DICKINSON or fall himself—no compromise can be listened to—the time early as possible. The General used very strong language. It will be recollected that the duel was fought at twenty-four paces. DICKINSON's ball severely wounded the General, and D. fell mortally wounded. The gentleman who has the letter proposes soon to give it to the public, with other documents.

Bishop BAYLEY delivered a discourse before the Young Men's Catholic Association of Newark, on Tuesday evening, on "the Social Condition of the Catholics of the United States." The Bishop treated at length of the growth of a spirit of intolerance towards Catholics.

The Aspinwall correspondent of the New-Orleans Delta says:

"You will have Hon. H. E. MOSES with you per steamer which carries you this, it is said, as he intends visiting his family before going to Washington. He was most infamously blackguarded by the Press of Bogota, because he went to see the President on a very warm day in a Panama hat, and because he would buy and eat fruit in the market, and would carry little purchases to his house himself instead of having them sent home. A few days since, Mr. MOSES, and a few of the residents of Aspinwall, while on a sailing excursion, were caught by a squall and upset, and with great difficulty were saved; this circumstance even afforded opportunity for a slurrish notice from one of our Isthmus Spanish papers."

The City of Salem, Mass., mourns the loss of two prominent citizens—WILLIAM PICKMAN, a wealthy merchant, who died on Friday, aged 53, and Captain JAMES W. CHEEVER, who died on Saturday. Captain CHEEVER commanded the privateer America in the war of 1812.

Italian Opera.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—The last night of the season drew one of the largest audiences we have ever seen at this house, and terminated Mr. PAINE's brief campaign triumphantly. It has been an eminently prosperous one, and even profitable, in spite of a bad beginning. Had it been continued for a few weeks longer, the result would have been even more gratifying than it is.

The performances opened with "Lucretia Borgia," in which Mad. GAZZANIGA appeared to advantage. She was called out after each act, and twice after the second. In addition to "Lucretia," an act was given from FIORAVANTI's comic opera of "Colmnello," in which Signor ASCONI and the chorus appeared in a revolting picture of a mad-house. The last act on the programme was an act from "Masaniello." On Monday the company appear at Philadelphia.

AFTERNOON PERFORMANCE.—The RAVELS give their last afternoon performance to-day. It is an opportunity which should not be neglected, for the experiment will not be repeated. It involves too much work.

BENEFIT.—Mr. JOHN BROUGHAM—a man of universal talent, excellent as an actor, as an author, as an artist, and as a gentleman—takes his benefit, to-night, at Wallack's Theatre. The occasion will, we are sure, be duly honored. "The Game of Life" and "A Pretty Piece of Business."

The Poisoning at Washington.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In your article of the 2d inst., on the "National Hotel Disease," at Washington, you strongly intimate that, from the "coincidences" in the case, there was a strong probability that there was a conspiracy to take the life of the President elect, Mr. BUCHANAN. You repeat the statement of the Washington Union, that this disease appeared immediately after the arrival of Mr. B. in Washington and not before.

The idea is a horrible one, that any American could be found base enough to endeavor to get rid of a political opponent by poison, or by any other violent means. I trust, Sir, our country will long be spared any such disgrace as this. Such things have occurred in the Old World, among people sunk in vice and political corruption, but I trust such an instance of political depravity will not soon, if ever, be known in this country.

Happily for our reputation, I have it in my power to disprove this charge of an attempt to poison the President elect, based upon the assumption that the disease first made its appearance upon his arrival at Washington. I reached that city on Saturday, the 24th of January. I went immediately to the National Hotel. Within twenty four hours after my arrival I was taken sick, and had all the symptoms that others are said to have had who were taken down subsequently with that disease. And it was not until four weeks had elapsed that I was out of the hands of a physician.

The day after I was attacked, another gentleman of this city was taken ill in the same way, and almost immediately afterwards, the member of Congress from this district was prostrated with it, and is not yet able to leave his house. These are all clear cases of that disease, and yet Mr. Buchanan did not reach Washington until the next week, on Tuesday evening, after my arrival. This shows conclusively that the disease appeared before his appearance there. These facts the public ought to understand, that unjust surmises may be avoided in future, and our fair reputation in this respect be preserved.

That poison was the cause of this sickness I have no manner of doubt. All the facts known make this fact evident to my mind. But how, or for what purpose, if any, it was administered, is more than I can say. The notion that the disease was caused by miasmatic influence is all moonshine. When I was attacked, the thermometer was below zero, and no unusual odor was perceived about the house—whatever there may have been at a subsequent period. I send you my name, that any one who distrusts my statement may be satisfied of its truth.

Correction.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, May 7, 1857.

An error in the New-York TIMES, hardly important enough for contradiction in another paper—even the one which it concerns—may yet be deemed worthy of correction in the journal which committed it. Therefore, the Editors of the Intelligencer, with their kind respects, beg to say that they receive no pay for publishing the Senate debates. The Globe alone receives compensation, ($7 50 a column.) They entered into such an engagement with the Senate six or seven years ago, but for reasons not necessary to go into here, relinquished it voluntarily at the close of the Congress with which it was commenced.

The Attack of McLeod Murphy upon Mr. Sickles.

The following letter, written by a gentleman who was at Willard's Hotel at the time of the assault which was made upon Mr. SICKLES, will be read with interest. It is addressed to a member of Mr. SICKLES' family.

WILLARD'S HOTEL, WASHINGTON, May 6, 1857.

My dear —. Fearing that Mr. SICKLES may not be able without inconvenience to write to you as fully as he could wish, in relation to the affair of this morning, I will take the liberty of stating, as nearly and as briefly as I can, my understanding of the matter. He intends to write you himself, as he is perfectly able to do, but I shall try to prevent him, by keeping him quiet on his back during the day and making him hold a sponge wet with ice-water over his left eye, under which the skin is becoming somewhat discolored, on account of a slight blow received upon the bridge of the nose, and the forehead just above the eye. He does not feel the least pain or inconvenience from it, and if we can keep him still during the day, I think he can go out to-morrow without attracting attention. Unless he does keep quiet, and refrains from writing, I fear his face will remain discolored a day or two, which should be prevented if possible.

You will, of course, have seen in the papers the correspondence between him and MURPHY, before this reaches you, and will agree with all his friends here, that he treated the matter in precisely the proper manner. The first letter of MURPHY was insulting, and the answer was justly dignified and severe. The subsequent correspondence and conversation between Mr. SICKLES and M-j. WATKINS was just as it should be.

After failing in his efforts to force Mr. SICKLES into a duel upon an imaginary statement of facts, and smarting under the severe and dignified tone of his letters, it seems that McLEOD thought that he could disgrace him by administering a severe cowhiding, and branding him as a coward.

Mr. SICKLES retired at a late hour last night, and felt inclined to indulge in a quiet sleep this morning; but, about 8 o'clock he was awakened out of a sound sleep by a loud knock at the door. He did not pay any attention to it, until it was repeated once or twice, and then thinking that I wished to see him a moment for something, he arose, more than half asleep, and opened the door, the boy saying that a gentleman wished to see him very much for a moment. On opening the door, MURPHY crowded past him into the room, saying that he had "called to settle with him," and immediately drew out a cow-hide. Mr. SICKLES, after himself taking the precaution to lock the door, caught MURPHY'S right arm (with his left) as it was raised to strike him, and taking hold of the weapon with his right hand, wrenched it, after a short struggle, from him and inflicted two or three blows on his head with the small end, but thinking that he could do the fellow better justice by reversing ends, he changed it, and while in the act of doing so, and being slightly off his guard, he was struck upon his nose and forehead, as I have before described. Feeling slightly stunned by the blow, and thinking, from its effect, that his assailant had a weapon of some kind in his hand harder than his fist, he threw away the cow-hide and closed with him, clinching him by the throat and thrusting him into a corner near the door, held him there until he turned so black in the face that Mr. SICKLES feared that he might die upon his hands while alone in his room. He therefore said to him: "You —— scoundrel! you have made a murderous assault upon me; are you satisfied with the result?" MURPHY (SICKLES slightly relaxing his hold upon his throat) gasped "Yes, I am satisfied, I am satisfied;" (repeating the word "satisfied," two or three times.) Mr. SICKLES then unlocked the door and turned him into the hall—keeping the cowhide as a little memento of the affair—after which he turned into bed again, thinking to finish his morning nap; but before going to sleep it occurred to him that he would look in the glass to see if the fellow had left any mark on his face, and on noticing that a discoloration was probable under his left eye, he sent up for Mr. HOOVER, in order to request him to send for his physician. I first saw him while Mr. HOOVER was there. The physician called very soon, and said that nothing was required but to hold a wet cloth or sponge over the eye during the day, in order to prevent discoloration, and that he should call again this afternoon or evening. Since that time, (it is now 1 P. M.,) FORNEY, WIKOFF, LANMAN, and his other friends, have called upon him, and the only thing we feel like blaming him for is his letting the fellow off so easily. However, it is probably quite as well as it is.

He has eaten a good breakfast and smoked a cigar or two, and will probably during the day or evening go up to Hoover's and remain there a day or two, till he can show himself publicly. He is in the hands of friends who esteem his health and his honor as dear to them as their own, and you will therefore feel no solicitude about him, further than is natural and justifiable under the circumstances.

I am now going to read him what I have hastily written, and with his permission send it instead of the one which he has intended to write.

Yours very truly,

THE CORRESPONDENCE.

Letter from Mr. Murphy to Mr. Sickles.

WILLARD'S HOTEL,
WASHINGTON, Sunday, May 3, 1857.

SIR: I have learned indirectly that in your efforts to effect my removal from the Brooklyn Navy Yard you have assailed my private character, and imputed to me motives and acts unbecoming a gentleman and a man of honor. It is, however, possible that my information on this point may be incorrect, in which case it is your duty to relieve me from any unjust impression towards you on this account. To any legitimate criticism upon my official conduct, I can, of course, interpose no objection; but I wish you distinctly to understand that I shall hold you personally accountable for any and every attempt to impeach my integrity or reflect on my good name. As I do not desire to implicate others in my affairs at this stage, I have taken the liberty of leaving this note in your box at the office.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. McLEOD MURPHY.

HON. DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Mr. Sickles to Mr. Murphy.

MONDAY, May 4, 1857.

SIR: Your note of yesterday was duly received. Its extraordinary tenor might well have excused me from replying to it. You profess a desire to be relieved from "any unjust impression" in regard to supposed statements of mine, which you do not specify or even give me the least notion of their purport, nor do you refer to the person or persons to whom it is alleged the statements were made by me. Your note seems only a vague menace, apparently intended to deter me in the discharge of my duty as a representative. As such, I have already taken too much notice of it.

Very respectfully, D. E. S.

J. McLEOD MURPHY, Willard's.

Memorandum of an interview between Maj. S. D. Watkins and D. E. Sickles, at the room of the latter.

Major WATKINS presented to Mr. SICKLES a note of introduction from J. McLEOD MURPHY, as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1857.

SIR: I have the honor to introduce to you my friend, Major L. D. WATKINS, who is instructed to convey to you my answer to your note of this morning. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. McLEOD MURPHY.

HON. DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Mr. SICKLES inquired of Major W. what he had to communicate.

Major WATKINS—Mr. MURPHY thinks you have assailed his character. Have you done so?

Mr. SICKLES—Mr. MURPHY has already made an inquiry of me in writing upon that subject, and if he had given me the name of his informant, and the particular charge or remark I am alleged to have made, I would have answered his questions with pleasure.

Major WATKINS—Mr. MURPHY is not at liberty to give the name of his informant, or the particulars of the conversation.

Mr. SICKLES—I do not doubt the right of any person to interrogate me in this vague and general manner; I have no desire to conceal anything I have said about Mr. MURPHY, and if he calls my attention to anything which I have said to anybody with whom I have conversed concerning him I shall be most happy to meet it.

Major WATKINS—Mr. MURPHY considers your note of this morning insulting.

Mr. SICKLES—I am at a loss to imagine what he can discover in my note in any way impeaching his honor.

Major WATKINS—As you do not respond in a satisfactory manner to to my questions, I have a communication in writing from Mr. MURPHY to deliver to you. These matters are always unpleasant.

Hereupon Major WATKINS handed to Mr. SICKLES Mr. MURPHY'S note, as follows:

[redacted] Mr. Murphy's Invitation to Fight.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 4, 1857.

SIR: Your note of this date, in reply to mine of yesterday has been received. The evasive and insulting language which you have seen fit to employ leaves me no alternative. My friend Major L. D. WATKINS, who bears this note, will receive any answer you have to make. He has but a single question to ask—Will you meet me? and if so, when and where? Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. McLEOD MURPHY.

HON. DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Mr. SICKLES—I am very glad to make your acquaintance, Major WATKINS. This note shall receive my attention at the proper time, and in the proper manner.

Major WATKINS—At the proper time you say. When will that be?

Mr. SICKLES—At my convenience. I ought not to say less—I cannot say more.

MR. SICKLES DECLINES THE INVITATION.

WILLARD'S, Monday Evening, May 4 1857.

SIR: Your note of to-day was duly received this evening. There is certainly not a word in my note to which you refer that can possibly be deemed an imputation upon your honor, therefore it presents no ground upon which you have a right to demand either an explanation or a meeting.

Very respectfully, &c., D. E. S.

J. McLEOD MURPHY, Esq.

THE OTHER SIDE—LETTER FROM MR. MURPHY.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, May 7, 1857.

A sense of duty to myself and the public prompts me to request the use of your columns to correct the false statements furnished the Press by Mr. SICKLES and his friends at Washington, respecting our rencontre yesterday morning at Willard's Hotel. The violation of all the recognized rules of honor, by the publication of a private correspondence and private conversations in no way interesting to or concerning the public, has put the community in possession of the primary causes of my attack upon Mr. SICKLES. To that correspondence it is unnecessary that I should allude, since it explains itself. I shall, therefore, confine myself to a brief statement of the events and circumstances of yesterday.

About 8½ in the morning I sent my card by a servant to Mr. SICKLES' room, and followed the servant to the door, being armed with a small cowhide, which was concealed under the breast of my coat. On knocking, Mr. SICKLES opened the door, and simultaneously with the reading of my card he recognized me, and said, somewhat nervously, "Good morning, Sir." I at once advanced to the door, passed the threshold quickly, and as I entered I turned the key on the inside, and putting my back to the door, informed him that I had come to chastise him. In a moment he sprang for me, and as I drew the whip he closed with me, so that I found it almost impossible to use it. A severe struggle then took place for its possession, and after the lapse of some five minutes during which I had struck him several blows, I flung the whip aside as a useless impediment, and a regular hand-to-hand fight ensued—Mr. SICKLES limiting his operations to an ineffectual attempt at "garroting," and to some feline offers at scratching. As the contest had then lasted some ten minutes, and as Mr. SICKLES, who was faint with the loss of blood, requested me to desist, I pushed him from me, picked up my hat, unlocked the door, and bade him "good morning;" leaving the cowhide in a remote corner of the room, where it had been flung in the offset of the encounter. The assertion that I struck Mr SICKLES with any "instrument," is an unmitigated falsehood. I only used my clenched hand. It is also untrue that either of us was down during the struggle, and it is a base fabrication to say that the whip ever passed into his hands at any time during my presence in the room. It will not avail Mr. SICKLES or his friends to utter such falsehoods as these to conceal from the public, to whom he and they had telegraphed it, the degradation of his merited chastisement. Those who have seen us both since the encounter will form their own judgments to who was worsted.

But I must trespass upon you for one point more. The moment the affray had ended, Mr. SICKLES dispatched messengers in all directions for the Marshal of the District, the District-Attorney, and a host of other officials and reporters—the former to attempt my arrest for an alleged violation of the law, and the latter by a sudden seizure of the avenues of public information, to promulgate a series of unblushing prevarications respecting the affair. Mr. SICKLES, however, expresses himself "satisfied," and I am sure that I am.

JOHN McLEOD MURPHY.

Mr. Murphy Dismissed.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, May 8.

Senator TOUCEY declined to accept J. McLEOD MURPHY'S resignation, but has dismissed him in consequence of his attack on Mr. SICKLES. His successor will be appointed forthwith.

MICHAEL O'BRIEN, a waiter at Willard's, in a card in reply to MURPHY'S, published in the Star to day, denies his material statement in justification of the attack.

The Newburg Tragedy.

In the opinion of Dr. ELY, one of the physicians who made the post mortem examination, deceased was murdered in the vicinity of the place where the body was discovered. Death, he thinks, could not have been caused by strangulation, though the marks left on the throat were indications that an attempt of that kind had been made. On the shoulders, neck and face, were numerous contusions, with the flesh more or or less discolored, as if produced by blows of the fist. A considerable cut was noticed on the inside of the mouth, evidently occasioned by a fist-blow, which forced the cheek against the teeth. But a wound quite sufficient to cause death, was found on the right side of the head, near the ear, in the shape of an extensive fracture of the skull. A large quantity of blood had evidently flowed from this wound, as the hair was thoroughly soaked, and the ground under the head was covered with a thick coat of coagulated blood. The effect of this blow must have been such, according to Dr. ELY, that much blood could not have flowed from the wound more than a few hours after it was given, though on Saturday last, at the inquest, blood still oozed out in small quantities. The blow was most probably given by a stone, of which several were observed on the ground where the corpse was found, any one of them capable of producing the effect.

A LETTER FROM AN UNKNOWN SOURCE.

On Wednesday the Coroner received through the Post Office the following letter, post-marked New-York, on the same day. We give an exact copy:

CORONER

Dear Sir: If you Publish a description of the body of the murdered female in the Papers of Pittsburg, Pa., you will be likely to find her friends but the murderer you cannot find. BY SOMEBODY.

P. S.—My revenge is sweet, catch me if you can.
New-York.

The Coroner has forwarded the letter to Pittsburg for publication, but has little confidence in its genuineness.

The rumor that the body of the murdered female is that of Miss RACHEL CLELAND, who is missing from Brooklyn, is not generally credited at Newburg. Miss CLELAND was about sixteen years of age, though looking older, while the corpse, in the opinion of Dr. ELY, is not less than twenty-five. The Coroner and others incline to the view that the party or parties to this murder came from one of the adjoining towns, probably from one farther north; at all events, not from Newburg.

The body of the deceased still lies in the vault of St. George's Church, (Episcopal,) and will be kept there as long as it remains in a condition to be identified, unless sooner recognized.

To the Benevolent.

The subscriber was born in the Union District, South Carolina—born in a state of servitude, and remained so for forty-one years. I was permitted, as is common, to hire myself out, and in eight years, besides paying my master what he claimed, I saved one thousand dollars, with which I purchased my freedom. I was owned by one man, my wife by another. In the year 1845, the owner of my wife removed to Alabama, and took her and my two girls (my only children) with him. During eleven years, I saw her but three times. She is now dead. My two girls are in slavery in Alabama. Their master is dead, and in the settlement of the estate they are to be sold, in January, 1858. The sum demanded for them is twenty-two hundred dollars. To make up this amount, kind friends have given me eight hundred dollars. I am trying to raise the rest. I must raise it. I have the heart of a father; I love my children; I must redeem them from bondage. May I not hope for help from the kind-hearted and benevolent. My eldest daughter is 17, the youngest 12 years of age. Donations can be sent to care of the editors of the Journal of Commerce, or to Rev. J. B. PINNEY, Cor. Sec. N. Y. S. C. S. GEORGE TUCKER.

PHILADELPHIA, April 25, 1857.

To the Editors of the Journal of Commerce:

GENTLEMEN: The bearer, Mr. GEORGE TUCKER, is a worthy man, known to me, desirous of procuring the freedom of his daughters. He purposes, if successful, to emigrate to Liberia. If you could aid him, you would help a deserving man. Yours truly,

THOMAS S. MALCOM,
Cor. Sec. pro tem. of the Pa. Col Soc.

I have examined TUCKER'S papers, and have no doubt that he is a worthy man. I am entirely willing to receive funds for him. J. B PINNEY.

The subscriber has the fullest confidence in the recommendations of Mr. MALCOM, and would very cordially second them in the case of Mr. TUCKER and his children. WILLIAM R. WILLIAMS.

A MAN SAWED IN TWO.—The London (C. W.) Free Press of yesterday, says that, on Wednesday of last week, a most shocking accident occurred in a circular saw-mill at Walsingham. CHARLES HARRIS, a young man lately married, had just been employed that morning to work in the mill, and was set to carry away the boards as they dropped from the saw. He was cautioned against the danger of letting a board touch the saw while in motion, but the unfortunate man had taken away but a few boards when the end of one he had just taken up swayed against the saw, and being repelled with violence, caused the other end to force him against the saw, then in full motion, and, as quick as thought, he was cut in twain. The saw struck first the point of the left shoulder, passing directly through the heart, and cut under the ribs on the right side of the body.

INTERESTING TO GAS-CONSUMERS.—A case of considerable interest to gas consumers was recently tried in Paterson, N. J., by a Jury. A man named BRADY applied for gas to the Company, and receiving a promise to be supplied, went to considerable expense in fitting up pipes, apparatus, &c. He was then informed that he could not have the gas till an unpaid bill of a previous tenant was paid, which he refused to do, and proceeded to light his premises with other means, and was put to great inconvenience and expense. He sued for and recovered $25 damages. The Gas Company have entered an appeal and have also consented to supply the gas, notwithstanding the fact that the bill in question still remains unpaid.

The issue of scrip to the Half Breeds of the Sioux Indians, has just terminated at Wabashaw, M. T. This issue of scrip is in lieu for the claim of the Half Breeds upon the tract of land on the west bank of the river, beginning near and below Wabashaw, and extending to a point 30 miles up the line and 15 miles back, and parallel with the river, including twelve townships of the garden of the Territory of Minnesota.

MARINE MATTERS.

SHIP STAR OF EMPIRE.

Capt. CHARLES FOSTER, the Wreck-Master at Cape Hatteras, arrived in the City on Wednesday. He left there on Saturday, and Elizabeth City on Monday last. At the latter place he learned that the large ship ashore opposite Body's Island, five miles north of New Inlet, was full of water, and was considered a total loss. She was loaded with guano, but he did not learn her name. This is undoubtedly the ship Star of Empire, already reported ashore south of Cape Henry.

The bark Hersillia, from Calcutta, which was sunk by the ice in the bay, and contracted by Messrs. JOHNSON & HIGGINS, was last evening raised by the assistance of BISHOP'S derricks, and towed to Red Hook Point. Steam-pumps are now at work pumping her out.

Captain ALEXANDER MOORE, of Camden, New-Jersey, has left by his will the munificent sum of fifty thousand dollars to the Southern Home for Friendless Children, in Philadelphia.

The London Quarterly Review contains near a column, and the New-York Daily State Register, of May the 1st, says: "No judicious housekeeper should defer purchasing a supply of these invaluable remedies for clearing their houses of all sorts of vermin. With all confidence we can recommend them as indispensable articles for every family."

The New-York Journal for April has the following: "COSTAR'S" Remedies for all domestic pests, such as Rats, Cockroaches, Bed-Bugs, Ants, Fleas, &c., are said to be invaluable; indeed, we can speak from actual knowledge of their rare merits. The name of COSTAR is a household word in New-Yorkers, and his depôt, No. 288 Broadway, New-York, is thronged by thousands daily. As the Summer approaches we advise every one who would be rid of the above-named pests to send and procure a timely supply of the Exterminator. EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF DAXTER HOOK AND LADDER CO. NO. 15.
Whereas, This Company has been called upon to mourn the loss of one of its most honored and beloved associate members, a man in whom we could truly say that we recognized all those qualities of mind and heart which dignify and adorn human nature in its most lofty attributes; and
Whereas, The decease of our late brother fireman, occurring as it did in our sleeping-room, where in his last moments he was surrounded by his associates and friends in the Company circle, as well by his spiritual and medical advisers—demands from us more than an ordinary expression of sorrow; therefore be it
Resolved, That in DANIEL DENTON, our late brother fireman and company associate, we have at all times been proud to recognize that fearless spirit, that proud independence, and that fearlessness of consequences when treading in the path of duty which makes the true fireman and friend, the fond associate and brother of our hearts.
Resolved, That in in view of the happy, and we may say triumphant death of our late brother and friend, we can say to his bereaved relatives and friends that we believe he is now enjoying that repose and rest which belongs to those who have made their peace with this world and the world hereafter, and that in the "happiness of which mortals know not" he is waiting us on our transit from this "world of sin and sorrow."
Resolved, That we tender our sincere condolence to his relations, who were necessarily absented from his dying pillow, and assure them that although neither father, mother, brother nor sister soothed his last moments, yet the hand of friendship and the brotherly tie which binds firemen each to each in a bond of indissoluble brotherhood, soothed, consoled and made happy his last hour.
Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published under the direction of the officers, and that a copy thereof be sent to the family of the deceased, and also that the truck and truck-house be draped in mourning, and that the members wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

TRIESEMAR No. 1—Is the remedy of general and local debility, loss of virile power, premature decay, and all the distressing consequences arising from early abuse, &c.; all physical impediments vanish like magic before its influence, thus rendering its use invaluable to those entering the marriage state.

TRIESEMAR No 2—Entirely eradicates all traces of those disorders which copavia and cubens have so long been thought an antidote for, to the ruin of the health of a vast portion of the population.

TRIESEMAR No 3—Is the great European remedy for that class of disorders which unfortunately, the English physician treats with mercury to the inevitable destruction of the patient's constitution, and which all the Sarsaparilla in the world cannot remove.

TRIESEMAR Nos. 1, 2 and 3, are prepared in the form of a lozenge, devoid of taste or smell, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket. Sold in tin cases and divided in separate doses, as administered by Valpeau, Lallsman, Roux, Ricord, &c., &c. DR. MAGNIN'S LUCINA CORDIAL, OR ELIXIR OF LOVE.—This delightful and positive invigorant of the human system is fast superseding all other remedies; in fact, when its virtues become fully known, it will be the only remedy in use. Its action on the nervous system and reproductive organs is most extraordinary; allaying all over-excitement, and infusing into the whole organization that degree of tension which is requisite to give the human system the enjoyment of its full powers, both mentally and physically. As an appetizer, it is equally remarkable; assimilating with the gastric juices of the stomach, it assists them in more readily dissolving all nutritious substances, and converting them in to pure and wholesome blood; thus the digestion is improved and the whole framework of man moves on in a more vigorous and harmonious manner thereby. Price, $6 per bottle, or two bottles for $5. Principal office, No. 303 Fulton-st., New-York. DR. MAGNIN.

RICORD'S PRACTICE.—C. D. HAMMOND, M. D., pupil of Drs Carnochan and Mott, and Ricord, of Paris, (the first living surgeon for diseases, &c., of the urinary membrane and sexual system,) has removed from No. 516 Broadway to No 61 Bleecker-st., half a block east, where he may be consulted, in English or French, personally or by letter; hours, 8 to 1 o'clock, and 6 to 9 o'clock evenings. Dr. H. tenders to all afflicted positive assurance of relief; and those who have been abused by "specifics," antidotes, little books, "no mercury," and like effusions of the numerous medical charlatans of the day, may rely on having their cases treated effectually, no matter how complicated they may appear. Chronic, constitutional, mercurial and nervous complaints also successfully treated.

DR. WARD'S UNFORTUNATES' FRIEND is the SUPERLUS ULTRA OF VENEREAL REMEDIES and but requires to be used for a week to effect a perfect solution, and to stamp Dr. WARD as the greatest benefactor of the day. Dr. WARD hereby offers a reward of $5,000 to any physician who can cure private diseases with equally uniform celerity, ease, safety and cheapness. Remember, all ye who have been lingering, that by calling on Dr. WARD you may, in a few days feel "that Richard is himself again." 99 Canal-st., 3 doors east of Broadway.

DENTISTRY.

A WANT SUPPLIED IN MECHANICAL DENTISTRY.—The great desideratum for which the Dental Faculty, both in Europe and America, have long labored, has at last been attained, and the want which the public has experienced is now fully met. It is conceded by all practical Dentists that a perfect adaptation of the present style of plate-work is physically impossible: that an approximation to all that can be obtained. But this serious defect is completely remedied by the Cheoplastic Process, securing a perfect adaptation to every portion of the mouth, and is entirely free from all galvanic sensations, is cleanly, will not corrode or tarnish, and from its accurate fit is more comfortable to the wearer. It is superior to every and all other styles of work, on account of its perfect adaptability, its cleanliness, its durability, its economy, and the remarkable short space of time required in preparing the work. Persons from the country are not now required to wait in town a week for their teeth, a few hours being all that is necessary. All branches of the Dental Art practised by the undersigned at No. 390 Bleecker-st., between Christopher and Amos sts., New-York.

The Academy of Medicine.

DISCUSSION OF THE NATIONAL HOTEL (WASHINGTON) EPIDEMIC.

The regular monthly meeting of the New-York Academy of Medicine was held at the Small Chapel of the University on Wednesday evening, Dr. MOTT, President, in the Chair. It was the quarterly business meeting of the Society, and the time was principally taken up by business matters of little public interest. The Treasurer reported that in consequence of the recent extended publications of the Academy the Treasury was exhausted and some small debts were pressing. The Finance Committee were requested to attend to them and find some method of liquidating them, urge members to pay up their dues, which were much behind hand, &c. Dr. MCNULTY reported that the Committee appointed to memorialize the Legislature in regard to the sanitary affairs of the City had attended to their duties; had procured a petition signed by over 5,000 of the best men in the City, and representing $100,000,000; that they had succeeded to having proper laws introduced into the new Charter, but that finally, for political purposes, they had been all stricken out. The Committee requested to be now discharged from further attention to this subject.

Dr. WINNE, of Baltimore, was introduced to the Academy by Dr. MOTT, and requested to address them upon the subject of the recent epidemic at the National Hotel, Washington, and proceeded to read a paper giving all the accredited facts in the case and instances, from the writings of Sir JOHN PRINGLE, SOUTHWOOD, SMITH, THOMPSON and others, where exposure to noxious effluvia and miasm had produced diarrhœa, vomiting, &c. Also, a letter from Dr. HALL, of Washington, the deduction from which was that the sewer was the cause of all the trouble.

Dr. DETMOLD stated that it had been noted that more men than women had been attacked with this disease, and inquired if the wine cellar had been examined, as he had seen no report of such an investigation. He thought perhaps that the reason why the men were attacked was because they drank wine, &c., more freely than the women—inquired if any cases had occurred where a husband and not his wife also was attacked?

Dr. WINNE did not think the liquors had been chemically examined; thought that in every instance both man and wife were simultaneously affected.

Dr. GARDNER thought that one case under his care in this City, which had not been attended to by any medical man in Washington, would answer these questions. A gentleman and his wife visiting this hotel, the husband was taken ill, but the wife remained unaffected in any manner. The gentleman had drank no liquors but those he had carried with him. He was at the hotel but a day or two; not being in usual health when going there, he soon became affected. On leaving for another house, the landlord said to him, "Why do you go—you are an old patron of the house?" (he having been there once or twice annually for ten or twelve years.) He replied that everything seemed uncomfortable to him; the food did not taste well; the air even smelt badly. This gentleman continued ill for several weeks.

Dr. GRISCOM stated that the fact just mentioned was alluded to in the paper just read, but, in the condensation for reading, was omitted, but many had noted the bad smell of the house, and so offensive as to almost cause vomiting to those going into the cellar, from whence it emanated.

Drs. COOK, WATSON, MCNULTY, P. VAN BUREN and VAN PELT, had patients from there, some of whom had drank no liquors, some no water. One couple were attacked in a few hours, after drinking freely of iced water after arriving.

Dr. DETMOLD inquired respecting the ventilation and warming the house, whether the sewers were or not frozen?

Dr. WINNE replied that the ventilation was very defective. Ordinary Winters the weather was little cooler than here at present. Then the doors of the house were usually left open and thus the ventilation was effected. When cold the doors were shut and all the air that entered was by the leaking of doors and windows, and from the hot air pipes of the furnace. Here was a great defect. The hot-air chamber of the furnace was not fed from outside the building, but from the cellar itself, and thus during the excessively cold weather when this epidemic occured, the hot air going to the chambers came directly from the cellar into which opened this offensive sewer. Dr. W. thought it probable that the outlets of the sewers were also frozen, as he had often seen them thus in cold weather.

It was thought by some that probably the reason why the women were less affected than the men, was that they usually had fires in their rooms, slept with their windows open, &c.; took better care for ventilation than men, perhaps because more than one slept in a room: Dr. W. thought that it was, perhaps, owing to the fact that the rooms for single men were in another and worse part of the building.

No express opinion was given by the Academy or the members individually, but the general impression seemed to be prevalent that the idea of poison in food or water must be discarded, and that from the foul air alone could this matter be considered as originating.

The paper was referred to the section on the Practice of Medicine, to be reported upon at a future meeting. The thanks of the Academy were given to the author for his paper, after which it adjourned.

A CASE IN BROOKLYN.

Mr. WM. H. PECK, of Brooklyn, who was one of those poisoned at the National Hotel, Washington, on the 4th of March last, has so far recovered as to be able to ride out. For several weeks his life was despaired of. His physician is sure that there were no symptoms of mineral poison in this case, but that the disease was caused by malaria.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held Thursday and the attendance was large. P. PEARL, Esq., presided, and at the close was reelected for another year.

The subject of the usury laws was finally dismissed from the attention of the Chamber, and the citizens at large were urged to take up the subject, and labor for the modification or abolishment of the law.

The President presented a letter from the members of the Board of Marine Surveyors, complaining that they are now restrained in their regular and professional manner and fine of $100 for each and every act. It was referred to a Committee of five, who were authorized to take legal advice.

A communication was read from the Pilot Commissioners concerning the new Port bill. There is no opposing by fines and penalties, which, of course, will be uncertain, and not sufficient to justify them in engaging a competent Superintendent, as the Board have no money as a Board. It will, therefore, in their judgment, be necessary, to carry the law into effect, to have a guaranty that, if wanted, $4,000 should be furnished for that purpose. If the law acts beneficially, the Legislature may appropriate, or require the City so to do, to refund the money if advanced.

Mr. POWER said a good deal had been said of late about bribing Harbor-Masters. If there were no bribers nobody would be bribed. He knew that it was a very common thing for merchants, by loans which they knew would never be paid, and through their stevedores and clerks, to bribe Harbor Masters. He hoped that every merchant would henceforth resolve to be honest. To effect this, it would probably be the best way to meet at the Merchants' Exchange, and there, with one heart, resolve to never give a bribe to Harbor Master again. Subsequently he moved a resolution to refer the subject to a Committee consisting of Messrs J H Brower, E. E. Morgan, Edward Hincken, Moses H. Grinnell, T Tileston.

The Chamber then adjourned for two weeks, when the election of Pilot Commissioners will take place.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Friday evening, the President, J. N PHILLIPS, Esq., in the chair.

A bill was brought up on its third reading, with a clause (as amended at a former sitting) for the appropriation of $500 to pay for clerk hire for the Special Committee appointed to examine into the affairs of the Comptroller's office. Councilman BRADY wished the measure to be referred back to the Committee of the Whole.

Councilman MCCAHILL was opposed to giving the Committee a clerk. It was shameful if out of the five members of the proposed committee, not one was competent to examine accounts.

Councilman WARNER argued in favor of the necessity of such appointment.

Councilman WATSON thought that no member of the Board should be compelled to sit in the Comptroller's Office three months examining his accounts. The Comptroller had insulted the Board. When gentlemen called they found that functionary with his hands fully occupied upon cheese and crackers. He feared that if there was not an investigation the books of the Department might disappear.

The motion to refer back, after protracted and animated discussion, was lost. On the appropriation being put, the ayes were 24, nays 11; being lost for want of a constitutional vote, it was reconsidered and laid on the table. The Special Committee on the reorganization of the Departments under the Charter reported the ordinances for the organization of the Finance and City Inspectors' Departments. They were received and ordered to be laid on the table.

The Board then adjourned to Monday.

OBTAINING A LETTER FRAUDULENTLY FROM THE POST OFFICE.—Three young men (each some 20 years of age) named WM. HENRY QUACKENBUSH, BENJ. PARCELL and FRANCIS HAMMOND, were arrested yesterday charged with fraudulently obtaining a letter from the Post-office directed to GASPER, HOPKINS & Co., merchants of this City. Two letter contained two promissory notes of $200 each, and was taken from the Post-office some two weeks ago. The arrest of the young men was effected by Mr. HENRY HOLBROOK, Detective Mail Agent. The young men had succeeded in converting the notes into money. When arrested none of the money was found in their possession, and they confessed to having spent it all. They were taken before U. S. Commissioner WHITE and committed to Eldridge-street jail to await examination.

A WINDFALL TO THE FIRE DEPARTMENT FUND.—The Legislature at its last session, passed an act taxing Foreign Insurance Companies in this City who have assets, funds and capital of not less than $300 000. The tax is to be two per cent. upon the gross receipts of the premiums, and is to be paid into the treasury of the New-York Fire Department. There are about forty Insurance Companies which will be taxed under this law. The aggregate amount to be paid to the Fire Department Fund by these Companies for the ensuing year, will not fall short of $7,000. The law went into effect on the first of the present month.

HOW PICTURES SELL.—At a sale of pictures by LEEDS & Co., last Tuesday, there was a large attendance of bidders, and the competition was spirited. Many of the pictures named are well known to our citizens. Their prices, it will be seen, were generally such as to encourage artists:

The April Shower, by G. H. HALL	$485
The North and the South, by G. H. HALL	360
Of this the copyright was reserved.
View of Niagara, by W. HEINE	90
The Creation, by N. GOSSE	535
The Nativity, by N GOSSE	535
Both these have been engraved.
The Last Farewell, by Mrs LILLY M. SPENCER	150
Shake Hands, by Mrs. LILLY M. SPENCER	183
This is a well-known engraved picture.
"Speak, Lord," pastel, by E. SARTAIN	150
Landscape After a Shower, by CROPSEY	110
The Drovers, by DARLEY	145

☞ Nothing has yet been heard of ERASTUS L. DR FOREST, of Watertown, Conn., who has been missing ever since the 14th of January last. He was last seen in this City. His friends renew their offer of $500 for any information that shall lead to the discovery of his body or account for his absence.

THE LAST PRAYERS AT OLD COLUMBIA.—The students of Columbia College assembled at prayers in the old chapel yesterday (Tuesday) morning for the last time. President KING made them a short address and the students sang "Auld Lang Syne." The work of demolishing the college buildings commenced several days ago; the students have assisted in their feeble way, shying a loose brick occasionally through the windows into some of the recitation rooms, much to the joy doubtless of the professors, who must be pleased with the interest they thus manifested in the affairs of the institution. The ceremonies attending the removal up-town will consist of addresses and orations by professors and students, and a procession to the new building, in which the Alumni are expected to unite.

DIRT IN THE SIXTEENTH WARD.—Since the recent contracts for street-cleaning were made, no part of the City has been more neglected than parts of this should-be-well-cared-for district. Twenty second-street, so say the "oldest inhabitants," has not been touched for nine months. Twenty-third-street has been swept once between Ninth and Tenth avenues—possibly to propitiate Comptroller FLAGG, who resides there. The rest of it is abominably filthy. And so on, elsewhere. Will Mr. BUSH, who has the reputation of being above the average as a contractor, begin to do his duty more efficiently?

☞ The New-York Cricket Club commenced play at Hoboken yesterday. The Manhattan Club also mustered quite strong, and enjoyed a day's play.

☞ The body of an unknown man was found yesterday in the East River, at the foot of Twenty-fourth-street.

The Young Men's Christian Association.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

In answer to an "Ex-Member" of the New-York Young Men's Christian Association, I would state that Rev. Dr. ALEXANDER knowingly has his name on our records, having withdrawn it from the list of resignations. He is also trying, in a true Christian spirit, to pour oil upon the waters of dissension in the Association. If he can take this stand, with his known Southern sympathies, certainly the public have not so much to fear as to the Abolition character of the Association.

Rev. Dr. TYNG is well aware that his name is on our list. He refused positively to resign, when asked to do so. He says: "Let the young men talk themselves out on this subject; it will do no harm."

Rev. Dr. PRENTISE takes the same position.

Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER remains one of our most active members. Besides these, our roll still contains the names of fifteen eminent divines.

The membership of other grades is undiminished. We are 600 strong. The Association has, numerically, lost nothing.

The charge that the Association is Abolitionized is untrue. There are conservative men left. It has merely taken a stand for free discussion. Yours,

A MEMBER.

Novel Filter.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Can it be true, as I hear, that the Common Council of the City of Brooklyn, or the Nassau Water Works Company, are about laying the conduit for supplying the city with water through the evergreen cemetery? It is supposed by some that to filter the water through a graveyard would improve its quality and render it more healthy and pleasing to the taste of the inhabitants of the city of Brooklyn. It strikes me and my family that we, New-Yorkers, would prefer a different kind of filterer for the croton; but there is no accounting for taste. W. E.

☞ We have received an affidavit from Miss Margaret Hanly, late of No. 50 Oak-street, in which she solemnly swears that James White did not at all injure her, as reported. Margaret made a different statement in April, but she avers now that she did so through fear, and under a misapprehension.

A NEW-YORK JEWELRY THIEF CAUGHT.—Deputy Chief HAM last evening arrested an English Jew, who gave the name of THEODORE SEYMOUR, alias LEMAN, alias SIMON, charged with stealing a quantity of gold bracelets from the jewelry store of TIFFANY & Co., Broadway, New York, where he had been employed for a year or more, but recently discharged. About $500 worth of the property was found upon him, which had been injured to prevent identification. He will be taken to New-York for trial.—Boston Transcript.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.—MAY 8.

Before Judge Russell.

Two brothers, Thomas and Charles Waters, were arraigned for felonious assault and battery upon John McGarran, on the 22d of February last, about 5 o'clock P. M., in Chatham street. The defendant, accompanied by his brother, was passing up the street, having a dog with him, when one of the accused, although it is not known which, kicked the dog. This led to an altercation which resulted in the elder McGarran being so badly injured about the head as to become insensible and he was taken to the Hospital. The defence admitted the fight, but denied that a knife had been used, and attempted to justify the assault. The Court directed the Jury that inasmuch as the instrument which inflicted the injuries had not been produced by the prosecution, the charge in the complaint could not be sustained, but that a verdict of simple assault and battery might be rendered. The Jury so found their verdict. The prisoners were remanded till this morning for sentence.

John Kelly, a boy 17 years of age, indicted for burglary in the third degree, pleaded guilty to an attempt. His father made a pathetic appeal to the Judge in behalf of his son, pledging his word of honor that if judgment should be suspended the lad should leave the City, and not appear again for 5 years—he would enlist in the navy. The Judge was deaf to the father's appeal, as the prisoner had offended before, and so he sentenced him to the House of Refuge.

Bridget Fry pleaded guilty to forgery in the fourth degree, in passing counterfeit bills on the Bank of Commerce in Rhode Island. She has served one term in the State Prison for the same offence. She was sent back to her old quarters for two years.

The Court adjourned to this morning at 11 o'clock.

KNOX'S HATS.—All sorts of Hats (except "shocking bad hats") may be found at KNOX'S, on the corner of Broadway and Fulton-street, and, we may add, at all sorts of prices. KNOX not only caters for tip-top five dollar customers, but is democratic enough to pay special attention to the "Heads of the People," and accommodate the short purses as well as the long ones. With a full, fresh, and constantly changing assortment of everything in his line suitable for the heads of men and boys, there is no establishment in the City where one may be more easily suited and satisfied than at KNOX'S, corner of Fulton-street and Broadway, and every day, just about this time of the year, there is a mass meeting at KNOX'S corner battery.

FRIDAY, May 8—P. M.

There is little or no change to notice in Money affairs to-day. The Brokers are generally easy, and 7 ₱ cent. interest is the current rate at call. Discounts are also easy on strictly prime paper at 8 ₱ cent. for short, and 8½@9 ₱ cent. for long dates. Sound choice names, not indorsed, go at 10@12 ₱ cent. The classification is now made pretty strict, although we have to remark unusual punctuality in the May payments through Bank. The Foreign Exchange market is scarcely moved at all by the sailing of the Ericsson to-morrow. Sterling in good snpply at 109¼ to 109½. The news from Europe by the private mails via Boston this morning, is considered favorable for the London Money market and the markets for Breadstuffs. The American Stock Brokers write cheerfully from London, though the transactions were not important, except that we hear that the Panama negotiation for £225,000 sterling was nearly closed. The Russian Railways, for which Messrs. BARING had undertaken £2,000,000 sterling, are not favorably treated by the London Press, and the opposition to the English subscription against any less important house than BARING would certainly prove too much for its success. The Bank Note Circulation of the Kingdom at the close of March is officially reported at $181,695,000 on a specie basis of $72,960,000.

The Sub-Treasury to-day received $128,071; disbursed $172,765, and held at the close a balance of $14,813,000.

The Stock Market continues to gain strength, more, to-day, in the tone of the market, than in the actual advance in prices, although the latter is equal to ½@1 ₱ cent. on most of the railroads, on the average sales of Thursday. The April receipts last year were extraordinarily large, and the comparison this year, owing to the low prices of Breadstuffs and the scarcity of Provisions coming East, was not expected to be so favorable as in March. But thus far the Western roads are sending in pretty full returns, and it is quite evident that on most of the lines the freight and travel to the West are making up, in a good degree, for the temporary falling off the other way. We have the following:

APRIL TRAFFIC ON RAILROADS.

	April, 1857.	April, 1856.
Michigan Central	$300,000	$280,000
Illinois Central	201,698	165,567
Galena and Chicago	192,047	193,495
Cleveland and Toledo	133.197	130.229
Hamilton and Dayton	42.841	89,216
La Crosse	45,029	22,130

The sales of Lands by the Illinois Central Company in April reached the large figure of $80[illegible] 112 for 42,899 acres.

The Commercial Advertiser notices the injurious [illegible] resorted to by one of the new Fire Insurance offices in taking the name of Union Safety, while another and older company, fire and marine, bears almost the same name of Union Mutual.

In the case of the Guaranteed Stock of the Michigan Southern Road, the Board of Brokers to-day recognized the proposed subscription as a privilege attaching to all contracts outstanding in the Common Stock. On notification from the buyer the seller will be required on each 100 shares to deliver 80 shares Common and 40 shares Guaranteed Stock, the buyer paying in the cash installments on the latter. This privilege will be valuable in the event of an excessive subscription to the Guaranteed Stock. The subscription remains open 14 days, from 7th to 20th May inclusive. At the close of the second day (to-day) $1,047,000 had been subscribed by 43 City parties before the circulars of the Board of Directors were fairly mailed to the country stockholders. As a speculation, the new stock stood on the opening of the books at the market rate of 81 ₱ cent., that is, the taker, with $5,000 in cash and 50 shares Common Stock, costing 62 ₱ cent. in the market, could have 100 shares. To-day it stands 82½ ₱ cent. the Common Stock having advanced to 65 ₱ cent. Both are rendered every way more valuable, as well as marketable, as the subscription advances to completion, the Common Stock, by the certainty of the withdrawal of 15,000 shares, and the guaranteed Stock, by the certainty of a clear and unembarrassed guaranty of 10 ₱ cent. a year, before which stands only $6,500,000 in funded debt, on a road of 536 miles earning $3,000,000, where $1,800,000 would suffice to make sure the expenses, interest and guaranteed dividend. The investment, at a market cost of 83 ₱ cent., is equal to a 12 ₱ cent. Stock. The effect on the Common Stock is to reduce the common capital from $8,350,000 to a little less than $7,000,000, as it stood before the late appearances of embarrassment interfered to arrest the regular bonded negotiations of the Company. Of the 15,000 old shares to be withdrawn and canceled by the negotiation, it is not ont of the way to estimate that from 7,000 to 10,000 shares will be withdrawn from Wall-street, where about 12,000 or 14,000

LATE AND INTERESTING FROM UTAH.

Progress of Mormon Rebellion—Outrages upon the Gentiles—Shameful Persecution of Females—Women forced into Prostitution, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

WASHINGTON, Sunday, May 9, 1857

Late and interesting advices, both official and private, have been received here from Great Salt Lake City, which show that the treason of BRIGHAM YOUNG and his deluded followers is every day becoming more and more open in its manifestations, while the record of social crimes is swollen by many facts of the most startling character. With all we have heard of the debasing influence of polygamy, and the disgusting brutalities and indecencies flowing from that polluted source, it would seem that not the half has been told. The thoroughly organized system of espionage established by the despot who presides over the spiritual and temporal concerns of Mormondom, has rendered it nearly or quite impossible to send a letter out of the territory which contains anything like a truthful account of the condition of affairs there; and the same instrumentality seals the lips of the sufferers themselves while in the Territory—from which they can escape only with great difficulty—for increased oppression or death itself is sure to follow close upon the heels of suspicious discontent.

Although large numbers of the "Saints" are disaffected towards the leaders, there are few seceders, for the simple reason that, since BRIGHAM'S despotism has accumulated its present strength and boldness, it is as much as a man's life is worth to rebel against it. The malcontents have no opportunity whatever for organization. If they attempt it, some member of the secret order of the Danites—the Jesuits of the Mormon Church—are sure to get into and betray their councils. Thus betrayed, secret violence at the hands of BRIGHAM'S assassins—nerved by the assurance that such deeds are accepted as God-service—is the almost certain penalty. Late advices from Utah state that, should a military force be sent into the Territory strong enough to afford protection to the seceding "brethren" and "sisters" the Church would lose at once a very large percentage of the former and nearly all of the latter.

The sufferings of the females at Salt Lake, in consequence of the degradation to which Polygamy subjects them, are spoken of as extreme. From among the many facts illustrating the state of affairs I am permitted to publish the following: Mrs. SUTHERLAND, a lady of education and refinement, whose husband was killed on the plains last Summer in company with Colonel BABBIT, found great difficulty in getting shelter in Salt Lake City from the inclement weather of last Winter. After being driven from door to door all over the city, she was at last afforded a home in the family of a Mr. JARVIS, a merchant of Salt Lake, who had seceded from the Mormon church, as also had Mr. SUTHERLAND Mrs. SUTHERLAND, by the way, had never been a member, but had followed the fortunes of her husband with the fidelity of a trusting, loving woman. For this act of common charity, JARVIS' store and dwelling were attacked, sacked and robbed, he was himself abused and badly beaten, his dwelling was fired and burned, and the females of his family, together with Mrs. SUTHERLAND, were turned into the street without other clothing than their night-dresses, although snow covered the ground to the depth of two feet. Mrs. SUTHERLAND had provoked the ire of Mormondom by declining to receive as a suitor for her hand a certain Mr. HOWARD, who had been her husband's friend and employer. HOWARD already had several wives, and his proposition to Mrs. SUTHERLAND was made instantly upon receipt of the news of SUTHERLAND'S death

This is only one of a long list of outrages which were committed by the Saints within a few weeks previous to the last advices. Numbers of houses had been torn down, and their occupants thus turned out into the open air to suffer the rigors of the past severe Winter. Among these sufferers was one woman who was entirely without a protector, and with three little children, one of them a nursing infant. The houses occupied by Judge STILES and THOMAS S. WILLIAMS were also destroyed by incendiarism. Mr. STILES is the only Federal Judge remaining in the Territory, and Mr. WILLIAMS a lawyer who had incurred the displeasure of the heads of the Mormon church by his manly independence.

In the natural progression of polygamic despotism, the consent of a woman is becoming a superfluous condition to the increase of a Saint's stock of mistresses. Numbers of them have been compulsorily "sealed" (prostituted) through machinations and influences, to resist which they were powerless. A man by the name of NASH, emigrated to Utah last Summer, and settled in Provo, a Southern colony, taking with him his daughter, a beautiful and interesting girl of some seventeen Summers, who had been much sought by the propagators of the "Celestial Kingdom." She succeeded, however, in baffling the antiquated and anointed roues among the "Saints," and preserved her purity until after the death of her father and only protector, which occurred during the past Winter. The Bishop of Provo, a creature named CARTER, officiated at the funeral of NASH, and, after concluding the prayer over the dead body of the father, turned to the weeping girl, informed her that she was now unprotected, and must become his wife! In less than ten days she was forced to yield, and now swells the number of CARTER'S "spirituals" to seven!

I have said that it was almost impossible to get a letter out of the Territory containing anything derogatory to the interests of BRIGHAM YOUNG and his crew. For example: Some time in January last an Inquisitorial Committee of Mormons entered the office of the Surveyor-General, and presented him with a copy of an official letter which he had previously addressed to the Department of the Interior in relation to the monopoly of timber in the Territory by the "anointed of the Lord." He was asked whether he had written such a letter. Upon replying that he had, he was informed that all such communications would be stopped, and that no letter could leave the Territory without their knowing its contents, even if the Gentiles should attempt to smuggle them through in cracker sacks. It seems that this ruse to get communications to the States without violation of their seals, had been tried unsuccessfully.

At present the mails are entirely in the hands of the Mormons. Some months since the route from Independence to Salt Lake was let to a Mormon named KIMBALL, who, however, has never yet applied for the mail to carry according to contract. It is rumored that he has sold out his contract to BRIGHAM YOUNG, whose object in buying it can be nothing more nor less than to have entire control over the mails, and over the mail road, along which he will unquestionably establish a chain of Mormon colonies to command the emigrant route, and so hold the passage across the Continent. Certainly the existing contract was not taken from pecuniary considerations, for the price at which it was awarded is not half sufficient to pay expenses. The Post-Master General has it now in his power to annul the contract for non-fulfillment, and it is to be hoped that he will embrace this opportunity to remove the mail as far as possible from the control of such doubtful saints.

There have been threats of late to murder the Surveyor General, Judge STILES, and the United States Indian Agent, the only acting United States officers remaining in the Territory, and their position had become so precarious at last accounts that in all probability they are now on their way to the States. Thus is extinguished the last glimmer of federal authority in Utah—an authority insulted and despised during the entire four years of the late administration. It remains to be seen whether Mr. BUCHANAN is equal to the emergency now presented, or will emulate the dishonest trickery by which his predecessor managed to shirk the responsibility of an issue with BRIGHAM YOUNG, before he had educated his people up to the standard of treason to which he had already raised himself.

The Poisoning at Washington.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, May 7, 1857.
LAW OFFICE, No. 74 South Fourth-street.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I have read a well-written article in your paper of the 5th inst., in relation to the poisoning in Washington.

I went to Washington on the 19th of March and staid until the 27th, was experimenting in explosive shells from the Battery at the Navy Yard. On the 18th of April I returned, stopped at a hotel; on Wednesday, the 22d, feeling very unwell, I hastened home. By Sunday my disease had become so violent, and I sinking so rapidly, that I suspected poison. On sending to my physician, Dr. C. HENRY, he at once pronounced the symptoms those of arsenic, and gave me homeopathic preparations of iron, antidotes to arsenic, and in thirty hours they stopped the violence of the poison. I have continued taking antidotes to arsenic for the past ten days and am slowly recovering. The active effect of the poison is evidently neutralized; but mine was an unusually violent case, and its effects have been very severe. If those persons who are suffering whom you speak of, do not neutralize the poison by antidotes, I think it will either destroy the intestines, or cause inflammation, which will repeatedly manifest itself until the poison is exhausted.

I suspect that some of the slaves there gave the poison intentionally, in revenge for the defeat of their party, and to cripple or destroy the President and his friends, or persons supporting the elected party. I have no doubt that the arsenic was given intentionally; I have my suspicions and circumstantial grounds for them. I was not in Washington when the effects of the poison appeared at the National Hotel; but my physician, who had several cases from there, says that the symptoms are the same, only in my case more violent. Yours, &c.,

WM. W. HUBBELL.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

SERMON BY REV DR. CHEEVER.

A discourse in behalf of the Institution at Washington, D. C., for the education of colored girls, who are to become teachers of their kindred, was delivered in the Church of the Puritans, on Union-square, last evening, by the pastor, Rev. Dr. CHEEVER. The audience was large, and the occasion was one of deep interest.

The preacher's text was from the words, "If a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him; but the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself"—Lev. 19:33, 34. Also the passage contained in the 17th chapter of Acts, 26th verse, as follows: "For God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell upon the face of the earth, that they should seek the Lord"

The discourse took up the claims of the whole colored race, as forced upon the conscience by the recent reasoning and decision of the Supreme Court against them, that "they have no rights which white men are bound to respect." Finding them thus economically cared, outcast, morally assassinated, we are compelled to ask, said he, what treatment God requires for them at our hands? What are our duties in regard to them in the light of His Word? What is their condition? What ought it to be? What does Government owe them? What ought Christianity to secure for them? How may we elevate them and prepare them, by the acquisition of knowledge, and by habits of virtue and industry, for a social position of usefulness and happiness? Precisely the same obligation rests upon us in regard to them and their posterity, as to the whites.

But all possibility of blessing them, rests upon that of educating them; and educating them not for slavery, but for freedom. The same authority over the citizens committed of God to the government for obedience, is also a responsibility laid of God upon the government, to provide the means and motives of obedience. The children of all classes, but especially the poor and needy, have claims from God upon the government, by their very birth as human beings, and by the very claims of the government over them. An education is due to them from the government, such as will enable them to understand their duties, their responsibilities, and their rights. Neither color nor race constitute the claim for such education, but humanity; and it is due as fully to the blacks as to the whites—to one race as freely and completely as to another.

Dr CHEEVER traced the effects of the system of Slavery in the disabilities of the free colored race; "and now," said he preacher, "by the edict of the Supreme Court of the United States, this treatment of them, as fit for nothing but slaves, is announced as Constitutional law!"

He vindicated their claims to citizenship and protection, in point of law, referring to the exposition of the law, as given by Judge MCLEAN, and also on the ground of natural justice, and the ground of the teachings of the Word of God. Their claims, he said, are just in proportion to their wretchedness and helplessness. Dr. CHEEVER dwelt at considerable length upon the necessity of educating the colored race, with special application to the institution in whose behalf the sermon was preached.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN CHRISTIAN UNION.

On Sunday evening, the annual sermon on behalf of this association was delivered by Rev Dr. FORSYTH, of Newburg, N. Y., in Dr SMITH'S church, corner of Fourteenth-street and Second-avenue. The incidents on the journey to Emmaus were read by the pastor, Rev. Dr. SMITH, as the appropriate chapter from Scripture. Rev. Dr DEWITT offered prayer. Dr. FAIRCHILD, Secretary to the Society, defined the object of the Society as extending exclusively to those who in professedly Christian lands have apostatized in faith and practice from the truth. He spoke of this as the eighth anniversary, and sketched briefly the meterials of the report, which will be read at the public meeting, on Tuesday morning, in Broome-street. After the hymn, "Hark the song of Jubilee," Rev. Dr. FORSYTH preached from Luke xxiv., 45, 47. "beginning at Jerusalem." The subject is well known and familiar, and was treated in an able and satisfactory manner, especially the godlike arrangement whereby the divine mercy was published throughout all nations, beginning where in human apprehension it would have more fitly ended, even at Jerusalem. The attendance was good.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The annual address of the Theological Seminary before the Society of Inquiry was delivered last evening at the Mercer-street Presbyterian Church by Rev Dr. TAYLER LEWIS, of Union College. It was a masterly, philosophical, evangelical oration, intended rather for studious examination than for popular utility. It was received with thoughtful and close attention Among other things, the Rev. Doctor observed: "Heaven is the service of worship, temple service, thanksgiving for evermore. It is not the prosecution of astronomical or similar knowledge—for the former things have passed away—but rather the contemplation of the beatific vision by those who shall hunger no more, thirst no more, all things being made new. It is not a story of existence raised a degree higher. This we say without any mythic reverie or transcendental absurdity. For the saints in Heaven are those who have come out of great tribulation—"who have washed their robes and made them white"—for whom was paid the price of the blood of the Mediator. Here moral knowledge gives way to the perfect, the temporary to the eternal. Nor is this a vain glorious, empty mysticism."

AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY

The annual sermon before the American Home Missionary Society was preached last evening in Dr. ADAMS' Church in Madison square, by President J. M. STRETZVANT, of Illinois College. The preliminary religious services were conducted by the pastor of the Church.

The text was from the 5th of Matthew, 10th verse: "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

The general theme of the discourse was the position which the American people now occupy with respect to the civilization and evangelization of the world. He pointed out some analogies between the history of this nation and that of the Jews, the chosen people of God. He said that to Christianize this nation is, through it, to Christianize this continent. He referred to the connection of the Home Missionary Society with this enterprise of evangelization, and hoped that its labors might be sustained by the sympathies and the charities of the churches. He drew a vivid picture of the West, its resources, its population, its present wants and its future prospects. He spoke, in several passages in the discourse, with great severity against American Slavery, as an obstacle in the way of the progress of Christianity in this country and in the world.

THE NEWBURG AFFAIR.

No Clue Yet—The Inquest Again Adjourned—An Interview with Sarah Bloom.

The "mystery" at Newburg has been more than a nine-days' wonder. It is as much talked of as ever, and new rumors fall as thickly as snow-flakes in a Winter storm. The Coroner and the Sheriff ride up and down the river side, hunting for people to whom was traced the origin of new tales, or push off towards the rural districts, bent on errands which prove similarly fruitless. All sorts of absurd stories find their way about the streets of Newburg, and occasionally float down to New-York. A woman's silk bonnet was found in the river, and there was much mystery about it. It furnished material for sundry paragraphs, and the interesting relic was delicately captured and preserved from harm—till it turned out that some careful and cleanly housewife up the river had undertaken a general housecleaning, and finding this hat in the garret, tattered and torn, had thrown it to the current, which ran away with it, landed it at Newburg, and straightway set the quidnuncs a-wondering. Then again, the story that was gone the rounds for two or three days, concerning a trunk, big enough to hold a body, that was found in a clump of bushes by the roadside, not far from the place of the discovery of the corpse—is exploded by the simple fact becoming known that some wary Dutchman, leaving a farmhouse, shouldered his trunk, but found it heavy, and so removed the contents, knapsacked them, and threw the trunk to the moles and the bats—and the news mongers. So with a half-dozen similar stories—pretty to tell, very hard to prove, and not at all to be believed. In short, the body is unrecognized, the murderer is unknown, the inquest is unfinished, the public are unsatisfied, and the state of affairs, generally, is decidedly unsatisfactory.

Coroner FENTON adjourned his Jury on Monday last, to meet on Saturday at 9 o'clock, but the proceedings opened at 4, and concluded (for that time) at 4:10 P. M. The Jury (sitting in the Doctor's private parlor) had nothing before them, and expended the ten minutes of their session in discussing the propriety of adjourning to another locality. It was finally agreed that they would reassemble a week from that day, but not at Newburg. The Coroner fixed the place at Mill Hope, five miles from Newburg, and the time 5 o'clock next Saturday afternoon; the Jury, however, to be called together sooner if anything turned up. The adjournment to a locality in the immediate vicinity of the place of the murder was arranged in order to give facility to parties in that region to give in testimony. The Sheriff hears nothing new; the Coroner has nothing to tell he Jury, the Jury have still less to tell the people. And so gossip takes the place of fact, and rumor is instead of evidence.

Meanwhile, in the lack of testimony, the doctors are at loggerheads about the appearances on the body of the murdered girl. The exhumation of the physician resulted in a supposed discovery of the signs of abortion. The opinion of the opposition attributes the appearances spoken of to a chronic inflammation. It is now believed that the girl was perfectly virtuous, and that there is no foundation for the assertions heretofore made. This is a matter of no particular importance now, one way or the other. The doctors must fight it out their own way; but they are much excited over it.

An interview with the girl SARAH BLOOM, whose name has been freely mentioned in connection with this affair, has furnished convincing proof of the folly of trusting to evidence purely circumstantial in cases of supposed murder. The girl JANE positively swore to the identity of the body as that of her sister SARAH; so did Dr. MASTEN, the family physician of SARAH'S friends at Shawangunk—although, to do the Doctor justice, he afterwards stated that had he seen SARAH a short time before he saw the corpse, he could not have been so readily mistaken. But Mr. WILLIAM JENKINS (judging by her teeth, SARAH declares) all along insisted that the murdered girl was not his friend SARAH; and he proved to be right.

Shawangunk (pronounced "Shongum," for short, among Orange County people) is a pleasant little village in Ulster County, some fourteen miles west of Newburg. It has a hotel, a post-office, a store or two, and one or two fine large mansions, with several smaller ones sprinkled around, neither fine nor large. The hills rise high on all sides of the village, and through a delightful valley comes the little stream of the Walkill, making the best of its way to the outlet at Rondout. In the deepest and quietest nook of this valley, miles away from a market town, is Shawangunk, sunk so deeply from the sight that it can barely be discovered, and goes inoffensively by the name of "The Basin" and "Shongum." In a little, low-roofed farm house, opposite Milepaugh tavern, the residence of Morris MASTEN, is SARAH BLOOM'S; and thence she went to make the statement that Mr. WILLIAM JENKINS hadn't murdered her. SARAH is a plump little girl of twenty-three, pleasant-faced and pleasant-spoken, free and quite unembarrassed. She was drawing water at the well, (like a new-fashioned Rebekah,) on Saturday, but put down her bucket, went into the house with alacrity, sat down and answered questions as fast as they were put. Dr. ELY'S description of the corpse was produced, and the inquiry put to SARAH: "Have you any objection to a comparison of these marks with those upon yourself?" No objection whatever. Questions were answered with great freedom. But SARAH professed herself unable to understand how her sister should have been so positive in her testimony; and also expressed great sorrow that she had unwittingly brought the man JENKINS into an unpleasant and even dangerous predicament, by going to see him on Tuesday afternoon, and by riding home with him in the night.

SARAH BLOOM is a brunette, five feet high, with light hazel eyes, a very pretty mouth, white and regular teeth, and a nose decidedly aquiline. She is not agile, but moves easily and has an erect carriage. Her eyes are expressive, and her appearance not especially rural. She has been a tailoress, worked all last Winter at Great Bend, Penn., and returned to Newburg a few days before this murder was discovered. On the Tuesday named, she went to visit a younger sister, who lives with a family in Newburg, and, desiring to go to Mr. MASTEN'S that night, went to KEMP'S clothing-store, where JENKINS was the cutter, and after some coaxing persuaded him to drive her out. She corroborates JENKINS' story that he left her in the road, at her own request, some distance from MASTEN'S house, and the narrative of her subsequent performances is already known A careful examination of the girl proves these facts—that the only approach to a resemblance to the dead body is in the following immaterial particulars: 1. The skin on the side and end of the forefinger of the left hand is pricked and hardened, as from the use of the needle. 2. The skin on the palm of the hand, at the union with the fingers, is slightly calloused. 3 A vaccine scar is on the left arm. 4. There is a ring on the third finger of the left hand. 5. There is a scar on the right leg; and 6, a sore on the left arm. SARAH'S toes are not grown together; her hands are not delicate; her chin is very short; none of her teeth are filled, and she has no scar over the left cheek-bone, and no "dark-colored mole on the front of the left leg, almost half-way between ankle and knee." Her hair is light—that of the corpse was very dark. Her fingers are short and somewhat "stumpy"—those of the corpse were long and slender. Her nose curves—that of the corpse is a beautiful Grecian. And yet we are informed that certain members of the Coroner's Jury have declared, since her appearance, that had she not come as she did, JENKINS would have been pronounced guilty of her murder, and the vote of the citizens of Newburg, if it had been taken on Saturday and Sunday of last week, would inevitably have been as five to one in favor of hanging that unhappy individual on the nearest lamp-post.

SARAH avows her determination to leave the neighborhood, stating that the rumors which have gained currency since this development, affecting her character, are such as to render her life wretched. She says the whole world seems to be against her, and believes that "people are trying to have her put outdoors," and leave her no place to make her living and be quiet. She looks upon herself as a much-abused person.

THE BURDELL MURDER.

TRIAL OF EMMA AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM.

Speeches of Counsel.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

VERDICT OF THE JURY.

NOT GUILTY.

Mrs. Cunningham Acquitted.

ECKEL DISCHARGED.

SCENES IN COURT.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

Before Judge DAVIES

LAST DAY....SATURDAY, May 9.

The trial of Mrs. EMMA AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM, otherwise called BURDELL, was continued today, and closed by a verdict of acquittal. The evidence having been closed on Friday night, and there being considerable curiosity to hear what course the District-Attorney would pursue in his closing speech, there was not an inch of standing room unoccupied. Four hours were assigned to either side to close their case. Counsel arranged to occupy two hours each. When the roll of Jurors had been called, the District-Attorney referred to the request of the defence last evening, that the prosecution should furnish them with the principal points of law on which he would ask a conviction of the prisoner. At that time he was not prepared to give them in regular form This morning, however, he was, and Mr. EDWARDS would present them.

POINTS ON WHICH THE PROSECUTION RESTED.

Mr. Edwards then read as follows:

Many of the most important legal principles in criminal law, which attach to a conclusion of guilt, lay hold of the prisoner, Emma Augusta Cunningham.

1. Crime may be committed where resentment is diminished, while legal presumptions are powerful against an accused party where revengeful impulse is so ardent and active as to be exhibited in expressions.

These partake of the state of mind and heart, and show motive from its source, and the law inquires for motive. (People vs. Harriette Robinson, 1 Parker's Criminal Cases, 649; People vs Lake, do., 503)

2. A declaration of criminal intention goes very far in law towards a conviction, when it is followed by the fact of a violent death; and it becomes all-controlling when coupled with the fact that such violent death clearly occurs within the very home or house of the accused.

Such declaration shows an ill will which the person uttering it is prepared, on a fitting occasion and with selected means, to carry in to effect.

3. Positive threats come even nearer conviction. Here desire and purpose legally assume their strongest form. (Harris' case, 12 State Trials, 841–846)

4. Preparation for the commission of crime, whether auxiliary or otherwise, is even more powerful against a prisoner than words, for it amounts to intention expressed by acts. (Earl Ferris' case, 19 State Trials, 904 A female servant, living with the prisoner, was sent out to walk with the children. In the present case the servants were sent off to bed) In Harris' case, 2d Chandler, Am. Crim. Trials, 353, 386, a deliberate attempt to create alibi evidence in advance of a crime was made.

5. Opportunity and facilities include the possession of means, and form together positive criminative circumstances. Here it grew out of existing circumstances and relations. The relation of mistress and keeper multiplied almost indefinitely the opportunities and facilities.

6. A loaded revolver or pistol found in the possession of a woman, in a peaceful neighborhood, who has used threats against a man found murdered in her house, under circumstances like the present, raises a presumption against her, although he may have been killed by another weapon, not found; (Commonwealth vs. Williams, 2d Cushing, 582) especially when it clearly appears that such pistol was once his property, and there was time to dispose of the killing weapon.

7. Circumstances in this case attach against the prisoner, as well where these circumstances preceded as where they followed the crime.

8. Here was proximity of the accused to the scene of the crime at the very time of its committal, made more near by a false key and lewd intercourse. This raises a legal presumption of participation in the criminal act, especially when coupled with threats.

9. Guilty actions are so often attached to a secret manner of committal of crime, that the law is satisfied with a conclusion drawn from evidence of mere circumstances, and from these alone, and without a single requirement of direct testimony, save the production of the dead body. The commission of the act charged may be fairly presumed by the Jury. (Russell on Crimes, 726.)

And a conclusion of guilt may depend upon a number of circumstantial links which alone may be weak, but taken together are strong and able to conclude. (McCann vs. The States, 13 Swedes and M. 471)

10. Where medical evidence shows that a more mortal wound might have been given than any of those which were inflicted in this case, (namely, where the spinal cord commences,) the idea of a wounding by a person possessed of anatomical knowledge is much weakened. While the facts of random and heiter-skeiter cuts, and several mortal wounds, are against the idea that the deed was done by one who was schooled in or had studied surgery or anatomy, as such a one would not have done the former, nor found the latter necessary.

Jurors are to take post mortem experiments with great caution, and as possessing no weight. Thus, experiments by blowing a dead body, lead to no just conclusions, as common sense tells us that there is a total want of resistance and an entire relaxation of muscles, while the living man is made up of active substance and principles of resistance.

11. When a palpable murder has been committed, legal circumstances may attach and be sufficient to convict without the necessity of finding the weapon which caused it. The law may require a dead body to be produced before a conviction for murder can attach; but, being produced and the violence apparent, it does not insist on a sight of the weapon. It can deal with the accused without it.

REMARKS OF JUDGE DEAN.

Mr. Dean addressed the Jury first for the prisoner. After a brief reference to the above points, he, before attempting to show any inapplicability or inefficiency, announced that the defence would expect from the Jury a verdict declaring the innocence of the prisoner, before they left their seats. In presenting their case to the Jury, he did not intend any reference to that brutal man who conducted the inquest on the body of Dr. Burdell, but nevertheless, he would ask the prosecution to state why it was that his client had been charged with such a crime any more than any other of the million who live within the sound of the fire-bell on the City Hall. They were not before the court to prove who committed the deed. They were not there to show that it was some father determined to wash out his daughters disgrace in the blood of her injurer; nor to show that it was committed by the hand of an injured husband, seeking vengeance upon the violator of his bed. Neither were they there to show that it was done by one who imagined he had pecuniary advantage to gain by the commission of the deed. They were there to prove that the accused did not commit the murder. They had accepted the gauntlet thrown down by the prosecution and they had proved her not guilty. And here, least he might forget it in another connection, he would ask, why it was that the extraordinary omission on the part of the prosecution to show at what time Dr. Burdell entered No. 31 Bond-street, the night of the murder, and where he was prior to that time. The prosecution had not attempted to prove that; but on the contrary, and reversing the long-established rule in such cases, they had required the defence to prove not only, innocence but where the accused was during every moment of that day and fatal night. They had shown that.

The prosecution had attempted to show that the accused was the mistress of Dr. Burdel, and that she had slain him because he refused to make her his wife. That charge had been amply refuted. It had been shown by witnesses on whom the prosecution had not attempted to cast the faintest shadow of suspicion. In attempting to establish the charge they had brought in a servant, whose character was sufficiently clear before the Jury, to swear that she informed the accused that the Doctor was about to leave his house, and that the accused said he might not live to accomplish it. Testimony which, if true, could not have escaped the memory of that servant when before the Coroner's Jury, but which, singularly enough, she had not remembered until long afterwards, and then only after having been conversed with by many. But what the prosecution had attempted to prove was by no means so extraordinary under the circumstances as what they had not attempted to prove. It had been shown that during the afternoon Dennis Hubbard had been in the Doctor's room, Dennis Hubbard, a woman known to have been his mistress, a woman, the accused had declared, she would not suffer to live again in the house with her family. That woman was there, and in the Doctor's room, and why, he would ask, had she not been called to testify when she left there. The time when the Doctor must make his marriage known was drawing near. Had the Doctor called this former mistress—this Dennis Hubbard—to his room, for the purpose of telling her of his marriage and that she must be cast off? Was that the case? Was she thus made the jealous woman; and was jealous woman's foolish hate thus excited in her breast? She had not been called that the truth might have been known. She was known to have been in his room. It was not known when she left it; although she was at hand, and might have been called. She knew Blaisdell. It had been shown that Blaisdell was there during the afternoon, or was to have been there that evening. Should not this Dennis Hubbard have been called to show whether he had been there, while she was present; and if so, should not both have been called, to show which was there last. And again, it was claimed that the Doctor had gone out that evening. Where did he go? How long did he remain? Who was he with, and with whom did he converse during his absence? The Doctor was a man well known in the City. Some one must have seen and spoken with him. Why had such person or persons not been called? Nothing of the kind had been done. The prosecution had charged the accused with having committed the murder, and that was all they had done. It was necessary to have shown at what hour Dr. Burdell was murdered. If Dr Burdell had partook of his dinner that day, an analysis of the contents of his stomach would have shown it. If he had partaken of his supper, an analysis of the contents of his stomach would have discovered that important fact. But no witness had been called to that point, and there was no evidence that such an analysis had been made. Although it was clear that Dr. Knight, another of the sons-in-law of Coroner Connery, had taken out the stomach before Dr. Woodward, who conducted the examination of the body, arrived. So with the wounds. There has been no sufficient dissection of the parts to ascertain their depth and direction. In fact, there had been no evidence produced by the prosecution fixing any facts other than Dr. Burdell was killed, and that the accused was not guilty of the deed.

After calling upon the Judge to direct the Jury that in accordance with the law and the facts, the accused must be declared "Not Guilty" without leaving their seats; and telling the Jury that such was their duty, he took his seat, to be followed by the District Attorney.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S SPEECH.

Mr. Hall, in replying, said he did not rise to speak to the little audience of this room or the greater audience of the newspaper world without. He would not be led into the discussion of any irrelevant issues, for he should remember that he was a public officer to comment simply on the facts. He should not attack the newspapers, because that public officer who could not sustain the honest censure of his newspaper friends, had no business to live and call himself a man of a civil character. It had been said this was a very mysterious murder, but where was the mystery in it that discriminated it from any other murder they had read of? The disappearance of Dr. Burdell for a few hours that night was no more mysterious than the disappearances which were happening every day amongst ourselves, and which were only explained because we were still alive in person to explain our disappearance if called on. In this case the accused had, to distract attention from herself, raised the hue-and-cry against this man and that woman, and called on the law to apprehend another, but the law was not to be so misled; it placed its hand upon her shoulder and said, "What need have we to go further? You have the motive, the means, the ability, the presence, and you shall be held accountable in the judgment of the honest men of the world." As to the question of motive, he insisted that there was not the slightest particle of evidence that Dr. Burdell had any other enemy in the world.

He dwelt upon the ill will shown to the Doctor by all the members of the family. Even the servants were taught to slight him and refuse him obedience. They quarreled with him and refused to go down stairs to let him in at night, when he was bolted out. So insecure did he deem himself in that house that he refused to eat or drink there, refused the food that was sent him, and took his meals at the principal hotels of the City. As to the marriage between the Doctor and the defendant, the evidence was inferential only. The counsel for the defence had conceded that it was not legally proved, and so the Court would charge them. But if there was a marriage, the old law, when jealousy was proved against a wife, and her husband died in her house,—she was called upon to show that she had no participation in his death. If she were his wife, did that make the motive any less? Might it not make it greater? Yet this man of the world acted towards the defendant as if she was not his wife,—had business dealings and litigation with her afterwards,—swore before a Commissioner in November, a month after the alleged marriage, that he did not have a certain note of hers. The question of the marriage, however, might be dismissed altogether, from the minds of and place it on both, and let the community know that while it is true that juries

When human life is in debate,
Can ne'er too long deliberate—

yet, that if they deliberate to such an extent as to give immunity to crime, by acquittal, when circumstances are damning, there will come into the world and be inaugurated that millennial triumph of the powers of darkness of which we all have read in holy writ.

At the close of the District-Attorney's speech, the Court took a recess of one hour.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Court re-assembled at 3 o'clock, when it was difficult for those engaged in the case to obtain admission, so dense was the crowd on the stairways and in front of the buildings. The interior of the Court rooms was packed as during the morning session; but notwithstanding the crowd, there was neither noise nor confusion. Officers Berthelf, Bishop, Bateman and McKnight were successful in their efforts to keep order and their attention to the ventilation of the Court rooms, added greatly to the comfort of all.

REMARKS OF MR. CLINTON.

The Court announced its readiness to proceed, and Mr. Clinton was to close the case for the defence.

He had hoped that after the innocence of his client had been proven, the District Attorney would have assembled the gross attack with which he had opened himself, but in this he was disappointed, for in his remarks of to-day he had again repeated the same unwarranted assertions. Had he confined himself to his duty as prosecuting officer, he might have waived the right of summing up. Why was it that he could not let the opportunity pass without distorting every particle of evidence? There was one part of the case that he wished more especially to advert to. The District Attorney had stated that an abortion had been performed on the defendant. There was no evidence of that and he contended that it was a base slander. Did this report come from those who knew her best—from any of her associates? No, it came from the slanderous lips of a woman who was dragged with liquor. Hannah, the cook, was made to swear it. He said "made," for the thumb-screws were applied to her by the notorious Coroner. But God had in his wisdom supplied an antidote to the poison she sought to instil into the jury-box. The face of this drunken cook bore the marks of inebriation—it looked, indeed, as if she were seething in bad liquors. Had Hannah really made such a discovery as she claimed, would she not, in all likelihood, have spoken of it to some one in the house, or some person she knew? Yet the District Attorney put no question tending to corroborate her. On her cross examination, too, she showed a reluctance to answer, and in no upright witness would have shown. The jury would see from her whole manner that there was no responsibility to be placed upon anything she stated, except where it was corroborated. Farewell, then, to this foul slander. But the public prosecutor had not rested here. He had sought to cast a shameful imputation upon the character of the defendant's eldest daughter. Was it not enough that his client should be made to suffer herself? But must the brand of infamy be sought to be placed upon the head of her innocent offspring? Great as was her affliction before, it was nothing to what she must have suffered when she heard there infamous slanders directed against her daughter. The Jury should recollect that in every instance where Hannah Conlan and Mary Donohe had testified to declarations made in the presence of other parties they were flatly contradicted. Where they testified to conversations when no one else was present, they could not, of course, be contradicted; but inasmuch as they were contradicted where others were present, they were unreliable in every instance. He further alluded to the feeling displayed by those witnesses. Before the latter had left the Court she gave utterance to curses against the defendant. Yet with all their disposition to falsify they were compelled to admit facts enough to carry the antidote with the bane of their testimony. They had to admit that, with the exception of the few altercations they testified to, the relations he were Dr. Burdell and the defendant had been uniformly kind. With regard to the expressions alleged to have been made use of by Eckel, on the morning after Snodgrass had hit in Dr. Burdell, counsel reviewed the circumstances, and asked if this act of young Snodgrass—this kind act of getting up and letting in the Doctor—was to be twisted into evidence of bad feeling? This was a cool assurance on the part of the District Attorney, unparalleled, to ask them to find the defendant guilty, because on a certain night the hall door-lock would not work. But the learned public prosecutor farther laid great stress on the fact that the house was going to be let to Mrs. S snnary. Now why should the defendant desire to keep the house when she and Dr Burdell were both to travel on the Continent of Europe this Summer? Suppose, even, that all the testimony of Hannah and Mary Donohe were true, what did it amount to? No complaint was made against Dr. Burdell in them, except where he wanted to bring in Domis Subbard to dly in the house. Was not she justified, as a mother and a wife in objecting to have a woman of vile character live in her house? Why, had she not remonstrated, the District Attorney would have used it as an argument to show that her own character was bad. But, said the District Attorney, this lady had the means of dispatching Dr. Burdell, and therefore they were to find her guilty of having killed him. Now, the pistol in her possession was accounted for by the fact that the Doctor had requested her to keep it. The paper which the Doctor had signed was made a great deal of by the public prosecutor. This, however, was easily accounted for when they recollected that the Doctor had been reluctant to perform his engagements, and those papers had passed between them prior to their marriage. As to the suits of breach of promise of marriage and slander sufficient had been said, and he would not take up time with that subject. If she was not married, the District-Attorney argued that it was a circumstance tending to prove her guilty of the murder; while if she was married, he seemed to think it showed an equally strong motive on her part to commit the deed. Seeing that he could not bring forward any evidence to convict the defendant, he thought he would throw a stigma upon her family, by saying that they bore an ill-feeling towards the deceased. It was further sought to infer that because Dr. Burdell had not on one or two occasions drank some punch sent up by the defendant, therefore there was a feeling of enmity between them. How absurd was such an argument! As to this and other matters he was quite willing to leave them to the Jury without comment. The public prosecutor had said a great deal in regard to the motive of this woman to kill her husband. Now what earthly interest could she have had to seek his death? He was her husband, making a large income, and in a few months all secrecy was to be dispelled, and they were to have traveled together, and to have lived acknowledged as man and wife. Strange as it might seem, with all the foibles of Dr. Burdell, with all the rough points of his character, the defendant loved him as she loved her very existence. This would seem strange to those unacquainted with them; but such was the fact. Whatever had been said derogatory to his memory, even in her defence, was against her wishes. He would leave the case in the hands of the Jury. He felt assured that she would be vindicated, and every stain placed upon her children by this atrocious prosecution would be removed.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S ADDRESS.

Immediately Mr. Clinton had concluded, the Attorney-General rose and addressed the Jury for the prosecution. On the night of Jan. 31, he said, a murder exceeding in atrocity almost any murder ever committed, occurred in this City, and created all over the country an excitement almost unparalled. The person suspected of the commission of the murder was now on trial in that Court, whither he had been summoned on the part of the prosecution to find out who was the murderer of Dr. Burdell and not to convict Mrs. Cunningham. He would rejoice to see her acquitted if she were no guilty, but there was no sympathy due to her merely because she was a woman. If vengeance came to her, it was her fault; if her offspring had to drink of the bitter cup, it was her deed, not the deed of the Court—not the deed of the Jury. He, as a prosecuting officer, found himself upon trial there—the District Attorney was on trial. So much sympathy had been created for her, and it was even said that, if set free by the verdict of the Jury, she would be followed home by a shouting mob, wild with exultation at her release. Let there be no such mob. If acquitted, let her, indeed go home, and in the silence and solitude of her chamber, thank God that He had delivered her from that fiery trial.

That Dr. Burdell was dead no one disputed. No one denied that he was intentionally killed. It was the task of the prosecution, on behalf of the people, to show who did it. All the evidence was circumstantial. No one saw the deed committed. The evidence tending to the inculpation of the accused was composed of a chain of circumstances, either of which taken separately, would seem to be of small importance. But look at the bridge which spanned the mighty Niagara. Would any one think, examining one of those little links, that a sufficient number of them could be so firmly strung together, as to compose a bridge able, in its strength to sustain the weight of the rushing locomotive? So these little circumstances, added, fact to fact, and link to link, presented an accumulation of evidence which it might be impossible to resist. If the chain were broken, they must acquit the prisoner; if it was unbroken, they must convict her. All they had to do in the matter was to arrive at the truth; but he would warn them not to suffer their sympathies to carry them too far. Men act from motives; and had this woman any motive to commit this act? If Dr. Burdell were her husband, she either did or did not love him. Did she love him? All the family sat in her bedroom, occupied her bedroom—Snodgrass, Eckel—but who ever saw Dr. Burdell, her husband, there? A husband who never went into his wife's room, when almost anybody else could go there! Then there were threats used. Well, for his part he did not believe much in threats. When two people quarrel, and one says, "I will knock your brains out," he simply means that he would knock the other down, if he dared to.

But here is an extraordinary case. A woman goes to rent the house of Dr. Burdell; she goes to look at the rooms, and the defendant says, "He may not live to see me out of this house." The reality followed close upon the heels of the prophecy. It had been asked, would she have said it had she intended to do it? The devil's bars are always too short at both ends, and to ask a person meditating a crime to act first like an honest person, is asking too much. If she did this deed, that remark was the devil within her speaking out. It was the interior woman speaking to herself, rather than to the person who heard it. He would call the attention of the Jury to some circumstances. The servants were sent to bed; the girls slept down stairs. And why? Because one of them was going away. There was such a thing as proving too much. Unfortunately the three slept in one bed, and the mother immediately went to sleep; they would have enjoyed their conversation as well in their own room. He was not here to cast aspersion upon the daughters, but he would say that Hannah, the cook, was as much entitled to respect as they. It would not do to say that because she was an Irish cook she was not to be believed. The girl who earns her livelihood by the sweat of her brow is as much entitled to respect as the one dressed in gaudy colors, who lives in the Fifth Avenue.

He drew the attention of the Jury to the conduct of the defendant when she was first told of the murder. She remained in her room, at one time crying and fainting, at another talking of the property, while Snodgrass and Dr. Main went down to examine the body. But if she had been his wife, would she have so acted? Would a loving wife, bearing of her husband's violent death, have been prevented from rushing down stairs, and throwing herself by the side of the corpse? She could have gone down, and, if fall she must, she would fall on the dead body of her husband with a sigh that she had not been there to save him. But, that woman never loved Harvey Burdell. He was not her husband. One of the Jury had asked if she had power to go down stairs. Yes, God gave her that power, and never took it from her. The Counsel for the defence had admitted that she was seduced by Harvey Burdell, and that she was not to blame for that. Is she not to be blamed? She, a woman with two marriageable daughters, not to be blamed when she allowed herself to be seduced? There was another singular feature about the evidence; a Doctor from Brooklyn had said that the defendant had the rheumatism, and that her joints were weakened. He (the Attorney-General) would like to have her, in a fit of passion, stand before that Doctor, with a dagger in her hand, and see whether he would rely for protection on the rheumatic weakness of her joints. Ah, but—says the defence—it was done by an anatomist. An anatomist! You are to suppose that a surgeon steals into this man's chamber and artistically stabs him to the heart. Artistical nonsense! Was Bill Poole artistically shot when he got the bullet in his heart? And yet there is hardly a physician in the City who could have shot him in the same place! There is no necessity in a man going to a surgical college to learn to stab a man. As for the hymn sung by one of this woman's daughters the day after the murder, they say it was this—

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.

That was not the hymn they sung. It was to the same tune; but the words must have been—

"Woman moves in a mysterious way
Her wonders to perform."

The policeman's attention was called to this song, as he thought it a strange circumstance that singing should be carried on in a house where a foul murder had just been committed, and the inmates of which were suspected of the crime, one of them claiming that the murdered man was her husband. He would say to the jury that this was the most monstrous case they had ever been engaged in. An acquittal of this woman, if she be guilty, will add but another to the many cases on record, that no murderer can be convicted at all. All they have to do is to wait until the passion of men is dissipated, till the storm is passed over, and then, with the aid of an ingenious and talented counsel, and with witnesses who are ready to swear anything, the sympathy is all turned in their favor. The consequences of a conviction are awful. This whole family would be ruined. These young daughters lost forever. They must suffer beyond redemption. And these boys, too. But with that the jury had nothing to do except so far that it should lead them the more carefully to scan the evidence and see that their verdict was warranted by the evidence. He charged them to look to it that they did not convict but on evidence which was irresistible to their own mind and which carried deep conviction to their bosoms. When you entered that box you took the responsibility of standing between her and justice. God and the community so deal with you as you deal with yourselves, your own conscience and your God.

Mr. Dean wished to make a correction in the statement of the Attorney-General, but the Court objected, saying that the Jury knew what the evidence was. Silence having been proclaimed, the Judge proceeded to deliver the following charge:

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE TO THE JURY.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY—The prisoner at the bar stands charged with one of the highest crimes known to the law—that of taking the life of a human being, Harvey Burdell, on the night of the 30th of January last. You have heard, with commendable patience and attention, the evidence in support and in refutation of this accusation; and you have listened to the comments and scrutiny of the learned and eloquent counsel engaged in this cause upon the testimony thus educed. It now remains for the Court to state to you the principles of law applicable to this case, and render you such aid as may be in its power, in classifying and arranging the testimony and indicating the proper considerations applicable to its various parts in your consideration of it. It can be hardly necessary for the Court to remind you, gentlemen, of the solemn and important responsibilities resting upon you. The oath which you have taken demands of you that you will true deliverance make be ween the people of this State and the accused, and its fulfillments solemnly requires of you that you divest your minds of all sympathy for or prejudice against the prisoner, or any of the various persons connected with this startling tragedy. You must close your minds to all external influences or considerations—divest them entirely of all hate, or knowledge, even so far as you are capable, of the party charged with this crime, except as it appears in the testimony which has been given since you were impannelled in this case. Above all, gentlemen, you must not forget that although you are sitting upon the life of one who belongs to that sex which instinctively appeals to yours for protection and support and sympathy, and which forms the tendarest ties and associations of life, is always so promptly and willingly rendered, you are to shut your eyes and steel your hearts to those considerations. Crime knows no sex, and justice in its administration, is no respector of person, age or condition. All stand alike equal to its temple, and those who are called on to minister at it sacred altar but bring ineffable disgrace upon its purity and their holy office if they can be swerved from their duty by improper influences or illegitimate considerations. The Revised Statutes of this State (2 R. S. 656 7, sec. 4 and 5) declare the "killing of a human being without the authority of law (unless it be manslaughter or excusable or justifiable homicide, as thereinafter defined) to be murder, when perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or of any human being," and in some other cases which are not material to be stated for our present purpose. That the homicide in this case was neither justifiable nor excusable cannot be for a moment maintained. If there is evidence in this case that sufficient deliberation was had to form a design to take life, and to put that design into execution by destroying life, then there is sufficient deliberation to constitute murder, no matter whether the design be formed at the instant of striking the fatal blow or whether it be contemplated for months. It is enough that the intention precedes the act, although that follow instantly. The law has no favor to extend either to the rapid or slow execution of the design. Malice aforethought, or premeditated design to kill, may be conceived at the moment the fatal stroke was given as well as at any time before. Malice aforethought, or premeditated design, means intention to kill, and if such means are used as are likely to produce death the legal presumption is that death was intended. So in the present case, if you are satisfied that such means were used by the person or persons who inflicted these wounds upon the deceased, as were likely to produce death, then such killing is murder, and the party who caused that death is guilty of that crime. Assuming, then, that you will find that the deceased was murdered, the next and momentous inquiry in this case is, did the prisoner at the bar inflict those wounds which caused the death of the deceased, or aid in the infliction of them? This question must be met in this case with calmness and a firm determination on your part to meet all its responsibilities. Public justice demands that the guilty, if ascertained, should make that expiation to the offended majesty of the laws which their violation demands. The peace and good order of the community, and the security and safety of our domestic firesides, alike demand that this great offence, if the offender can be ascertained, should meet its punishment. But these reflections, while they are powerful incentives to the discharge of our duty and our whole duty, must not lead us to be the instruments of wrong, or confound the innocent with the guilty. There are two modes of ascertaining and proving a state of facts: First, either by positive evidence; or secondly, that which is in its nature circumstantial. The distinction between them is this: direct or positive evidence is when a witness can be called to testify to the precise fact which is the subject of issue on the trial—that is in a case like the present, that the party accused did cause the death of the deceased. Whatever may be the kind or force of the evidence, this is the fact to be proved. But in this case no one was present at the time of the commission of the offence. No one saw the act performed which caused the death of the deceased, consequently there can be no direct or positive testimony by whom the offence was committed. It is wholly unsusceptible of strict legal proof. But experience has shown that in such a case resort may be had to circumstantial evidence—that is, that a body of facts may be proved of so conclusive a character, when taken into connection and as a whole, as to warrant a firm belief of the facts, quite as strong and certain as that upon which prudent and discreet men are accustomed to rely in relation to their most important concerns. It would be fatal to the administration of justice if such proof could not be availed of in judicial proceedings, for if it was necessary always to have positive evidence how many criminal acts committed in the community, destructive of its peace and subversive of its order and security, would go wholly unpunished? Strong circumstantial evidence in cases of crimes of murder, committed for the most part in secret, is the most satisfactory of any from whence to draw the conclusion of guilt—for men may be seduced, and often are, to perjury, by many base motives, to which the secret nature of the offence affords peculiar temptations. But it can scarcely happen that many circumstances, especially if they be such over which they could have no control, forming together the links of a transaction, should all unfortunately occur to fix the presumption of guilt on an individual, and yet such a conclusion be erroneous. And in a case of circumstantial evidence, when no witness can testify directly to the fact to be proved, it is arrived at by a series of other facts, which by experience have been found so associated with the fact in question, that in relation of cause and effect, they lead to a satisfactory and certain conclusion. As when footprints are discovered after a recent snow, it is certain that some animated being has passed over the snow since it fell, and from the form and number of the foot prints, it can be determined with equal certainty whether they are those of a man, bird or quadruped. As a familiar illustration, we find an apple on the ground; we know it is certain, there can be no doubt of it, that that apple once grew upon a tree—that it did not grow upon the ground. You find it lying in the street or on the grass. The conclusion inevitably is that that apple came from some tree and that it grew there. This kind of evidence is the result of experience and observed facts and coincidences, establishing a connection between the true and proved facts, and those sought to be proved. The advantages of evidences of this kind are, that as the source is generally obtained from several and distant sources, a chain of circumstances as it is likely to be prepared and arranged, and falsehood and perjury are more likely to be detected and fail of their purpose. The disadvantages are that a jury have not only to weigh the evidence of facts, but after you have deemed the facts established by the evidence, drawing the just conclusions from them, in doing which, gentlemen, in this case, you must not be led by prejudice or partiality, or from any want of due deliberation or sobriety of judgment, to make hasty and false deductions. This source of error cannot exist in positive and direct evidence. Then you have only to judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and that being established, it follows that the facts testified to are to be taken as true. But, gentlemen, it is quite apparent that after you have established in your own minds the facts proved, that great care and caution ought to be used in drawing the inferences from these facts. These inferences must be fair and natural, not forced or artificial. The common law appeals to the plain dictates of common experience and sound judgment and the inference to be drawn from the facts must be a reasonable and natural one, and to a moral certainty, a certain one. It will not do that it is probably only; it must be reasonably and morally certain. Another consideration is that each fact which is necessary to the conclusion must be distinctly and independently proved, by competent evidence; because it may, and often does happen, that in making out a case in circumstantial evidence, many facts are given in evidence, not because necessary to the conclusion sought to be produced, but to show, that they are consistent with it and not repugnant, and said in rebutting a contrary presumption; and the rule is, that all the facts proved must be consistent with each other, and with the main facts sought to be proved, (as in this case, the participation of the accused in the commission of the crime charged.) It follows, that if any other fact necessary to the conclusion is wholly inconsistent with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused, it breaks the chain of circumstantial evidence upon which the inference depend, and however plausible or apparently conclusive the other circumstances may be, the charge must fail. The circumstances all taken together must be of a conclusive nature and tendency, leading on the whole to a satisfactory conclusion, and producing in effect a reasonable and moral certainty that the accused, and no one else, committed the offence charged. It is not sufficient that these facts and circumstances create a probability, though a strong one, and if, therefore, assuming all the facts to be true, which the evidence tends to establish, they may yet be accounted for on any hypothesis which does not include the guilt of the accused, then the proof fails to make out the charge. It is essential, therefore, that the circumstances taken as a whole, and giving them their reasonable and just weight and no more, should to a moral certainty exclude every other hypothesis. We must first be satisfied, as I have already stated, that the evidences establishes the corpus delicti, as it is termed, or the offence committed as charged; and in a case of homicide like the present, you must be satisfied not only that the death of the deceased was by violence, but must, to a reasonable extent, be satisfied that you can exclude the hypothesis of a death by suicide, or a death by the act of any other person. You must be satisfied of this beyond any reasonable doubts. Finally, if upon such proof there is a reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to it by an acquittal. It is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary; but, as already observed, the evidence must establish the truth to a reasonable and moral certainty—a certainty, which convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and the judgment of those who are bound conscientiously to act upon it. These rules, which are derived mainly from the case of the People vs. Webster, laid down by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, are well laid down by Edmonds, Justice, in the case of Polly Bodine; and as they are briefly stated by him, I will call your attention to them. First, the evidence must exclude to a moral certainty every other hypothesis but that of guilt. If you can reconcile the facts that are proved, with the belief or supposition that the prisoner is innocent—that somebody else committed the guilty deed—then that hypothesis which the law requires does not exist in your minds. You are, secondly, to bear in mind that circumstances are sometimes fabricated by innocent persons falsely accused. As, for instance, an uncle was arrested for the murder of his niece. He was heard chastising his niece severely, and she was heard to cry out, "You will kill me." She was afterwards missing, and nobody knew where she was. The uncle was strongly interested in her death, because he would have inherited at her death. He endeavored to save himself by dressing up another child to serve as his niece. That very fact was, as might be expected, taken as very strong evidence of guilt. The man was convicted, and afterwards the child returned home, having eloped in consequence of her severe chastisement. There can be little doubt that fabricated evidence operated strongly on the minds of the Jury. Fabrication is often resorted to by the really guilty to ward off suspicion from themselves. Another rule is, that the suppression of guilt must follow from all the facts, and be consistent with all of them, as I have before indicated to you. With these rules, gentlemen, and bearing them in mind, we will now proceed to consider the case before us. The theory on the part of the prosecution is that the prisoner committed the offence, because it is manifest that she intended to do so, and this intention was indicated by the threats she used and intentions expressed. If threats are used by a person having the power and opportunity of carrying them into execution, and the result threatened had been produced, then it is a strong circumstance, to fasten the guilt upon a party, to show threats used or intentions expressed. They are considerations of peculiar importance, and often controlling. It becomes important for you, therefore, gentleman, to consider the proof of the various witnesses in regard to this matter, and carefully to ascertain if any such threats or intentions were avowed by the prisoner. I do not think it necessary, after the very able and full comments of the counsel, to go over it particularly. I have observed during the trial that you have been most attentive listeners to the evidence, and I have no doubt that all the prominent parts of it are engraven on your memory. You will remember that the important testimony on this subject was that of Hannah Conlan, Davis, a policeman, Wilson, and other parties of less significance. These witnesses have testified to specific threats, and if they are to be believed, it shows an intention on the part of the accused to inflict some injury on the deceased, either for a real or an imaginary wrong. In this connection it is well for you to consider the relations between the deceased and the prisoner. On the part of the people it is shown that they first became inmates of the same house on or about the first of May, 1855, and that if the statment of Hannah Conlan is to be believed, about the 1st of December following the prisoner was delivered of the fœtus of a child, of which she alleged the deceased was the father. That on the 1st of May following the deceased rented a portion of his house to the prisoner for a year, and they continued inmates of the same house up to the time of his death. It would seem to be quite certain that at times they were not on very friendly terms. If the witnesses are to be believed they frequently engaged in angry feelings towards each other, and it is for you to say whether those feelings resulted from wounded pride or unrequited affection, or to the omission of the deceased to fulfill his plighted vows to her, or proceeded from other causes. You must bear in mind that there is much testimony going to show that the deceased, on many occasions, held out to his friends and to others that he was paying attentions to the prisoner with reference to making her his wife; and thus subsequently, as the defence alleges, on the 28th of October, they were married. That does not seem, from my view of the case, to be an important consideration. If, however, you deem it necessary, and you are satisfied from the evidence in the case, that they were so married, you have a right to assume that in your deliberations. If you think that these things are adequate to satisfy your minds that either from threats or revenge, or satisfaction, these expressions of ill feeling proceeded from these causes, you will be justified in attributing them to that source. If, however, on the contrary, they proceeded from deadly hatred to the deceased, and emanated from a fixed determination upon her part to do him a personal injury, and to the extent expressed, then, they are to be taken as strong evidence of such an intent; and if you are satisfied that the prisoner had the power and was in a condition, and could otherwise have committed the offence charged they are evidence that such intent was accomplished. This leads to another inquiry: could the defendant commit the offence charged? And this leads to the inquiry as to the transactions in the house on the night of 30th January. It would seem to be indisputable that it was arranged in the early part of that day that Miss Ellen Cunningham should go with Dr. Beecher the next day, at 11 A. M., to Saratoga Springs to school. As soon as this arrangement was made the family commenced preparations for that event. Taking the testimony of the inmates of the house, except that of Hannah Conlan, it would appear that all the members of the family, the prisoner Eckel, two Misses Cunninghams and Snodgrass, were engaged till 11 o'clock in the preparations, when they severally retired to rest, the prisoner and her two daughters occupying the same bed, in the third story, front room; that they so occupied it until morning, the prisoner sleeping in the middle between the two daughters; that they arose the next morning and all took breakfast together as usual, except Mr. Eckel, who was called away by a note from Mr. Ely, as he proved; that after breakfast they all retired to their apartments together in this third story, front room, where they were when Hannah the cook announced to them the death of the Doctor. You will also bear in mind the statement of the daughters as to the dress of their mother on Friday and Saturday. Now, gentlemen, if this statement is true—if the testimony of this witness is to be taken as establishing these facts, and there is nothing going to show that what they told was untrue, there can be no doubt that the prisoner did not participate, herself, in this bloody tragedy. It is for you to say, after a careful and deliberate examination of the testimony, sifting it thoroughly, taking into consideration all the relations of the witnesses to the prisoner, and the circumstances narrated by them, and corroborated or contradicted by other witnesses, to say whether it is such testimony as you can safely rely upon. In this connection it is proper to consider the theory announced on the part of the prosecution. They rely upon the threats by the prisoner towards the deceased, and the bitter feeling, the ill will which was so frequently manifested by her towards him; that having been married to him and being desirous of getting speedy possession of a part of his property, was an inducement to the commission of this crime; that these motives induced her to commit this crime, and are adequate motives therefor. I do not think it necessary to go into all the causes urged upon you by the counsel of the prosecution, as having produced this state of feelings between the prisoner and the deceased. Neither is it necessary to refer to the times at which these threats were expressed. If the testimony of Hannah Conlan is to be believed, they were expressed upon the very day of the death of the deceased, showing a continued expression of ill feeling towards the deceased, by the prisoner at the bar, for several months at least. They also allege that she did it; and that upon the day the deed was committed she ascertained that a boarder in the house, Mr Ullmann, was not to be at home until late in the evening; that she procured the preparation of a fire in the attic, to be lighted at any moment for the purpose of destroying the evidence of her guilt; that it must have been committed by some one in the house, and that she was the only person in the house that day who could have any adequate motive for committing the crime, and, therefore, that she must have done it. That about midnight an offensive smell was perceived in Bond-street, like the burning of clothes or leather, and that such burning took place, they say, is evident from the testimony of Dr Parmly. In reference to the testimony upon that subject you have, I doubt not, fresh in your mind Dr. Parmly's going out in the early part of the evening, when he smelled an offensive odor; his returning, going out again and again returning about 11 o'clock when he smelled it more strongly than before, which he describes as a different odor, and the last he distinguishes as arising from the burning of leather or woolen clothing—also as to the fire in the front attic room, which he saw from the steps of his house. In this connection you will bear in mind the statement of Dr. Smith and of his son—the fact that Dr. Smith had that very afternoon been burning in his stove pieces of woolen and leather. Whether or not this offensive odor might not have been created from that source it is for you to say. You will also remember the testimony of Dr. Main, that he experienced the same offensive smell; also, the testimony of a young gentleman, Mr. Baldwin, who experienced the same odor at an earlier hour and also the testimony of a young gentleman who went through Bond street, stopped at the corner of Bond street, and who did not experience any offensive smell at all. You will also remember the testimony of Mr. Ullmann, who came into the house about half past twelve, and experienced no sensation of this kind, and the testimony of the inmates of the house, who all concur in stating they experienced nothing of the kind. If I am incorrect in regard this, counsel will correct me.

Mr. Clinton—You are quite right, Sir.

His Honor—Then gentlemen there is a theory laid before you, that it was impossible from the experiments tried that these matters could have been burned in that grate in that room, without penetrating through the whole house and creating an odor that would have existed for some hours—twelve to twenty-four. It is for you to take these circumstances into consideration, give them their due weight, and arrive at such conclusions with reference to this fact as you may be advised. It certainly is an important fact for you to arrive at in the progress of the case, because if you establish it affirmatively it shows that there must have been some proceeding upon the part of the inmates of that house to do an extraordinary act, which, under the circumstances, might naturally and reasonably create the inference that they were endeavoring to destroy some evidences of guilt. But if you come to the conclusion that there was no matter of this kind burned there, that there was no fire there upon that night, then, gentlemen, the prosecution is without any theory, as I understand it, in reference to any attempt upon the part of the accused in respect to destroying evidences of guilt. Therefore I say, but it is an important point for you to consider, because if you establish it in the affirmative it tends much to elucidate the theory of the prosecution, and if you establish it in the negative it is a very serious obstacle in the way of establishing their theory.

It is alleged that the conduct of the accused on the Saturday when she heard of the death of Dr. Burdell, and her refusal to give testimony before the Coroner, are evidences of guilt. Now, gentlemen, it is a very ordinary means of ascertaining the fact of guilt or innocence to prove the conduct of the party at and immediately after the commission of the offence, and the conduct of the party on the first communication being made to them of the offence committed.

Now, you recollect the testimony of Hannah Conlan, who was the first person who announced the death of Dr. Burdell to the prisoner at the bar; you will bear in mind whether her conduct that morning, in dressing herself, in going down stairs, taking her breakfast with her daughters and the rest of the family, (Mr. Eckel was absent,) returning to her room in the third story, engaging in her domestic avocations—if the witnesses are to be believed—whether it is consistent with guilt or innocence. You are also to bear in mind whether the conduct she exhibited at this time this communication was made evinced innocence on her part of any instrumentality in the death of the deceased, or consciousness of guilt. This conduct has been so frequently alluded to by the learned counsel upon both sides, that it is not necessary for me to recapitulate it; but simply to call your attention to it. It is an important circumstance always—the conduct of the person charged with the crime when they first hear of the offence committed; and also their conduct when the crime is first charged home upon them. Now, the ordinary evidences of guilt are also the conduct of the party after the deed is committed. Flight and concealment are considered very strong evidences of guilt always. Then, the hearing before the Coroner's Jury—that also should be taken into the account by you. Whether she manifested willingness to give such evidence in relation to the circumstances as were in her knowledge, or whether she showed hesitation, and attempted concealment. You must look to that. And you will also bear in mind all the circumstances under which she was called down before the Coroner, and, if you think it exhibited any disposition of concealment—a refusal to disclose what she knew—then, that is to be taken as a circumstance against her. Then, gentlemen, another evidence, and which would have been a very striking one in this case, where a strong, stout, active, healthy man, as this deceased is proven to have been, in the prime and vigor of life, could have been murdered, as the deceased is alleged to have been, by a woman; whether such a rencontre could have taken place—whether such a result could have been produced by the prisoner at the bar—without leaving upon her person some marks or evidences of such a rencontre. You remember the evidence of the physician, of such marks remaining upon a female longer than upon a male, and the reason given for that established fact? As so such marks were proven, except the one alluded to under the shawl—and that, I believe, was not made out at all by any evidence—then I refused to permit the prisoner to show there were no marks upon her body, upon the principle well established by law that the party seeking the charge must prove it. Innocence is presumed until guilt is proven always; therefore, in the absence of any mark you are to assume that her person exhibited no evidence of this rencontre.

4. The appearance of the clothes of the accused. Now, upon the theory of the prosecution, they not having proven that any clothes in the house were defiled or stained, it must be perfectly apparent from the testimony of the physicians, and the evidences in the room which we have seen, that the person who did inflict these injuries must necessarily have been to a considerable extent covered with blood. I say the prosecution not having had it in their power to show any evidences of garments in the house thus defiled or stained, unless you shall find the theory sustained that this fire in the attic was prepared for the purpose of burning these clothes, it follows that there being no appearance of any stains or of any blood upon any of the garments of the prisoner, or of any in her house at any time, you are bound to consider that there were none. But if you find that fact, it is very difficult to reconcile the guilt of the accused with the facts which have been proven in this case, and which are manifest and apparent to all, that the person who inflicted these wounds must have had upon their clothes and person marks of blood, if not marks of violence. Now, gentlemen, another evidence—and a striking, if not controling one of the guilt of the person charged with murder—is, finding upon the accused weapons with which the deed either was perpetrated, or with which it might have been perpetrated, or in any places over which the accused had exclusive control or possession—as, for instance, the case put by one of the counsel, of a person shot by a pistol-ball, where a pistol was found in the possession of the accused, with which it was possible that the ball had been shot from it; and when the dissection took place, the ball found in the body of the deceased would not fit the pistol; therefore that presumption which, if the ball had fitted the pistol, would have been regarded in law as conclusive, failed entirely, because the two did not agree. Now, if in the present case there had been found upon the person of the accused, or in any one of her drawers over which she had exclusive control and possession, a weapon such as was competent to inflict these wounds upon the deceased, the case would have been a very strong one; nay, I may almost say a conclusive one, unless there were some other controling facts that the injury was not inflicted by the person who was in possession of the weapon.

Now, how is it in this case, gentlemen? While there was found in the possession of the prisoner—for I consider the bureau in her possession—there was found in her possession this dirk (holding up the dirk to the view of the Jury) which I have had one of the officers of the Court measure very carefully—its length is 4¾ inches, it is half an inch at the nut, tapering down to a point—and Dr. Uhl says those wounds could not have been inflicted with this instrument. Dr. Knight, Dr. Wood, and Dr. Uhl, measured the wounds, and the statements that they have given show conclusively that these wounds were not inflicted by that instrument, just as in the case of the pistol-ball. It is a perfect mathematical demonstration. Then the lancet blade is thrown out of the case entirely. Then, gentlemen, the only item of evidence about this matter is the pistol being found in the possession of the accused.

Now, it is not alleged or pretended in this case that the wounds were inflicted by the pistol at all, but it is argued that the possession of a pistol by a female is evidence of some murderous intent. Now that is the evidence in regard to this pistol. Dr. McGuire states that he was present when Dr. Burdell purchased it, or one very much like it. I judge from the subsequent testimony that we commit no error in assuming that this was the pistol which Burdell originally purchased with Dr. McGuire and used as his own. The testimony of one of the Miss Cunninghams is, that this pistol was given by Dr. Burdell to Mrs. Cunningham, while she was living in Twenty-fourth-street, before she went to the house in Bond street. It is not a very controlling circumstance in any event, because it is not pretended or alleged that any of the wounds inflicted upon the deceased were inflicted by a pistol. The most that can be made of this circumstance, supposing that the prisoner had inflicted the wounds, is that it was evidence that she had intended at some time or other (as it is argued on the part of the prosecution) to carry out the intention which she had expressed in reference to injuring Dr. Burdell.

Whether the possession of the pistol under these circumstances, is a reasonable presumption for you to draw, is for you to say. The next inquiry which presents itself is, had the prisoner at the bar the physical strength to inflict those wounds? That is a very important question for you to answer, if you go so far as this stage of the case. It is true, gentlemen, and you must bear it in mind, that a person excited by passion would do fourfold what the same person unexcited could; and to determine this question you must regard the testimony in regard to the strength of resistance which Dr. Burdell would naturally be supposed to make. And it appears to me that this is a very proper point for me to state to you the testimony in reference to the manner in which those wounds were inflicted, saying nothing now about the person who inflicted them. I think all the physicians agree that the first wound was inflicted on the right shoulder, while Dr. Burdell was sitting in his chair at the desk in the centre of the room, about midway between the door and the rear of the room. The person to have inflicted that wound on him must necessarily have been either in the room when he came in, or was, perhaps, more probably concealed in the front room, and came out after the Doctor had seated himself in his chair; for you will remember that it is in testimony that the door of the front room was locked, and the other access to those two rooms, which we have seen had a passage between them, was from the door of the Doctor's office, of which he had the key, and when he went out it was his custom to lock it. Now it is alleged on the part of the prosecution, as one of their grounds of argument to bring the charge home to the prisoner, that she had the key of the Doctor's rooms, and that she could, and probably did, gain access to them; and she must have been in them, to make out their theory, at the time when he returned, to go into his room.

You will remember that the bracket light at this side of the window—this bracket light which was to the instrument case—was found lighted in the morning precisely as it was left at night, with head pretty well on; some witnesses say that it was full on, some that it was not quite full on. You will remark I asked the question whether that light was sufficient to enable a person sitting in this chair at the desk to read. My object was to see how generally it lit the room. The answer was in the affirmative, and the room not being a very large one must have been very fully lighted. Doubtless the Doctor was seated there examining his bank book, or perhaps reading the newspaper, and the person who inflicted this wound on the right shoulder must have necessarily approached from behind him. Dr. Uhl says (and he was concurred in) that the wound must have been inflicted from behind while the Doctor was sitting, because the wound was on the right shoulder and drops of blood were found on the right side of the chair, as though blood had dropped there from the wound. Some of the witnesses seem to think that this wound must have been inflicted by a person taller than Dr Burdell. It is for you to say if I was inflicted while he was sitting down, whether it must have been inflicted by a person taller than Dr. Burdell or not. It is very apparent, I think, that when that wound was inflicted, there was something applied to the neck, (as from the medical statements there would seem to have been,) something either in the shape of a cord or a handkerchief, or a rope, something which was thrown round, which produced a strangling; whether it was done by the pulling of a handkerchief, or by a cord, it is evident that there was some effort of this kind. Immediately the Doctor must have sprung up from the chair, and made for the door, because the side of the door and side of the wall manifestly exhibits it, this blood which came from this wound remaining there. The person must have necessarily got the Doctor quite into the corner of the room, and I think that probably would account for the abrasion on the nose spoken of by Dr. Uhl. His head was pushed up into the corner of the room. I think that this theory is sustained by the evidence in the case, for all the other wounds upon the body were upon the left side, and none on the right side

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

We are to have an Anatomy of Humor by BURTON, as a companion volume to the Anatomy of Melancholy. The first four numbers of a new serial publication by APPLETON & Co. have appeared, entitled A Cyclopedia of Wit and Humor, of America, Ireland, Scotland, and England. By WM. E. BURTON, Comedian.

The work is to be published in forty numbers, and to be embellished with more than six hundred engravings, from original designs. It will be a book for all time, and furnish more light reading than any one volume ever contained before. But the great objection to it, if there are any objections, is the comprehensiveness of the editor's plan. It would have been better to have given a good selection of specimens of characteristic American humor—for, to give even a taste of English, Scotch and Irish humor, would require a much greater space than the editor has allowed himself. The four parts that have appeared are devoted exclusively to American writers, and the selections are generally well made, and include specimens from nearly all of our native authors who have distinguished themselves by their writings, as well as from some who have not. The extracts are chronologically arranged, in prose and verse, commencing with MORTON's "Song of the Maypole," written in 1625, and doubtless the first piece of humorous poetry produced on this continent. The four numbers bring down the extracts from American authors to the year 1840, and each number is illustrated with a fine steel engraving of a popular author. The first is very properly that of the compiler, Mr. BURTON; the others are HALLECK, HOLMES and IRVING. Mr. BURTON possesses an unrivalled collection of works of humor, and his studies of American literature have evidently been very close and comprehensive. The task he has imposed upon himself is by no means one of easy accomplishment, but it is one for which he possesses rare and extraordinary qualifications, and as it is a labor of love, we are sure of its being well performed. Among the American humorous writers from whose works Mr. BURTON has made his selections, we find the name of JAMES GORDON BENNETT, who appears as the author of a story called "Two Yards of Jaconet, or a Husband."

The Olive Branch; or, White Oak Farm, is the title of an anti-Uncle Tom's Cabin novel of Southern life. The author's aim is to prove that the Scriptures recognize and sanction Slavery, that its existence is strictly in accordance with the highest Christian precepts, and that the love of Christ is perfectly compatible with slave holding, slave-breeding and slave-dealing. We cannot in conscience say that the fictitious story which is intended by the author to perform this difficult work, is likely to convert any one holding an opposite opinion. It is a very tame, common-place story of Virginia life, and even its favorable pictures of Slavery are not to be compared with Mrs. STOWE's, in Dred. If the Southern or Northern advocates of Slavery desire to present the most captivating pictures of slave-life at the South, they could do better to print in a volume by themselves, some of Mrs. STOWE's sketches, which she has given in Uncle Tom and Dred, without the darker pictures which are intended as contrasts. The Olive Branch is published by LIPPINCOTT, of Philadelphia. But we have no clew to the author's name.

Miss LESLIE is the authoress of a popular cookery book, though we are not certain of her being a recognized authority among gourmands. Women, in fact, are doubtful authorities in such matters, and the only good cookery books have been written by men. But Miss LESLIE makes no pretensions, that we have ever heard, to being a cook, and without being a practical cook it is not possible to write a safe book on the subject. But there are certain great principles in cookery which every man and woman ought to understand, and bearing these in mind, a good essay on the art of preparing food might be written without any practical experience of the cuisine. To write recipes, however, requires absolute experience, and no one should venture to give a recipe for a dish without having first proved it. Miss Leslie lays it down as an axiom in her New Cookery Book, just published by PETERSON, of Philadelphia, that soups should have a distinct flavor of the principal ingredient of which it is composed. But this does not strike us as a sound Apician precept. Soups are necessarily compound dishes, and their delicacy and merit consists in the absence of a distinct prominent flavor. There should always be an uncertainty in the mind of the gourmand as to the nature of the soup which he has eaten. A distinct taste of beef, or mutton, or chicken would be offensive to a refined and educated appetite. The fact that in French cookery all the various soups are made of the same "stock," and are only distinguished by the last flavoring material added to it, is a sufficient refutation of Miss LESLIE's idea. The French are, in truth, the inventors of soup, and are the only authorities on the great art of composing that necessary overture to every good dinner. Although we do not regard Miss LESLIE as a competent authority in soups, yet there are certain American preparations in the shape of pies and cakes, in relation to which we have no doubt that she may be safely relied upon.

Knaves and Fools, or Friends of Bohemia, is the title of a satirical novel of London life by EDWARD M. WHITTY, which gives abundant evidence that a man may be a brilliant newspaper writer and yet produce a very poor book. Mr. WHITTY has written a good many racy and very telling articles in the London Leader; among them were a series entitled, "The Governing Classes," which had great merit. Mr. WHITTY is also a capital newspaper correspondent, and writes admirable letters to the Liverpool Journal, but the style necessary for such writing is essentially and radically unsuited to a continuous narrative, or the serious embodiment of character. But, making all allowance for the difference between the style of a weekly paper and a volume, we are still at a loss to account for the failure of Mr. WHITTY in his attempt at novel. The satire is too palpably intended for satire, and the characters and incidents are both common-place and unnatural. Great expectations were raised by the announcement of this novel, the name of which, Friends of Bohemia, promised a knowing record of the ways of the class who are now generally denominated Bohemians. But, instead of Bohemians, we have only a foolish Lord, a knavish Liverpool merchant, and a reckless spendthrift. The material is exceedingly slender, the story nothing, the style flippant, and the motive trivial. The Friends of Bohemia is an unmistakable literary failure. The New-York publishers of the work are RUDD & CARLETON.

The last production of HUGH MILLER, the sheets of which were passing through the press when the unhappy author in a moment of insanity, brought on by severe application to his professional studies put an end to his eminently useful and honorable life, have been published by GOULD & LINCOLN of Boston. The work is entitled The Testimony of the Rocks, or, Geology in Its Bearings on the Two Theologies, Natural and Revealed. A memorial of the Death and Character of Miller is added to the work. It consists of twelve lectures, part of which were read before scientific societies, and part of them before popular audiences, and one of them has been before published in this country. The volume is largely illustrated.

There are but few persons who are fortunate enough to be the owners of green-houses, but we presume there are very few who do not take an interest in these elegant and costly appendages to a country mansion. Whoever is in the habit of building chateaux in Spain, as a matter of course, have a long range of green-houses attached to their structures, and all such may obtain a good deal of valuable information on the subject of constructing green-houses from a volume devoted exclusively to that subject, just published by SAXTON & Co., of this City. The author, Mr. ROBERT B. LEUCHARS, is a "Garden Architect" by profession, and mingled up with his practical hints about green-houses is a good deal of valuable information on horticultural topics generally.

Scandal is the title of a very pleasantly written, social novel, by Mrs. J. T. BICKFORD, published by SHEPARD, CLARK & BROWN, of Boston.

Nebraska in 1857, is the title of a serviceable little book, by JAMES M. WOOLWORTH, with the imprint of Omaha on the title page. A book printed in Omaha City, in the Territory of Nebraska, causes us to open our eyes to the importance of the facts which it discloses.

Messrs. JOHN P. JEWETT & Co., of Boston, have published a new romantic story by D. P. THOMPSON, author of the Green Mountain Boys, and other popular stories of wild American life, entitled Gant Gurley; or, the Trappers of Umbagog, a tale of Border Life. There is good writing and great descriptive power in Gant Gurley; the border life is Eastern, and the scenes are all purely and strongly American.

The Border Rover, by EMERSON BENNETT, published by PETERSON, of Philadelphia, is a wild and romantic story of Western border life, written in the popular style of the magazines, and without any of that seriousness of motive so perceptible in Gant Gurley.

If the number of elementary books on the art of oratory which are published in this country, give any indication of the demand for such works, there must be an inordinate desire among the rising generation to excel in the art of speaking in public. To the great number of such books which we have noticed within a few months past, we have to add another: Sanders' School Speaker, a Comprehensive Course of Instruction in the Principles of Oratory, by CHARLES W. SANDERS. Published by IVISON & PHINNEY.

The Constitutional Amendments—The Changes at the Custom-House—Major Barstow's Mission—The Spiritualists—Page's Venus.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

BOSTON, Saturday, May 2, 1857.

Three amendments to the Constitution of Massachusetts were adopted yesterday by the people, the first providing that no person shall vote or hold office, who cannot read and write; the second limiting the number of members of the House to 240 and providing for their election by Districts; the third providing for the election of the 40 Senators in single Districts instead of as now by Counties. All three are carried by large majorities. To the second and third there was almost no opposition.

The town system of representation, which has prevailed in Massachusetts for more than two centuries, and is associated with some of the most brilliant achievements of our legislation and oratory, was abrogated without an emotion that savored of the pathetic. We have outgrown it slowly and naturally; but it was rather hard that it did not find a single voice or pen to say kind words of it, when it ceased to exist. Not a single one of the multitude of champions of the "small towns" in the Constitutional Convention of 1853, came forward to stay the stroke or eulogise the victim.

To the first amendment, however, considerable opposition was displayed, and about a third of the whole number of votes was cast against it. The ballots issued by the Democratic State Committee were printed "No" on this first proposition, and "Yes" on the two others. Many Republicans also opposed it, probably deeming it only a vexatious innovation, destined to be productive of no advantage. I am told that Senator WILSON voted against it, in company with other intelligent Republicans whose predelictions are nevertheless in favor of the doctrines of "Americanism."

You know that cannibalism has been introduced at the Custom-House, and the Democrats are devouring one another. The first detachment of the newly-appointed were initiated in their duties yesterday. Most of them are from the country, and very green. I notice in the number the name of a resident of a neighboring town, in which, though a Democrat, he became tax collector, by underbidding everybody else who desired the office. When his books were examined at the end of the year, the letter "f" was found marked against the name of some fifty persons on his list. "What does this 'f' mean?" asked one of the examiners, "and here's another, and another." "Why, don't ye know?" answered the tax collector; "them's the people that I called on, that 'fused to pay. I asked 'em for the money and they 'fused, so I marked 'em "f" for "'fused."

An incident happened at the Custom House on Thursday afternoon, indicative of equal intelligence. Its outlines, I believe, are already in the newspapers, and it deserves circulation. One of these strapping up-country Democrats arrived at the foot of State-street in a cab, on which were piled his three trunks. They were safely landed on the granite steps of the building, the driver was paid, and Jonathan hunted up the Irish porter and told him to take "them trimmins" up to his "room" "What room?" inquired the porter. "Why, you darned fool, by bed chamber, and be quick about it," responded the indignant Inspector. It took some time to convince him that the "Aids of the Revenue" are not fed, lodged and clothed on Uncle Sam's premises. He had come down from his verdant fields to take the office with large expectations.

The axe is falling at the lesser seaports also. Several Democrats have been ousted at Salem, and more extensive changes are likely to take place there. I am told that Major BENJAMIN BARSTOW, the original and thorough Hard-Shell, has gone to Washington with documents which will tell hard against some inmates of the Post-Office and Custom-House. Major BARSTOW is the man who "showed up" Gen. CUSHING's Anti-Slavery record in a pungent speech three or four years ago, and recently addressed a five-column letter to President BUCHANAN, exhorting him to smite the Soft-Shells. Major B. is enterprising and deserves success.

The Spiritualist controversy rages still. What gives it such interest in the community is the fact that the rappings, and writings, and so forth, are no longer confined to disreputable streets on the side of Beacon Hill, but have climbed to the summit, and are bedeviling respectable families. A Long-wharf merchant told me the other day that he felt continually nervous lest the gyrations which his tables kept performing in the evening, should anticipate their time three or four hours, and attack the furniture at dinner. Public opinion, I think, condemns the action of the Theological Faculty of Harvard College in the Willis case more strongly than ever.

PAGE's Venus having been rejected by the unintelligent Committee of the Boston Athenæum, is on public exhibition in a chamber in Tremont-street. I understand that it was offered to the Athenæum for the veriest trifle of a price, by the gentlemen who own it. They were desirous of having such a master-piece permanently placed in Boston, and were willing to make a large pecuniary sacrifice for that purpose. It is said that it is rejected on account of its fancied indecency. The long and short of it is, that it represents a naked woman—stark naked. But so do a dozen other pictures which this sensitive Committee have placed conspicuously in their gallery. There is a little painting, attributed to TITIAN, hanging in one of their rooms in the very middle of a wall, so that the eye cannot escape it, which combines the indecency of two dozen such Venuses; and in the Dowse collection of water-colors, which the Committee seem happy to advertise and exhibit, there are stark-naked, half-naked and a quarter naked, men, women, and boys, by the score. If indecency is the reason for its rejection, the Committee are foolish. They turn half of their statutes "back to," now, and have mutilated part of the rest, which leads me to think that, as is reported, it is the real reason. But if it is rejected on the score of art, the Committee ought to be discharged for gross ignorance and preposterous taste. I confess that I have seen other Venuses which I prefer, but it is a fine painting, wonderfully rich in color.

KANSAS MILLENIUM APPROACHING.—Gen. JAS. LANE, whose advent into Kansas last Summer knocked the starch out of the knees of ATCHISON so completely, has returned to Kansas. His arrival was unexpected by the brave heroes of the Pro Slavery party, and they contented themselves with gassing about getting out a writ for his arrest. No arrest has been made, however, and I incline to the opinion that the Atchisons and Stringfellows will be glad to make a bargain with LANE, that if he will let them alone, they will let him alone.

Gen. LANE visited the city of Atchison on the 1st day of April, and dined with Dr. STRINGFELLOW. Think of that! What next? Dr. STRINGFELLOW is a candidate for the nomination of delegate to Congress from that Territory; and in a speech at Leavenworth, a few days ago, said that he "was in favor of making Kansas a Slave State first, and if he failed in that, he was then in favor of making it a Democratic Free State."

It is reported that the Stringfellows, and ABLE, a partner in their firm, have made an agreement with LANE, about as follows: They are to furnish LANE twenty-five lots in the town of Atchison, with perfect titles, for which LANE agrees to pay them $35,000 in cash, and to settle two or three hundred families at that place by Fall. Whether this be so or not, certain it is that Atchison stock is rising, and LANE and STRINGFELLOW are becoming very friendly to each other.—Weston, (Mo.,) April 23, correspondence of the Missouri Democrat.

COURT CALENDAR—SATURDAY, May 11.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MAY 9.

Before Judge Nelson.

The case of Carhart vs. Gordon, involving the patent for making melodeons, was given to the Jury about noon yesterday, but as the Jury had not agreed at the adjournment of Court, they were directed to bring in a sealed verdict this morning. They did so, but as the plaintiff declined to answer when called this morning, the verdict was not rendered, and the trial accordingly results in nothing.

We understand that the Jury agreed about 11 o'clock last night, and that their verdict was for defendants.

For plaintiffs, Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Cutting. For defendants, Mr. Keller.

John Graham vs. Meyer and Stucken.—In this case Judge NELSON made this morning his decision upon the demurrer argued a short time since, overruling the demurrer and directing the defendants to answer. No opinion was written.

Before Full Bench.

RALLY FOR THE FREEDOM OF OUR CITY.—"Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Liberty." The Democracy of the City and County of New-York, and all who are opposed to corrupt proscription and despotic legislation, are requested to assemble in the Park, in Mass Meeting, on TUESDAY, May 12, 1857, at 7½ o'clock, to protest against the reckless and unprincipled attempt of the Black "Republicans" in the State Legislature to destroy our Constitutional and chartered rights, and deprive us of our most cherished privileges.

Citizens of New York, rally! by your united strength and make common cause against the odious enactments of an unscrupulous majority of our State Legislature, who have attempted to appropriate our city property to the irresponsible control of mercenary political adventurers—to tax us without our consent—have prohibited trade under the pretext of moral reform, proscribed a large class of our citizens at the behest of fanaticism, and would subjugate the sources of our commercial prosperity to the base objects of the most corrupt party that ever ruled the State.

This is but the beginning. Where will be the end? Let us resist at the threshhold.

Let us invoke every Constitutional and political means in our power to defend ourselves against these infamous aggressions.

The voice of the people shall be heard on Tuesday next.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The Burdell Murder case was brought to a close on Saturday evening, after being six days on trial. The Jury brought in a verdict, having been but 35 minutes out of the Court-room, of—NOT GUILTY. Mrs. EMMA AUGUSTA CUNNINGHAM-BURDELL was discharged from custody. Mr. ECKEL was also discharged on his own recognizance in the sum of $5,000. The trial has done nothing to clear up the mystery of this strange case. Many statements which were supposed, after the Coroner's inquest, to be important facts that might give some clue to the detection of the murderers, have been entirely disproved, and the question remains as unsettled as ever—who killed Dr. HARVEY BURDELL?

We publish this morning details of the news from Mexico, a summary of which has already been telegraphed to us from New Orleans. The day fixed upon by the Ecclesiastical party for their insurrection was Thursday of Holy Week, and the affair would probably have been much more serious had the Government not been forewarned and ready. The Archbishop of the Diocese and several of the priests most prominently connected with the occurrence were arrested, and placed in confinement. A decree banishing them was published by order of the Government, but in consequence of the bad state of the Archbishop's health, and his advanced age, the penalty was limited to imprisonment in his palace until further orders. Great fears were entertained of the long-talked-of raid of fillibusters into Sonora.

Governor KING has issued his Proclamation offering a reward of $2,500 for the detection and conviction of the persons, or any of them, who set fire to the buildings at Seguine's Point on Wednesday night last. He has also addressed a letter to the Commissioners of Police, directing them to use every effort to ferret out and bring to conviction the perpetrators of the act.

Several unsuccessful attempts have been made in Baltimore to get up meetings to express sympathy for and furnish aid to Gen. WALKER and the cause of fillibusterism in Nicaragua. One was called for Saturday evening, at which the attendance was the reporters and a few others.

A bridge on the New-Jersey Central Railroad, over the Musconetcong River, was burnt on Saturday night. There will be but slight interruption to travel, and freight will be forwarded as usual.

The Indian troubles on the Plains are such that travel will be very insecure the coming season, in the opinion of Mr. GOODELL, the celebrated mountaineer, who has arrived in Kansas City.

The Coroner's Jury in the Newburg murder case met again on Saturday afternoon, but having no testimony, adjourned to Saturday next, when it will meet at Mill Hope, near the supposed scene of the murder, and five miles from Newburg.

Gen. SCOTT will be present at the inauguration of the Warren Statue on Bunker Hill, on the 17th of June.

The Anniversary Sermons were preached, last night, at different churches: before the Home Missionary Society by President SPRAGUE, the American and Foreign Christian Union by Dr. FORSYTHE, the New-York Bible Society by Dr. THOMPSON of Buffalo, and before the Female Guardian Society, by Dr GILLETTE. Dr. COBBY preached concerning the relations of Public Amusements with Public Morality at the Fifth Avenue Church; Dr. THOMPSON, of the Tabernacle, preached in the Clinton-avenue, Brooklyn, Congregational Church, and in the evening at the City Assembly Rooms a discourse on the Life and Death of the late Dr. LANSING; Dr. CHEEVER, in his own Church last night, preached in behalf of the Institute at Washington that educates Colored Girls—a collection was taken, at the conclusion of the discourse amounting to $221; Prof. TAYLER LEWIS delivered the Annual Address before the Union Theological Seminary at the Mercer-street Church, also, last evening.

A serious fight between firemen took place in Monroe street about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. It originated between engine companies Nos. 41 and 6, but engine companies No. 31 and 17, and hose companies Nos. 6 and 31 took part in it. Many of the participants were seriously bruised. The Seventh Ward Police, after a severe tussell, quelled the disturbance, and arrested five of the rioters, who were taken before Justice BRENNAN and held to bail each in $1,000. The Chief Engineer has ordered Nos. 41 and 6 to "lay up" until an investigation is had.

An unknown woman, poorly clad, was run over and killed by the New Haven freight train, at the corner of Thirty-second-street and Fourth-avenue, Saturday forenoon. She was attempting to cross the track, when the train suddenly emerged from the tunnel and ran her down. Her head and both feet were severed from her body. An inquest upon the remains was held by Coroner HILLS. Verdict: "Accidental death."

Overhauling the cargo of the alleged slaver Merchant was finished on Saturday by the United States Marshal. Nothing new was discovered additional to the articles found on board at the seizure of the vessel. A watch is still kept upon her by the cutter Washington, as also upon the supposed slaver Eben.

The examination in the case of WM. HENRY QUACK NBUSH, BENJAMIN PURCELL and FRANCIS HAMMOND charged with obtaining a letter fraudulently from the Post Office, was adjourned from Saturday to Thursday next. QUACKENBUSH has given bail, the other two are still confined in Eldridge-street Jail.

The number of deaths in the City last week was 392—60 less than the number of the previous week. There were five deaths from apoplexy, five from congestion of the liver, seven from disease of the heart, eight from inflammation of the bowels, four from diarrhœa, five from small pox, and five from measles.

UNRELIABILITY OF CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.—The ease with which whole communities are set agog by the wildest rumors, is exemplified in the Newburg affair. Had not the girl SARAH BLOOM appeared at the critical juncture, Mr. WILLIAM JENKINS might have figured among noted malefactors and his punishment been condign. As it is, that individual escapes the charge of murder and the possibility of a hanging, but suffers in reputation never to regain, while the public of Newburg, who came very near prosecuting summary sentence upon him, are quite ashamed of their precipitancy. Information reaches us that the set of the current of popular feeling, on the day of the reappearance of SARAH, was so decidedly against JENKINS, that scarcely one person in the village believed him innocent. The character of the girl was not above reproach; JENKINS acknowledged that he left Newburg with her at 9 o'clock in the evening of Tuesday, stated that he had left her at some distance from any house, fourteen miles from the village, at midnight, and was known to have returned home at 3½ o'clock in the morning; on the next day but one, a body was found, the description of which compared with that of SARAH; and JENKINS could give no account of her whereabouts. Here was a clear case of circumstantial evidence. The event shows the danger of too hasty convictions of supposed criminals upon testimony of the character of this,—particularly as the real SARAH BLOOM bears no resemblance in any important respect to the body found in the field.

End of the Murder Trial.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM for the murder of Dr. BURDELL, ended on Saturday evening in the acquittal of the accused. No person who has made himself at all familiar with the details of this case, probably expected any other result. Under the circumstances of the deed, it was natural and unavoidable that suspicion should fall upon this woman. The murder was done under her roof, upon a person towards whom her relations were equivocal, with whom she had had difficulties and lawsuits, at a time when she was certainly in the house, and in such a manner as to render almost incredible—and therefore evidence of guilt—her assertion that she heard no noise of any kind, and had no knowledge whatever of the perpetration of the deed. The proceedings before the Coroner were more like a conspiracy than an inquest, and accumulated against the woman thus exposed to suspicion an immense amount of scandal and of public odium. Unlimited scope was given to malignity and to gossip;—everybody who had ever quarreled with her, or heard of anybody else who had, was permitted and encouraged to open the budget of defamation, and to deal out with lavish and remorseless hand the most damning accusations, suspicions and inuendoes against herself and every member of her family. The result of all this was precisely what was intended. Nine-tenths of the whole community set it down as absolutely certain that she was the murderer, and that her whole family, children and all, were partakers in the crime.

A trial before Judge DAVIES, fortunately for justice, is a very different proceeding from an inquest under Coroner CONNERY. Evidence was substituted for gossip, and fact for scandal. The cold, impartial reason of the law took the place of heated passion and coarse ignorance. The trial was very fairly conducted;—no undue attempt was apparent on either side to wrest facts from their proper meaning; the Judge's charge was eminently clear, firm and impartial—and the verdict of the Jury was reached with the least possible delay consistent with proper forms and due deliberation. We believe that verdict to be just; and, so far as the evidence at this trial affords basis for an opinion, we are confident this must be the universal judgment of the public. The scandals of the inquest will undoubtedly leave upon very many minds the impression that facts exist indicative of guilt which could not be brought forward because they do not fall within the legal definition of evidence. Such are Dr. BLAISDELL'S assertions concerning BURDELL'S statements made to him on the day of his death, which undoubtedly went further than anything else at the inquest to fasten upon the public mind the belief of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM'S guilt. Whether these circumstances would stand the test of legal scrutiny any better than did the others which were submitted to it, must probably forever remain a matter of pure conjecture.

It is certainly remarkable how thoroughly every fact which was believed to form a link in the chain of circumstantial evidence against her, was explained and its force dissipated upon the trial. It seemed impossible that even the faint cry of murder said to have been heard in the street from BURDELL'S room at 11 o'clock, should have been unheard in the front room of the floor above. But it was proved by actual experiment that, when the doors were closed, very loud cries of murder were quite inaudible there:—and for some reason or other the District-Attorney abandoned the effort to prove that any cries were heard or made at all. In the next place the finding of two daggers and a loaded pistol in Mrs. CUNNINGHAM'S possession was held to show a preparation on her part for the murder and to indicate her as the perpetrator of it. But it turned out that the pistol was given to her long before by BURDELL himself, and that the daggers found could not possibly have done the deed. Next the presence of a flaring, flickering light in an upper, unused attic, seen by Dr. PARMLY, was cited as evidence that a fire had been kindled there to consume the clothing that must have borne evidence of the deed. But this light proves to have been that of a candle left in the hall and shining through the open door of the attic, to light SNODGRASS as he came up to bed. Then the strong smell of burning leather, perceived in the street, which at first was charged to the same theory, was proved to have proceeded from the grate of Dr. SMITH who was consuming the relics of leather, &c., used by him in his experiments. And so of every circumstance indicative of guilt, in the case. The whole chain of evidence has been utterly and hopelessly broken: not a link remains.

The mystery of the murder is deepened by the trial. It seems now altogether probable, if not certain, that the deed was perpetrated by none of the inmates of the house, but by some one from without. Who he was may forever remain unknown. No progress is likely to be made towards his detection until it shall be ascertained where Dr. Burdell spent that evening. It is very evident that those who knew have some motive for concealing their knowledge of the fact. We do not consider it by any means certain that the hour of the murder was as late as 11, or even 10 o'clock. The cries that were heard were too faint and too uncertain to warrant any conclusion upon that point. Two or three witnesses on the inquest testified to having seen a man wearing a shawl enter the house between 10 and 11; but Mr. SMITH swears that he entered his house at the next door, similarly dressed at just about that hour; and he may have been the person seen by the witnesses referred to. A druggist's clerk stated on the inquest that he saw Dr. BURDELL standing at the corner of the Bowery and Bond street at about 9 o'clock, as if waiting for some one;—and this is the only clue we have to his whereabouts after he was seen to leave the house at about half-past four in the afternoon. Where had he been, and who had been with him, in the meantime? When this question shall be answered, we may have some clue that will lead to the detection of his assassin.

It is not very likely that the inquiry will be pressed much further by our authorities. No reward has been offered for the discovery;—the stimulus of curiosity has lost its strength; nobody, but the helpless woman under suspicion, has any special motive for finding out;—and it is probable that our Departments of Police and Criminal Law will assume the disgrace of permitting this bloody deed to pass with entire impunity, rather than make any further special effort for its exposure.

The Mormon Rebellion.

Mormon treason against federal authority grows apace, becoming each day more presumptuous, bold and defiant, as will be seen by perusal of our Washington letter upon that subject published this morning. The facts presented afford startling confirmation of former accounts of wrong and outrage. They furnish still additional evidence that just in proportion as the leaders of the Mormon theocracy progress in successful defiance of federal law, they also throw off the moral and social restraints of civilized life, until it would seem that their deluded followers were fast approaching the lowest depths of degradation and wretchedness.

The country awaits with interest and anxiety the development of Mr. BUCHANAN'S policy in view of this strange condition of affairs. For six years BRIGHAM YOUNG has held the commission of Governor—during the last two by sufferance only, for his commission expired by its own limitation at the end of four years. The late President PIERCE promised to test the supremacy of the Federal Government in Utah by the appointment of a Gentile Governor, but succeeded, by a series of disgraceful artifices, in postponing action until the close of his Administration, thus evading the responsibility of meeting the troublesome issue. The fruit of his supineness has ripened into the unmitigated treason which we are now called upon to record. If Mr. BUCHANAN would not lose much of the moral force of his effort to subdue the Mormons, he will not unnecessarily postpone action. The subject is of vastly more importance than the petty struggles of partisans for office, or any pending issues with foreign powers, and should be made secondary to none.

The affairs of Utah have reached a crisis which can no longer be evaded. The federal officers are driven in fear from the Territory, and there is no law for Saint or Gentile save the edicts of YOUNG. Indeed for years past Courts have proved mere idle forms; for, regardless of law or evidence, the juries have recorded their verdicts only as the Mormon High Priest dictated. The Gentile who had incurred his displeasure was sure to lose his case; and the murderer with guilt ever so clearly established, was never convicted unless he had sinned against the Church or its apostles. The communication between federal officers and the Government at Washington is completely frustrated, and every letter sent by them out of the Territory is made to undergo Mormon scrutiny, and suppressed if found to conflict with Mormon interests. Thus it is impossible for Government even to obtain reliable information from that portion of the country, where, held in worse than Egyptian bondage, are thousands of our fellow citizens, disgusted with the scenes that surround them, but utterly powerless to escape,—without means of making their misfortunes known to the more favored of their countrymen, and fearing even to breathe their sorrows to one another lest they should be crushed by still greater oppression, or be turned over to the tender mercies of Mormon Thugs.

It is scarcely possible to present a case more imperatively demanding vigorous and instant action. A new Governor should be sent at once to Great Salt Lake City,—backed by an imposing military force—to tender the Constitution with one hand, while a drawn sword is held in the other. For years we have quarrelled with Great Britain about an Isthmian route to our Pacific possessions, in the fear that she might acquire a position from which, at some future time, to impose conditions upon its passage by us. But, stretching for hundreds of miles across the Western plains, Mormon power already levies tribute upon the over-land route upon our own soil, and is teaching the Gentile traveler that the road is forbidden except on terms prescribed by BRIGHAM YOUNG. As if to aid this arch traitor in his mischievous machinations, the authorities at Washington have permitted the mail contracts to fall into the hands of his followers; and there is good reason to believe that these will be availed of to aid in the establishment of still another chain of Mormon settlements, through whose instrumentality the great plains may be still more effectually held in subjection by the "Saints." Surely it is time for action. While we sleep, Mormon vigilance and fanaticism are augmenting their means of rebellious resistance, and every day's delay but adds to the deprecated evil, and increases the price of blood and treasure at which alone the supremacy of the law can be established in Utah.

THE STATEN-ISLAND INCENDIARIES.—The prompt action of Governor KING, in offering a reward of twenty-five hundred dollars for the apprehension of the lawless rascals who set fire to the new quarantine buildings at Seguine's Point, will doubtless prevent the repetition of such an outrage, even though it should not lead to the detection of the perpetrators of that act. But we have not much doubt that it will lead to the detection of the ruffians, for they must be known to a good many of the people of the Island, and the confederates of men who could be guilty of such lawlessness are not likely to be influenced by any nice sense of honor. We notice that the "acting District-Attorney," Mr. CLARK, Judge CROPSEY, and other prominent Staten Islanders who took part in the Richmond meeting, where such incendiary resolutions were passed and speeches made, are naturally anxious to escape the charge of having incited the people to a violation of the law. But it is too late now. The people took the gentlemen at their word, and, on the first opportunity that presented itself, gave sufficient proof of their earnestness by setting fire to the buildings which were to be used for Quarantine purposes. We learn that Judge CROPSEY has stated to the Commissioners of Police that if anybody came down to the Island to arrest the incendiaries of Seguine's Point, they would be lynched. Such a threat as this will not be likely to prevent the arrest of the culprits, let them be who they may, and the better portion of the inhabitants of Richmond County must see the necessity they are under, in justice to themselves, and to save their own property from destruction, to assist in the arrest of the ruffians whose lawless conduct has compromised the character of their community. If the rebels against authority find that they can set fire to one house with impunity, they will, by and by, be "exercising the powers that God gave them," in applying lucifer matches to some of the fine villas or farm-houses in that picturesque Island, if their owners should happen to be obnoxious to the Staten Island sense of propriety.

Panama and Nicaragua.

It is not certain that the military interference of our Government in the affairs of New-Granada will be attended with beneficial results, either to the traveling public, the merchants of California, or the stockholders of the Panama Railroad. As for the steamship interest, we have already eight or ten large ocean steamers seeking employment, and a continued interruption of travel,—such as would follow the military occupation of New-Granada, by the tearing up of the road, as a defensive measure on her part,—would occasion immense losses to the already overburthened steamship interest. The profits on the California passenger-travel are not adequate, at present, to the support of two lines of steamers, and were it not for the mails and specie, the steamers of the only existing line would be compelled to charge higher rates for freight and passage than at present.

The Panama Railroad, which is barely able to pay a dividend of eight to ten per cent. on its three millions of capital, after satisfying the interest on its five millions of debt, and meeting the monthly repairs and running expenses of the road, would fall immediately into the class of non-paying Railroads, were the patronage of our Government transferred to another line. The specie, or at least one half of it, will follow the mails of the United States, and the majority of travel must go with these two.

The old line by the way of Lake Nicaragua is at present offered for sale by the grantees in this City, for a sum varying between one and a half to two millions of dollars. One million is to be paid to Costa Rica, in the form of a loan for fifty years, and the interest to be paid to the bond-holders by the purchasers of the line. The balance of the price will be necessary to satisfy individual owners and interested parties in New-York, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, who have made large sacrifices in the late war, or who are disposed to lend their names for the support of the negotiators. For the steam navigation on the Atlantic and Pacific, between New-York, New-Orleans and San Francisco, five large ocean steamers will be required, each steamer supported by an available capital of $500,000, to cover the first eight or ten non-paying months and all contingencies. The river steamers, tram-road and other property on the transit, formerly used by the Accessory Transit Company, may be worth in all about $300,000, were it newly placed upon the line. Immense damage has been done by the war, and it is very difficult at present to make a true estimate of the value of what remains. The expenditure or use of from four to five millions may be safely estimated as necessary to the repairing and maintenance of the Nicaragua Transit, which even then will not pay a dividend to stockholders without the mails or specie, with its full share (one-half) of the present California travel. The competition between Panama and Nicaragua would involve a large reduction in the rates of fare and freight for both, a procedure which would annihilate all profits, except a moderate dividend on the carriage of the mails and specie. To insure an equal division of the specie and mails, a mail must be sent by our Government, by the way of Nicaragua. With an insurance fund of $1,000,000, and a reduction of the cost of carriage one-half, the specie might be made to follow.

The retirement of Mr. MORGAN from the steamship business, and the sale, or the contract to sell, his steamers to Mr. C. K. GARRISON, for the sum of $400 000, is one of the credited assertions of the day, and justifies the conclusion that a monopoly of unparalleled magnitude is about to be formed by Messrs. VANDERBILT, GARRISON and, perhaps, one other person. The entire mass of the steamship interest on both sides of the continent is thus concentrated in the hands of two or three men—for we make no account, in this connection, of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company—Mr. VANDERBILT having it always in his power to control them by an opposition, throwing down the rate of faro. This monopoly will own fifteen large steamers, ten of which are suitable for any service, with the ability to build others, that will keep pace with modern improvements, both in tonnage, strength and convenience.

The talent with which GARRISON has extricated himself from the Nicaraguan fillibuster imbroglio justifies the assumption that he still continues in the hope of making some use of the Rivas-Walker grant, passed back to him by Mr. MORGAN, after a loss to that gentleman of some $800,000. Although GARRISON has abandoned fillibusterism as a method of financiering, he has by no means abandoned his claim upon the property of the Accessory Transit Company, made over to RANDOLPH and his assigns by President RIVAS under the compulsion of WILLIAM WALKER. In fact, the struggle at present is between three powers: first, the Accessory Transit Company, under the old grant, forfeited for breach of contract, and incipient fillibuster operations; second, the Randolph-Garrison grant, forfeited as prize of war for twelve months of similar operations on a larger scale; and thirdly, the united Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, who, regarding both as utterly violated, null and void, used the property as lawful prize of war. Messrs. GARRISON and VANDERBILT having joined in influencing the Lobby at Washington, will use all their power to involve the Government of the United States in a quarrel with the two countries—GARRISON against Nicaragua, and VANDERBILT against Costa Rica. Of this we may rest assured. However futile the claims of the two Companies, they have power enough to prevent any successful negotiations for the reopening of the line for a considerable period of time, and probably will not allow it until such time as it may suit their convenience.

Dr. Blaisdell and His Friends.

Our readers may remember a Mr. C. F. WETMORE of No. 130 Nassau-street, who some time since informed the public that he, as the Attorney of Dr. BLAISDELL, had sued the proprietors of the TIMES for libel, in publishing a communication in which the Doctor was accused of having murdered Dr. BURDELL. We promptly disclaimed having made any such charge and denied having published any article in which such an accusation was implied. But Mr. WETMORE persisted in the determination to prove that Dr. BLAISDELL had been charged with the murder, and in spite of our repeated disclaimers declared his purpose to convince the world of the fact by a suit at law.

We have now another chapter in this rather singular affair. Mr. C. F. WETMORE has published another card,—elicited by the direct and unwarrantable references which were very unfairly made to Dr. BLAISDELL by the counsel who defended Mrs. CUNNINGHAM on her recent trial. This card is as follows:

"The imputations cast by counsel for Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, upon Dr. BLAISDELL, make me address the following facts to you, as an act of simple justice:

On the night of the murder of Dr. BURDELL I was with Dr. Blaisdell from 7 o'clock until 12½ o'clock, in his room, more than one mile from the murder.

Eight other persons were also in and out of the Doctor's room up to the time I left.

I have been in Court during the trial, as has Dr. BLAISDELL, to state the facts to the Jury under oath, but such testimony being inadmissible, no proof as to the Doctor's whereabouts was offered.

He never left my presence on the night of the murder, from 7 o'clock until 12½, and then to go to bed.

There is positive proof that he did then go to bed in an adjoining room, at that time, and that he was at the breakfast table, the next morning, at the usual hour. C. F. WETMORE, No. 130 Nassau-street.

SATURDAY, May 9, 1857."

In this instance Mr. WETMORE appears in the character of a witness:—in the other case he was simply the Attorney. We have no doubt he will do ample justice to both.

We have not the slightest desire to encroach on Mr. WETMORE'S convenience in any respect or to press him for information upon this or any other subject any further than he may see fit to volunteer it. But he probably remembers that Dr. BLAISDELL stated at the Coroner's inquest that he had agreed to meet Dr. BURDELL at his room at 9 o'clock on the night of his death,—but that he did not keep this appointment on account of the unwillingness of his friends, that he should go out that night. The public might be glad to know who were the "eight" friends who were with him that night,—and what were the reasons given against the Doctor's fulfilling his engagement. It is certainly deeply to be regretted that he did not do so, as he would unquestionably have frustrated the horrible murder which seems to have been perpetrated at just about that time. No single assassin would have ventured to grapple with two men, especially when one of them was so large and powerful as Dr. BLAISDELL.

We do not mean to cast any reproach upon the Doctor for not acceding to the earnest request of Dr. BURDELL that he would come to his room, even after he had agreed to do so;—for he could not foresee the dreadful incident which was about to render his presence and protection so necessary. But as the promise seems to have been remembered, and the propriety of fulfilling it canvassed by the company present, it might relieve the Doctor from the imputation likely to be made in some quarters, that he had not been sufficiently mindful of his friend's wishes, to have the reasons which decided him not to go, given to the public.

THE FINE ART OF MURDER.—The English Opium Eater was not so far wrong as might be supposed in his fantastical essay treating murder as a fine art. It is, certainly, the most engrossing of all arts at the present time, and is more sure of gaining the attention and sympathies of the public. When a murder trial is in progress, all other subjects of public interest are held to be of secondary importance. The public hunger and thirst after every detail connected with a deed of blood, and when there are no actual cases of murder to comment upon and gloat over, they will go to the theatre and sit a whole evening to see Othello smother his fair wife, to witness the terror of Macbeth as he gazes on his bloody hands after having slain his sleeping guest, or to see Medea rush wildly into her tent to destroy her two children. The Burdell murder has furnished the public with a bloody treat for the past three months, and the eager demand for the reports of the late trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM prove that the appetite for such revelations is still unabated. The valetudinarians who seek for amusement in the newspapers still "relish their murders," and, until there is a radical change in human nature, the demand for such exciting reading is likely to continue.

But, the term fine art could never be applied with stricter propriety to a case of murder than in this very murder of Dr. BURDELL, which has been engrossing the attention of the public. There never was a murder committed before, where the perpetrator of it seemed more certain of being detected, and where escape seemed to be so hopeless; yet so adroitly was the deed done, so much art, and that, too, of a decidedly fine character, was bestowed upon the foul deed, that no clue has yet been discovered either as to the time when the deed was done, nor by whom, nor how. It is very evident that the devilish act of the murderer has thus far, directed all suspicions and investigations in the wrong direction, and by the aid of the Coroner assisted the real culprit to escape suspicion.

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM has not brought to light a single circumstance calculated to fix the guilt of the murder upon any one. The mystery remains as dark and unfathomable as ever; and the excitement caused by the first developments before the Coroner's Jury will only be increased by the failure to elicit any testimony tending in the slightest degree to point to the real culprit. One thing should be done by all of the murdered man's known acquaintances and friends, and particularly those who gave their testimony before the Coroner, and that is to prove that they did not see the murdered man after he left his house in Bond-street on the night when the deed was consummated.

One of our Deficiencies.

If there is any one faculty in which we Americans value ourselves, it is our inventive genius; and, if our claims to distinction on this score were disputed, we should very naturally turn with confidence to that stately edifice at our national capital, the Patent Office, in which so many evidences of our fertility in inventions are kept for inspection. We could point to the Cotton Gin, the improvements in the Printing Press, the Electric Telegraph, and to innumerable labor-saving machines, many of which are in extensive use in the Old World. We have proved ourselves equal to every emergency in which we have been placed, and we may, without subjecting ourselves to a charge of vanity, boast that, on the whole, we are an improvement on the Old World. But we have our weak point; there is one most essential quality in a new nation which we do not possess; or, if we do possess it, we do not exercise it. We can overcome time and space by our inventions, but we lack the genius to invent new and significant names for the towns we are continually founding and building. We are dependent on the old world for our nomenclature, and subject ourselves to great inconveniences by repeating the same names over and over. In our magnificent new territories, where all is as fresh to our hands as the earth was when ADAM first went forth from the Garden of Eden, without any local legends or associations attached to the spot where we begin our settlements, a most favorable opportunity is presented for the exercise of our inventive faculties in bestowing names. But, the effort required is too great; the pioneers who go into the wilderness to make farms and build new cities have too much serious work upon their hands to be able to afford time to invent names, and they take the first one that comes to hand, probably the name of the town which the founder emigrated from, and bestow that upon the new city; or the proprietor pays himself the compliment of bestowing his own name upon his settlement, and it is accordingly called Brownsville, Tompkinsville, McGrawlersville, as the case may be.

We have received from some friend at the West a map of the "Railroad system of Milwaukee" which exhibits to great advantage the splendid resources of that growing town; but the map exhibits the usual poverty of invention peculiar to the West. Milwaukee itself is a beautiful name, and when it is mentioned no one has any confusion of ideas or doubt as to what the place is and where it is situated. But one of the wards from Milwaukee terminates at Ashland; the only place of that name which Americans ought to know has been endeared to them as the residence of the great statesman who bestowed it upon his homestead. Another road terminates at Savannah, on the Mississippi, and another at Hudson. There are also stopping-places at Berlin, at Ripon, at Genoa, and Dunleith. But, there are more good original names on this map, notwithstanding there are so many foreign ones, than we find on the maps of our new States generally.

In Minnesota, we observe, they have already a Saratoga and a Florence, and the new towns will all have old names as fast as they are founded.

We do not know how this bad system of nomenclature can be rectified, unless it is by laughing it out of countenance, or by exposing its inconveniences and absurdities until our countrymen become sensible of the impropriety of bestowing old names upon new settlements. It is in violation of the scriptural rule of putting new wine into new bottles; and there ought to be enough national pride among us to save us from this eternal repetition of the nomenclature of the Old World. The greatest sinners in this matter were the Pilgrim Fathers, but they sinned on principle. They called their new country New-England, and with entire propriety brought all their names with them, as they did their religion, manners and laws; but to do them strict justice, it must be admitted that where they found a good musical Indian name they preserved it; and all the names they borrowed were strictly English. There are but few villes or burgs in New-England.

GATHERING OF THE EAGLES.—Our public men have all a decided penchant for new lands; it is a weakness which the past generation of politicians never, or rarely, indulged in. CLAY, CALHOUN, JACKSON, and the whole race of extinct statesmen whose opportunities for land speculations were very great, never yielded to the temptations which their positions made them subject to. But land operations are now the rule with our public men; we learn from a Washington paper that General CUSHING, Senator WILSON, Vice-President BRECKENRIDGE, Senator DOUGLASS, GEORGE ASHMUN, and many other celebrities of the political world, will be at St. Paul's during the distribution of the 4,000,000 acres of land granted by Congress for railroad purposes.

As General STRINGFELLOW and General POMEROY have been sleeping together, and speculating amicably in lands in Kansas, the chances are that Senator DOUGLAS and Senator WILSON may find themselves together under the same blanket at St. Paul's during the great land distribution; and the two Massachusetts Generals, CUSHING and WILSON, may find themselves partners in the purchase of a township in Kansas, which may lead to important political reconciliations hereafter.

CHIEF MATSELL.—We learn that Mr. MATSELL, late Chief of Police, has made preparations to move to Northern Illinois, where he owns nearly a township of land, which he purchased some eight years since, and which has risen greatly in value since he made his location. He has already sent out his horses, and will soon follow them. The Illinoisians, or whatever people at the West he may settle among, will be surprised to find "little GEORGY MATSELL," whom they may have read about in the papers, such a burly and formidable-looking personage. The Chief's purchases were made from the bounty lands of Mexican soldiers, and it is said that the rise in prices has made him almost a half-millionaire.

THE NATIONAL HOTEL DISEASE.—The Washington Union sharply lectures the manner in which the authorities of that city treat the universal public demand, which comes from all parts of the country, for a thorough investigation of the fearfully fatal malady at the National Hotel. Nothing whatever has been done beyond the appointment of a Committee of the Board of Health to collect facts and report them for future consideration.

☞ New-Orleans papers of the 2d instant contain Galveston dates to the 28th inst. There was almost a famine for breadstuffs in the counties above Bastrop, and $2 62 was demanded for a bushel of corn. A meeting of the citizens of Bastrop was to be held to procure aid for the sufferers.

Quarantine Affairs.

On Thursday last, Egbert Benson, Esq., one of the Quarantine Commissioners, repaired to Albany to inform Gov. King of the particulars of the burning of the buildings at Seguine's Point. The Governor responded as follows.

LETTER FROM GOVERNOR KING TO THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, ALBANY, May 8, 1857.

To Simeon Draper, James W. Nye, Jacob Cholwell and J. S. T. Stranahan, Esqs.:

GENTLEMEN: I was this day informed by Messrs. HALE, Egbert Benson, and Obadiah Bowne, the Quarantine Commissioners appointed to remove the Quarantine station, that the buildings, with their contents on the property recently purchased by them for the people of the State, near Seguine's Point, on Staten Island, for the purposes of a temporary Quarantine establishment, were feloniously destroyed by fire on the night of the 6th inst., by a large number of persons; which fact is verified by the affidavit of one of the persons who was sleeping in the mansion house, all of whom were compelled to jump from the windows to save their lives. I have, therefore, in view of so violent and high-handed an act on the part of a body of misguided men, deemed it my duty to issue my Proclamation, offering a reward of $2,500 for the discovery and conviction of the guilty parties, a copy of which Proclamation is herewith inclosed, and I have now to request that you will take the necessary measures, by virtue of the authority conferred upon you by law, to aid in the discovery and conviction of the perpetrators of this violent and dangerous proceeding; and to ask at your hands such protection as you may have it in your power to afford to the Commissioners and their agents, in the prosecution of the work intrusted to them, and also to the buildings which they may deem it necessary to erect on the premises for the preservation and protection of the public health against yellow fever, or any other pestilential disease. I am, very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
JOHN A. KING."

PROCLAMATION

By JOHN A. KING, Governor of the State of New-York.

It having been made known to me by an official communication addressed to me by Geo. Hall, Egbert Benson and Obadiah Bowne Commissioners for the removal of the Quarantine Station, and verified by the affidavit of Samuel Fitzpatrick, an eye-witness, that on the night of the 6th of May, instant, about the hour of twelve o'clock, the valuable mansion house on the land known as the "Wolfe Farm," at Westfield, in the County of Richmond, lately purchased by the said Commissioners in behalf of the people of the State, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature, for the purpose of being temporarily used as a Quarantine Station, together with the furniture therein, and also a farm house and out-buildings upon the same premises, were wilfully burned to the ground by a numerous and unlawful combination of persons assembled for that purpose, whose names and persons are unknown, and the said mansion and farm house being at the time inhabited; now, therefore, considering the extraordinary character of this daring and high-handed offence, comprising not only the wanton destruction of the property of the State, but the capital crime of arson, I do hereby offer a reward of two thousand five hundred dollars to any person or persons who shall give information that shall lead to the detection, apprehension and conviction of the perpetrators of said crime, or any of them. And I do hereby also enjoin it upon all civil officers in the County of Richmond and elsewhere, charged with the duty of enforcing the laws, to be vigilant in their endeavors to bring the offenders to justice.

In virtue whereof I have hereunto affixed my name and the privy seal of the State, this 8th day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven. Signed, JOHN A. KING.

A person who came through New-Brunswick, N. J., on Saturday, represents the excitement there on the quarantine question as very great. Some five hundred persons were congregated there, discussing the late events at Seguine's Point. He judges from what he heard that the incendiaries are heroes in New-Jersey.

A person well acquainted at Keyport states of his own knowledge, that a combination of fifty men exists there, whose determination is to burn any buildings that the State of New-York may erect for hospitals at Prince's Bay.

Judge Cropsey, who was Chairman at the celebrated Richmond meeting, called at the office of the Commissioners, in William street, on Saturday, and in the midst of some highly excited conversation with Mr. Commissioner Bowne, informed that gentleman as a friend that the Commissioners would be likely to suffer personal violence if they ventured on to Staten Island, whereat the Commissioners were not very much frightened.

Mary Atkinson, the colored woman whose statement we published on Saturday, says she lost $24 in money and all her clothes, which were burnt up in Mr. Wolfe's house.

In the memorial of the Quarantine Commissioners addressed to the Legislature of the State of New-Jersey, distinct reference was made to the difficulty of selecting within the limits of the State of New-York any other site for a quarantine that would so well accord with the mutual interests of both States, as Sandy Hook. The following is the paragraph referred to:

"That a new site for a quarantine cannot be selected within the limits of the State of New York without involving the necessity of placing the hospitals at a point less favorable to the mutual interests of New-York and New-Jersey than is desirable. But the undersigned are led to believe that by the joint action of both States a satisfactory site for the hospitals, and proper anchorage may be found within their territorial limits."

Amusements.

Wallack's Theatre.—The veteran Wallack a justly esteemed and admirable artist, commences an engagement at this house to-night, producing for the occasion Miss Mitford's historical play of "Rienzi," in which Mr. Wallack plays the hero, supported by the entire strength of the company, to which has been added the important services of Mrs. Buckland. The tragedy has been produced with extreme care, and will doubtless reward the management.

President Buchanan on Economy.

Washington, Thursday, May 7, 1857.

Sir: In answering your inquiries in relation to the biddings for the Washington aqueduct, I have only to say there ought to be but one rule, and that is, to assign the work to the lowest bidder, provided he be responsible and able to give the necessary security. This is in accordance with the practice of the Government—will secure the greatest economy in the public expenditure—and cannot fail to prove satisfactory to the bidders themselves. Any other rule would produce much dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Department. Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES BUCHANAN.

Hon. John B. Floyd, Secretary of War.

Interesting from Mexico.

THE ATTEMPTED INSURRECTION—ARREST AND PROPOSED BANISHMENT OF THE ARCHBISHOP, ETC.

The Prussian schooner Etoile d'Oleire, Captain Hansen, arrived at New Orleans on the 2d inst., from Vera Cruz, which port she left on the 23d of April. The dates received by her from the city of Mexico are to the 20th.

The news from the capital is of some interest. The Reactionary Party, for a long time, had determined to make a demonstration, and accordingly fixed upon the Thursday and Friday of Holy Week.

The Extraordinary, of the 15th, says:

"The issue was made by the refusal of the Chapter of the Cathedral to admit the Governor and Council of the district, on their presentation, as is customary on feast days, to assist at divine service. On being thus refused admittance, the Governor and Council withdrew, and the Governor immediately took measures to punish this overt act of insubordination on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities against the civil, by arresting the rebellious canons when they should come out from the church. Several were accordingly arrested, and the rest abut themselves up in the choir of the cathedral, where they remained surrounded by a crowd of excited people outside the railing, who soon began to make sundry demonstrations of a seditious meaning. Cries of vengeance against the Government and death to the heretics were raised—a woman was seen taking part in the movement armed with a pistol—one man ascended the pulpit and commenced a furious denunciation of the Government—a soldier of the guard, placed near the door of the cathedral to preserve order, was disarmed and beaten by the mob. Several men, placing themselves in the door of the cathedral, raised the cry of "Vive la Religion Christiana! Muera al Gobierno," &c.

The prompt arrival of a guard of armed police, which, with a few blows of their clubbed muskets and the arrest of two or three of their ringleaders dispersed the mob, put a speedy stop to this incipient revolt, which was yet more effectually repressed by the arrival on the spot of the Governor, with a company of cavalry, who closed the doors of the Cathedral and stationed a line of sentinels around the platform. An hour or so afterwards some groups of seditiously-disposed persons in the plaza having renewed the cry of revolt, the disturbance was easily put down by the discharge of a few shots in the air by the police. These trifling incidents were the only results of the meditated attempts to get up a revolutionary movement against the Government.

The Archbishop, the Bishop of the Diocese and six or seven of the more prominent priests were arrested on Monday by order of the Government, and immediately placed in confinement.

It is said that the Archbishop, upon his arrest, surrendered the church and its property to the keeping of the Pope's Nuncio in this city, who immediately solicited a meeting of the diplomatic corps, for the purpose, as rumor has it, of aiding him to retain possession.

A decree banishing the Archbishop and other priests has been published by order of the Supreme Government. After recounting in round and measured sentences, the decree concludes with something of this sort:

"The offence is of so grave a character, as to call for the banishment of the Archbishop from the republic, this being the penalty designed by the laws for such cases, and which, in all times and in various nations has been used with the prelates who set at defiance the supreme authorities; but notwithstanding the force of these reasons, the bad state of the Archbishop's health, his advanced age, and the respect that his private virtues deserve, have induced the President to limit the penalty to imprisonment in his palace till further orders."

The curates of San Juan del Rio and Hochimilco were arrested and thrown in prison for preaching inflammatory and seditious sermons.

Similar demonstrations were made in Tacubaya and Puebla.

Two conductas, from Zacatecas and Mineral de Catorce, left San Luis de Potosi on the 8th ult., for Tampico, with $2,008,200 15. On account of this departure of the conductas, Calvo and Otron, the late chiefs of the San Luis insurrection, were for a little time longer kept in prison in order to insure the safety of the treasure.

The Union, a Spanish steamer, will shortly commence making regular trips between Havana and Vera Cruz.

President Comonfort has given his exequatur to the Count of Nollent, named by the Emperor of the French as Consul at Vera Cruz. The Count of Nollent was recently Consul of France at Panama, and drew up that famous report of the massacre at that place, on which New-Grenada bases her refusal for indemnity.

The Diario de Avisos announces that Antonio Pelago Sebastida, Ex-Bishop of Puebla, has been named a cardinal by the Pope.

The Tiempo, of Vera Cruz, comments on the fact, that the reactionary party in the capital publish in their organs the names of those employes of the Government who have not yet taken the oath to support the new Constitution. It says many of these persons were sick or hindered by their official duties from doing so, and expresses the belief that the people can appreciate the motives of the friends of despotic and absolute power.

Mejia, the only leader of note of the San Luis rebellion who escaped, was lately seen at Alhercas with 400 men.

The Trait d'Union publishes in its issue of April 16 a decree of Comonfort, which is the French decimal system, as far as applicable to Mexico. The law is comprised in twelve articles, and its execution is intrusted to the Minister of Finance, and a scientific bureau, to be called the General Direction of Weights and Measures.

The Cabinet of Comonfort was taking measures to raise money to carry on the Government. A forced loan, and a duty on tobacco, were spoken of.

The hacienda of Gen. Nicholas Bravo, at Chichihualco, was destroyed by fire on the 12th of March, reducing eighty-one families houseless, and destroying $20,000 worth of property.

The new Constitution has been proclaimed in several States.

Señor Lerdo, formerly Minister of Finance, will, it is said, shortly reënter the Cabinet.

Preparations are being made at Monterey to give General Vidaurri a public reception, on his return from San Luis.

Señor Cabellos, it is said, will shortly go to Paris, as Minister of the Republic.

Indian disturbances in Durango are still the order of the day.

Two English ships of war, the Acharnée and the Falcon, had arrived at Vera Cruz, and anchored near Sacrificios.

It will be seen by the following extract of a letter from Mazatlan, dated April 2, to the Extraordinary, that the inhabitants of that section of the Republic had serious apprehensions of a fillibuster expedition against Sonora:

"Yesterday evening an extraordinary came in from some point, to the Government, and with lightning speed the report circulated through the whole port that 3,000 filibusters had landed, or were about to effect a landing, near Guaymas, and that by admirably concerted action, a large force of 1,000 men were marching triumphantly through Sonora on Hermosillo. So detailed was the information, so minute the description, that the thing certainly looked somewhat like the truth. But, at almost the same time, the schooner Eclipse came in from thence, and neither Captain nor passengers had anything positive to say. Finally, letters were received by private hands, and they state that a force, estimated at three hundred, was said to have landed at Tiberon Island, fifteen leagues from Hermosillo. But this likewise lacks confirmation. Mr. Crabb is reported to have crossed into Sonora. Great preparations have been made at Hermosillo and Guaymas to resist the enemy, and peaceable foreigners apprehend serious difficulty. An American officer, from the frontier, had arrived at Guaymas, in search of deserters, accompanied by two American soldiers. The Prefect required his attendance at his office, to which the gentleman replied, that the Prefect, if he wanted to see him, might come to his quarters. He was then brought by force to the prefecture, and ordered to leave town in two hours.

Now, this story looks very strange. We believe there is no extradition treaty between Mexico and the United States; what could, consequently, an armed American dragoon officer legally do on Mexican territory, even if he should meet his deserters? The suspicion that the characters were assumed is not far-fetched. Messrs. Aniza and Bivans are again imprisoned and incommunicado in Hermosillo. Is there really something in the wind? Does Mr. Crabb really mean mischief? or is it all moonshine? We have no means of correctly ascertaining. But if he intends hostile operations, he has most assuredly taken heed of Walker's experiences, and will not strike the blow without an amply sufficient force. If he is an enemy, his determination and boldness make him an awkward customer to deal with. Moreover, in that case, he is far better off in Sonora than Walker in Nicaragua. He will operate in a healthy and fertile country, and, if successful at the start, will never lack recruits from the adjoining Upper California. But we sincerely hope that this expedition may, after all, but prove an armed party in search of mines in the Gadsden Purchase.

Gov. Halley of Connecticut on the Dred Scott Decision.

In his Message to the new Legislature of Connecticut, Gov. Halley says of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case:

"It is not too much to say that if the principles laid down as the opinion of the majority of the court is followed to their legitimate issues, Slavery becomes a national institution. Not only is the Federal Government made subservient to its interests, but all legal power is taken from the several States to resist its encroachments. It is a duty which we owe alike to ourselves and our children to stand firmly by the Constitution and maintain it in its purity. I believe, gentlemen, that we are all of one mind in affirming that Freedom is the law of our land and servitude the exception. Wherever Slavery exists it must be by positive enactment; our national Constitution does not carry it into our territories.

If every successful aspirant for place and power is at liberty to pervert this sacred instrument to the purposes of sections and parties, the time has surely arrived when men seeking the perpetuity of Republican Institutions must determine whether they will stand by this time-honored charter as it was expounded by its intelligent authors, or whether it shall be permitted to become the exponent of every new doctrine, which may be inaugurated for the advancement of individual or sectional interests."

The employees of the Eastern Division of the Erie Railroad have presented Mr. A. S. Wheeler, late Superintendent, a massive Silver Pitcher, with Goblets and Salver to match, as a token of respect. Mr. Wheeler was for many years connected with the Erie Company as Civil Engineer and Superintendent, and although he was a strict disciplinarian, it appears that he leaves the road with the good wishes of those over whom his authority was extended.

The clipper ship Anglesea, from Melbourne, at Liverpool, brought 52,600 ounces of gold on freight, 1,266 bales of wool, 600 tons of copper ore, and 170 passengers. She left Australia Feb. 2, 1856.

There were in the port of New York, on Friday, 32 steamers, 162 ships, 123 barks, 131 brigs, and 352 schooners. Total, 800.

The steamer Francis Skiddy with a new outfit of boilers and other improvements, made her first trip to Troy, leaving the foot of Liberty-street on Sunday evening at 6 o'clock P. M.

The Isaac Newton still remains at Verplanck's Point. Temporary repairs will be made there before she is brought to the City.

Interesting Decision in a Slave Case.

From the Ohio State Journal, May 5.

The opinion of the Supreme Court was this morning given upon a case which involves a very important principle, of which we can only give a bare outline. A slave, named Poindexter, was owned by a man named Anderson, living in Kentucky, near the Ohio river. Poindexter was trusty and of much value. His master frequently sent him across the river into Ohio to transact business for him, and to do errands. He agreed to give Poindexter his freedom for the sum of four hundred dollars. Poindexter executed a note with sufficient securities for the payment of the money. He went to work in this State and in Kentucky to raise the money by the labor of his hands. When one of the notes became due, payment was refused, and the owner Anderson brought suits in the Ohio Courts to recover of the sureties.

The suit was contested on the ground that Poindexter was already free before the notes were given, by having been brought or sent into Ohio by his master, and therefore there was no consideration given for the notes. This is the chief point in the case, so far as principle is involved. But there are several other points of interest. Our Supreme Court decide that this position is well taken, and that the bringing or sending a slave into this State makes him free. To this point Judge Bartley dissents, the other Judges agree upon it. This, it will be seen, conflicts with the Dred Scott law of the United States Court, as recently expounded by Judge Taney, but it is good law, nevertheless, and will stand as such in the State of Ohio. Her soil is free soil, and slaveholders can neither bring nor send their slaves within our limits and hold them again as property.

Wreck and Loss of Life on Lake Erie.

From the Cleveland Herald.

The bark Empire, of 350 tons, was wrecked on Marblehead Point, about four miles from the port of Sandusky. Eleven lives were lost, all on board except Captain Milligan and a seaman. The Empire was bound from Toledo to Toonawanda, with a cargo of lumber, shipped by J. W. Russell, and consigned to Alexander Kent. She hailed from Port Dover, C. W., was owned by Henry Waters, of Chatham, and commanded by Alexander Milligan.

The men took to the rigging, where they clung as long as life lasted. Captain Kent lost no time in getting the life-boat into the water, which was manned with a stalwart crew. Just as the boat emerged from the first breakers, one of the oars broke, and Captain K. replaced it with his steering oar, but before they got clear of white water, two other oars gave way, and they were obliged to put back to the shore, which they reached with great difficulty, the boat and men being landed "end over end" on the beach, by an enormous breaker.

Meanwhile the vessel had drifted further down shore, and as soon as fresh ones could be procured, the life-boat was carried over land, and launched from another part of the beach. This time they succeeded in getting a line from the shore to the vessel, which had finally grounded. With great difficulty they got into the boat two only two who were left alive in the rigging, and with them safely reached shore.

The following is a list of the crew, of whom only two were saved, and eleven were lost:

Captain—Alexander Milligan, saved.
First Mate—Thomas Maieb, lost.
Second Mate—Alexander McLaue, lost.
Steward—James Adams, (colored,) lost.
Seamen—John Maloy, John Albert, (colored.) Geo. Peacock, John Skelton, Edward Macahoy, Wm. Irvine, Patrick Flannery, and a young orphan boy, named Thomas ——, of Port Robinson, all lost; and Robert Moore, saved.

Gov. Medary, of Minnesota.

Sam. Medary, late of the Ohio Statesman, has assumed the reins of Government in Minnesota, and in his Inaugural Message submits to the Legislature the propriety of acting in the matter of the formation of a State Constitution. Of the recent Indian panic, he says:

"Those rumors had their origin, so far as can be learned, in the shocking outrages recently committed upon the unfortunate settlers at out Spirit Lake, in the State of Iowa. The Indians who perpetrated these atrocities are ourlaws from their own tribes. Their existence is incompatible with the safety of the frontier. In order to insure the speedy and certain punishment of these murderers, as well for the sake of example in future, as for the present protection of our western frontier, it may be advisable to memorialise the President of the United States to send an adequate force of mounted men to scour Minnesota and Missouri Rivers; to appoint an efficient Superintendent of Indian affairs, who will be required to recall the Indians upon their reservations, and to reside as near as possible to the Indian Territory; and to take all such other steps as may be necessary to ascertain and punish the perpetrators of the outrages at Spirit Lake, and protect the defenceless settlers on our western and southern borders.

A Precedent for the Order of the Gold Snuff-Box.

New-York, Thursday, April 23, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Dear Sir: I was much gratified by the perusal of the article which appeared in the Times of this morning, respecting the new award of merit—the Order of the Snuff-Box—instituted by General Jackson. And yet the absurdity—nay, evil—of the proceeding which you so properly contemn is not without its precedent; and quite probably this very precedent may have suggested the idea to the old General.

A whimsical old gentleman—I think a retired British officer of high rank—bequeathed a sum of money to the bravest man in the British Army! Not a regiment, mark you, but an army! His executors, desirous of fulfilling the trust, applied to the Commander-in-Chief, the Duke of Wellington, and perplexed the great commander not a little. However, the Duke didn't shrink from the unpleasant duty, and, after recalling the various acts of individual courage with which his long career had made him familiar, at length pitched upon General McDonald, (but I am by no means certain of the name, having read of this matter many years ago, when it was published,) who, with his own hands, and at desperate risk, shut the gates of Hougomont, at Waterloo, in the face of the French troops, when, in another instant, they would have forced their way into the garden and carried the place.

On receiving his legacy, the General said that, if for that act he was to be entitled the bravest man in the Army, there was another with whom he must equally divide his honors. A sergeant of his corps, of great personal strength, had assisted him; and that, but for this sergeant, the French had carried Hougomont in that charge. After much search—for many years had elapsed since Waterloo—the sergeant was found, and duly inherited his share of the money.

I repeat that I cannot refer you to record and date; but it was about the year 1840, if my memory serves me, that the officer making the bequest died.

It is but an interesting incident of history—and perhaps the whim of one man beget that of the other.

YOUR READER.

Sensible Southern Sentiments.

The Norfolk (Va.) Southern Argus reads some of its cotemporaries a very sensible lecture upon the hullabaloo they are raising over the projected immigration from the Northern States. It thinks they are "quite too sensitive on the subject of Southern institutions," that their excessive alarm is construed into a sign of weakness, and that they are very likely to make themselves "ridiculous in the eyes of all sensible people abroad."

The Argus does not apprehend any special danger to Virginian institutions from the projects of the Homestead Company; and for this opinion it gives the following reasons:

"We are inclined to think that Virginia would be a poor field for their operations. They may buy lands at low rates in the western part of the State, but this difficulty would be to get settlers to occupy them, even where they gave these lands away. The tide of emigration is setting from Northern States to the West, and will continue to flow in that direction as long as there are prairie lands with timber conveniently near to be occupied. It costs at least ten dollars per acre to clear the western lands of Virginia of timber, and put them in as favorable a condition for cultivation as the Western prairies are in their present condition.

In Eastern Virginia, the prospects of the Homestead Company would not be more favorable. Lands which remunerate the cultivator for his labor, could not be procured except at high prices, and consequently would afford no speculation. Worn out lands, and those of light soils but capable of improvement, can be purchased at low rates, but these would not answer the purposes of the Homestead Company. Capital is necessary to begin the cultivation of these lands. They are to be limed and marled, and money is to be laid out for guano and clover seed, and other improves. But the Company's settlers are poor; they have no capital. What would a Paddy, or a German, or even a Yankee do, besides starve, if he was put upon a hundred acres of land, without money, when the land was so poor, that it would not produce over five bushels of corn to the acre, without at first an outlay of from $6 to $10 per acre.

But even supposing all these obstacles to be overcome, what harm could two or three or even ten thousand Northerners scattered among us do our institutions. If they were located in the West, they would do no harm, for there are but few slaves in that part of the State. But suppose them scattered through the East; what harm would they be likely to do? Would they excite the slaves to insurrection? We would certainly find them out, and hang two or three of them would put a stop to that. But would they be likely to do this? They would have an interest in the soil and an interest in the prosperity of the State, and this would prevent them from doing any rash act, even if they were Abolitionists. But we must suppose these settlers to have eyes and ears and some little common sense, and a residence of six months would convince them that it is best for all classes that the negro should be held in bondage. There are many Northern people now among us. Are they less reliable on the Slavery question than our own citizens? When has one who has settled down and made the State his home been found tampering with the negroes, or in any way acting against the institutions of the South? We would say therefore to Eli Thayer and his company: Send on your settlers. If you send us neither paupers or thieves we will welcome them, and in six months we will convert them all to our own faith. We have many such among us already, Pro-Slavery men and slaveholders, and the only fault we have to find with them is, that they are rather severe masters, but we hope to cure them of even that fault in time.

Let the cry be Southward ho! we are ready for you."

A Bridge Burned on the New-Jersey Central Railroad.

The following note from the Superintendent of the Central Railroad of New-Jersey will prevent a wrong impression as to the extent of the damage occasioned by the accident referred to.

Sunday Evening, May 10, 1857.

The bridge over the Musconetcong at Bloomsbury was destroyed by fire last night, about 11 o'clock.

Arrangements have been made to take passengers around the break by omnibuses, causing a delay of twenty minutes only. Provisions have also been made to receive and forward merchandise freight as usual. No coal will be taken from the Lehigh until the bridge is replaced, which will take two weeks. There will be no interruption to the business from the Delaware, Lackawana and Western Railroad, the bridge being above the junction.

From Turk's Island.

By the arrival of the schooner Æolus we have files of the Turk's Island Royal Standard to April 25. The paper of the latest date has the following paragraph:

"During the past week we have had a few showers, but the pans are again making. A small quantity has been gathered at this Cay, and, should the present fine weather continue, we shall soon have a general raking. 16,500 bushels have been exported from East Harbor since our last, and the pans there are in excellent condition. Quantity on hand, about 130,000 bushels. Price, 9c.@10c.; export duty, ½c."

Perils on the Plains—Indian Wars.

Tim Goodell, the celebrated mountaineer and guide, has arrived in Kansas City. He spent the Winter on Green River, west of the Rocky Mountains. The Winter was one of the most severe ever known. The Utah Indians on Bitter Creek lost almost their entire stock of horses.

On his way in Mr. Goodell saw a few lodges of Cheyennes. They told him that they had killed more whites than the whites had killed of them, and, if the Government wanted to make peace, they were willing; but, if more fight was wanted, they were ready. He also learned, at Ash Hollow, through a Cheyenne Squaw, the wife of a white man called Sailor Jack, that she had just returned from a visit to the villages—that the Cheyennes were mostly collected on the Republican Fork of the Kansas, and that they were expecting a visit from the United States troops the coming Summer. They did not expect or intend to fight the troops a great deal, but they were going to put the women and children out of the way, and then scatter in small bands from the Platte to the Arkansas, and they say that they can in that way "kill all they want, and get plenty of white women for prisoners." This is their exact language.

Goodell met Long Chin, the Sioux chief who headed the murder of the mail party two years ago, and who was a prisoner for some time at Fort Leavenworth at the trading house of Major Dripps at Ash Hollow, and had a long talk. Long Chin told him that the Cheyennes had sent word to the Sioux that if they would meet them at the Forks of the Platte and take their old men, women and children to the lodges of the Sioux, north of the Platte, they would give them sixty or seventy horses and mules, and then the young men of the Sioux were to join them in their excursions against the emigrant trains on the Plains.

But Long Chin said he had been down among the whites, on their big boats, and seen so many men, that he knew it was no use to fight, and that the Sioux would have nothing to do with the matter.

The Cheyennes say that Miss Wilson, who was taken prisoner at the time Babbitt was murdered, has since died.

From all the evidences we have learned there will be serious troubles on the Plains the present summer. This is the decided opinion of Mr. Goodell, who is one of the oldest, most experienced, and cool-headed mountaineers we have among us. He is a man of great intelligence, perfectly reliable, and has had an acquaintance of seventeen years with the Mountains and the Indian tribes who inhabit that region.

How Bribery is done in Canada.

From the Toronto Colonist, 7th.

The investigation of the charges of bribery and self interest in regard to the Great South-Western Railway, was at length fully gone into before the Railway Committee yesterday. The committee-room was densely crowded. Money was to be made by getting possession of the charter itself; and the consequence was, that the moment the stock-books were opened, two parties rushed at the same time to get possession of the entire stock, and each succeeded at different places, to acquire sufficient to control the election of directors. The late Mr. Zimmerman was at the head of one of these parties. Mr. Isaac Buchanan, who acted for the Great Western Railroad—though they subsequently repudiated his authority—was at the head of the other. They both organized boards, and finally put one another into Chancery. In this state of matters, Mr. Rankin made a bold move to sweep the whole previous charters off the statute-book, and to begin with a new and a good act. He said, among other things, that Mr. Buchanan had offered him £50,000 to second his views, but that he had refused it, on account of his having previously gone into Mr. Zimmerman's projects with a view to £25,000.

Hon. Robert J. Walker.—We understand that Gov. Walker, who is now in this city, will leave direct for Kansas on Monday evening next, or the following morning. It is his intention to take the oath of office in this city before starting.

The official and private dispatches which have recently been received in this city from Kansas are of a character not only to remove all apprehensions founded upon the exaggerated reports which appear, from time to time, in the Eastern journals, but to warrant the hope that the people of Kansas are about to consult their own interests by turning a deaf ear to mischievous outside appeals, and by extending a generous support to their new Governor in his endeavors to restore unity and harmony in a Territory still unsettled by the divisions of sectionalism and the agitations of political fanatics.—Union, Saturday.

RATS, COCKROACHES, BED BUGS, &c.

New-York, April 12, 1856.—Mr Henry R Costar, No 348 Bowery—Dear Sir: Having a great many Rats around my stable and shop, I thought I would try your Rat Exterminator, and bought one of your boxes, and my man fixed it according to your directions. The next morning he found over 150 dead rats. I have bought other Rat Poison, and found them humbugs, and take pleasure in pronouncing this no humbug, and that it will do more than can say it will in your advertisements. I have also tried it on steamboats, and satisfied them that it is the greatest thing of the age.

Respectfully yours, J. S. UNDERHILL, 435 10th-st.

MEDICAL.

SANDS' SARSAPARILLA,
For purifying the blood. This is a purely vegetable extract, and although speedy in its operation, contains no powerful drastic drug to debilitate the system, or mineral poison to injure the constitution. Thousands have been cured by it, and tens of thousands may be restored to health by its use.

Prepared and sold by A. B. & D. SANDS, druggists, No. 100 Fulton-st., New York.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.—DR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over 1,100 cases, and never failed, except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over 300 certificates of its virtue, all within 20 miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a running sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two to three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth or stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of erysipelas.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure ringing of the ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the skin.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of ringworm.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the salt rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula. A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

Reader, I peddled over a thousand bottles of this in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. So sure as water will extinguish fire, so sure will this cure humor. I never sold a bottle of it but that sold another; after a trial, it always speaks for itself. There are two things about this herb that appear to me surprising—first, that it grows in our pastures, in some places quite plenty full, and yet its value has never been known until I discovered it in 1846; second, that it should cure all kinds of humor.

In order to give some idea of the sudden rise and great popularity of this discovery, I will state that in April, 1853, I peddled it, and sold about six bottles per day. In April, 1854, I sold over a thousand bottles per day.

No change of diet ever necessary—eat the best you can get, and enough of it.

DIRECTIONS.—Dose.—Adults, one table spoonful per day; children over 8 years, dessert spoonful; children from 5 to 8 years, tea spoonful. As no direction can be applicable to all constitutions, take sufficient to operate on the bowels twice a day.

MR. KENNEDY gives personal attendance in bad cases of Scrofula.

FIREMEN'S FIGHT IN THE SEVENTH WARD.—A desperate firemen's fight took place about 9 o'clock yesterday morning, in Monroe-street, where several Companies had assembled in answer to an alarm for the Sixth District, caused by the burning of a chimney. The fight originated between Engine Companies Nos 41 and 6, who hold towards each other an old grudge, but members of Engine Companies Nos. 17 and 32 and Hose Companies Nos. 6 and 31 soon took sides, and the fight became desperate. Police Capt LEITE and Lieut. BLAIR and a posse of Seventh Ward Policemen were soon on the ground, and after some serious fighting with the rioters, quelled the disturbance. A great many persons were more or less injured, and some of the policemen were roughly handled. The Engineers used every exertion to put a stop to the fight. JAMES HAREN, WILLIAM HAIN, JOHN DAVISON, ROBERT BURNS and JOSEPH SWEET, were arrested by the Police and brought before Justice BERRIAN, at the Essex Market Police Court, who held them to answer in the sum of $1,000 each. The Chief has ordered Companies Nos. 41 and 6 to lay up until an investigation is made by the Fire Commissioners.

FIGHTS ON STATEN ISLAND FERRY-BOATS.—The Staten Island ferry boats are usually very much overcrowded on the return trips Sunday evenings, and rowdies seize the opportunity to create disturbances and riot. Last evening a case in point occurred. Several half-drunken rowdies were on board the Hunchback at her 7 o'clock trip, and wantonly assaulted some of the passengers in the most brutal manner. Knives were drawn, and if it had not been for the assistance of the Captain, two gentlemen (the objects of the attack) would in all probability have been dangerously injured. After sundry free fights had taken place, during which many hard knocks were given and received, three of the rowdies were so well punished by the passengers that they were scarcely able to lift themselves from the deck. Surely the authorities ought to look to these Staten Island boats, where such disgraceful outrages so often occur, and allow persons to enjoy peace and common security during the passage to and from Staten Island on Sunday evening.

HAD NOT HEARD OF IT.—J. MCLEOD MURPHY, the Engineer at the Navy Yard, who was reported by telegraph from Washington to have been dismissed by the Secretary of the Navy, for his assault on DANIEL E. SICKLES, had not heard of his dismissal at a late hour on Saturday, although he had received letters from Mr. TOUCEY by the last mail from Washington.

Dr. W. B. ROBERTS desires us to have the report of his evidence corrected in its statement that he said he was "a married man." He is not married, and did not say that he was.

ACCIDENT.—A horrible accident occurred at the dyeing and printing establishment, Factoryville, last Wednesday, to Mr. GEORGE FERRY, who was caught by one of the shafts of the machinery, and dreadfully injured. Before the machinery could be stopped, he was carried around with the revolutions of the shaft. It is supposed, nearly one hundred times. One of his arms was broken in two places, below and above the elbow, his head was lacerated his legs mangled, and one of his thighs broken. His body was literally wound round the shaft. When extricated blood was flowing from the wounds in his head, and also from his mouth, and he seemed to be dead. Dr. WILLIAM G. EADIE, of Port Richmond, was called immediately, and rendered all possible aid. Mr. FERRY was still living yesterday.—Staten Island Chronicle, May 9.

TO WHOM DO THEY BELONG?—A male child, about two years old, was found sleeping on a rock in Eighty-seventh-street, near Bloomingdale road, on Saturday afternoon, by a citizen, who took it to the Twenty-second Ward Police Station, whence it was yesterday morning sent to the Almshouse, no one claiming it.

A child about two weeks old was left at 8 o'clock Saturday night on the cellar door of house No. 45 Second-avenue. About 11 o'clock the same night another child was left in the area of No. 150 East Thirty seventh-street. Both were sent to the Almshouse in Leonard-street.

DEATH OF A POLICEMAN.—HENRY B. MAY, the Second Lieutenant of the Sixteenth Patrol District, died at 10½ o'clock Saturday morning, after a severe illness of several weeks. He leaves a wife and several small children.

UPSET—NARROW ESCAPE.—A sail-boat, containing six young men, nearly all of whom were under the influence of liquor, upset about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in the East River, opposite Randall's Island. They were all rescued by boats from this Island, from the opposite shore.

ANOTHER FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—An unknown woman, very poorly clad, was run over by a train of cars at the corner of Thirty second street and Fourth-avenue, about 11 o'clock Saturday afternoon. Her head and both feet were severed completely from the body. At the time of the accident she was waiting for the Harlem train (drawn always by horses) to pass. When it had passed she stepped upon the track, when the New-Haven freight train came through the tunnel and knocked her down. Coroner HILLS held an inquest upon the body. A verdict of "Accidental death" was rendered.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—An Englishman named ALFRED HARRY, attempted to drown himself about 9 o'clock Thursday evening, by leaping in to the river at Pier No. 15. It originated in a closet under a work bench, and was discovered in a short time after the office was closed. The damage done is estimated at $500.

IN AMITY STREET—INCENDIARISM.

About 4 o'clock, yesterday morning, Policemen BLIVEN and TUCKER observed smoke issuing from the house of HENRY B. MELVILLE, No. 118 Amity-street, and, in searching the premises, found a lot of rags saturated with oil on fire. By this timely discovery, a conflagration was prevented. This is the second time that these premises have been fired within a few weeks.

ALARMS.

There were several slight fires and false alarms yesterday.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

ARREST OF A THIEF—SPEEDY JUSTICE.

James Smith, alias "Scotchy," a burly and notorious thief, was arrested on Friday evening by Officer Masterson for picking the pocket of John Shay, who had just arrived from Connecticut, of a wallet containing $6 81. The offence was committed in front of Tammany Hall, near the pop-gun stand, about which a crowd had assembled. They detected "Scotchy" in the act, and grabbed him, but the burly thief tore himself from Shay's grasp and ran towards Spruce-street. Officer Masterson, who happened to be near by, gave chase to the felon, and tripping him up, put him on the pavement. Thus nabbed, so unexpectedly, "Scotchy" gave in, and walked with the officer to the office of the Chief of Police. While on the way he offered to raise Masterson $100 if he would "make it all right." He was on Saturday morning brought before Justice OSBORNE, at the Court of Special Sessions, who sent him to the Penitentiary for six months. Thus, in less than 12 hours after the theft, "Scotchy" was in the "Black Maria" on his way to the Island.

BEATING A POLICEMAN.

Officer MOUNT, of the Reserve Corps, while on duty at Wallack's Theatre, Saturday evening, observed (or believed he observed) a man named JAMES MCCARTY, attempting to pick a gentleman's pocket, whereupon he arrested him. MCCARTY resisted desperately, and was aided by some of his friends in his efforts to escape. The officer was very roughly handled, but he did not relax his hold of his prisoner, whom he took to the Eighth Ward Station-House. MCCARTY, who gave his age as 26 years, and his occupation that of a sailor, was taken to the Jeffers in Market Police Court, who held to bail in the sum of $1 000.

ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.—Archibald SHELVEY, aged 21 years, was arrested on Sunday evening by Officer MARTIN, of the Twelfth Ward Police, for assaulting JOHN WELLS and stabbing him with a knife during a drunken fight. He was committed for trial.

ROBBING HIS NEIGHBOR'S GARDEN.—A man named BRANDT was sent to the Island on Saturday by Police Justice BROWNLOW, for stealing vegetables from the garden of J. C. BECKMAN, at the foot of Fifteenth-street, East River. He was caught committing the theft, just before daylight, by a person set to watch for him, as he was supposed to have stolen from the place before.

SERIOUS CHARGE.—A clerk named Charles RILEY, aged 26 years, was committed to the Tombs yesterday, on a charge of taking out of the Post Office a letter belonging to another person, and keeping the money which it contained. Mrs. STOCKWEATHER, of No. 38 Beach-street, was the complainant.

HOW DOES IODINE CURE RHEUMATISM?—By energizing the blood and the tissues; by invigorating in like manner the bones and the nerves; by supplying every organ with the force which it loses in its daily exhaustion; by supplying the waste that otherwise tends first to weaken and then to destroy the animal functions. Iodine, on this account, is so celebrated as a consumption. It is thus that makes it so famous, in its triumph over poison and all the other poisonous preparations given for rheumatism. It is this that makes it invaluable in cases of palsy and scrofula; that enables it to act like a charm in complaints of the heart and liver. It is wonderfully energetic and radical in its effects, and expels every morbid element, in its progress, from all parts of the body, winning the complete confidence of all who rely upon it. It must be given, however, unmixed with anything but water. Its only suitable shape is in ANDERS' LIQUID IODINE, or PURE IODINE WATER. Sold at $1 a bottle, by ANDERS & FOSDICK, No. 3 Second-avenue and No 862 Broadway; C. H. RIKER, No. 192, and BARNES & PARK, No. 304 Broadway; MRS. HAYES, Brooklyn, and all druggists.

LONG ISLAND.

A CURIOUS CASE.—A few months ago two persons arrived in Brooklyn from Connecticut, and were united in marriage by Rev. E. M. JOHNSON, and immediately returned to Connecticut. The bride, it turns out, was the highly-educated daughter of a very wealthy gentlemen, and the groom a hard-working ship carpenter, who had courted and won his partner without the knowledge of her parents. Fearing the displeasure of the old folks the marriage was kept a perfect secret, the husband only occasionally visiting his wife. The parents, jealous even of these occasional visits, finally ordered the lover not to visit the house again, which request he complied with, but occasionally met her at the house of a friend who was in the secret. After the lapse of a few months a change was observed in the appearance of the daughter, and when questioned she frankly acknowledged that she had been on intimate terms with the ship carpenter. A consultation was had, which resulted in the father seeking out the ship carpenter and insisting upon his marrying the daughter, to prevent the family from being disgraced. This request was flatly refused. The father then promised to give the young couple $10,000. The young man refused, but as a compromise agreed to take the daughter if $12,000 were deposited in the Bank to her credit. This was accepted; the marriage certificate was then immediately produced, and all parties went off happy.

☞ A correspondent of the New-York TIMES is in great distress about the health of Brooklyn, having heard that it is intended to bring the conduit to the Water Works Reservoir through Evergreens Cemetery. We are not able at this moment to speak positively on the subject, but we have reason to believe that the conduit is not intended to cross the Cemetery. Even if it does, the water cannot be polluted in a conduit lined with cement. It will derive quite as much benefit from the influences emanating from consecrated ground, as it can suffer harm by its proximity to dead bodies.—Brooklyn Times.

MORE VIOLENCE.—A man named PATRICK QUIN, while intoxicated Friday night last, was beaten severely by a butcher named JOSEPH CLARK on Grand-street, E. D. of Brooklyn, that his life is despaired of. CLARK has fled.

AGNES HEFFERMAN, residing on First-street, near North Seventh-street, E. D. of Brooklyn, was attacked Friday last by a man named CLANCY, residing in the same house, who, taking her by the hair of the head, beat her back over a bannister, injuring the spine seriously.

A COLORED MINISTER ARRESTED FOR PERJURY.—Rev EDWARD CROSBY (colored) was arrested on Saturday by Officer Assistant-Captain MCLANE, of the Third District Police, Brooklyn, upon a warrant issued by Justice BLACHLEY, upon the affidavit of HENRY FRENZ, that he swore falsely, a few days ago, when examined as a witness in a civil suit before Justice VOORHIS, whereof FRENZ was defendant. Mr. CROSBY will be duly examined on the charge preferred against him by Justice BLACHLEY.

FOUND DROWNED.—The body of an unknown man was found in the water at the foot of Columbia-street, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, by the Third District Police. Coroner REDDING was notified, and will hold an inquest to-day.

MONDAY, May 11—A. M.

The Foreign Trade at the port of New-York for the past week shows a total import entry, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, of $5,265,597, of which a million and a half in value is of Sugars and Molasses. The entries the week ending 10th May, last year, amounted to $3,861, 316. The Exports of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods for the week, were $1,-693,860, against $1,402,480 the corresponding week last year. The direct Export of Specie was $400,500 to Europe, and $271,068 to the West Indies, (in Spanish coin,) making, together, $671, 568, against $10,700 direct, the same week last year. There was, also, sent to Boston for shipment by the Cunard steamer sailing from that port on Wednesday last, $515,000, against $958,000 shipped in the same way last year. The Specie balances in the Government Sub-Treasury, in this City, on Saturday afternoon, stood $14,829,454 against $14,408,112 at the close of the previous week last year. The interior Specie exchanges were largely in favor of the City. About $60,000 in silver was received from New-Orleans and Havana, and $50,000 in silver from the Mint at Philadelphia. The various Specie movements of the week, as far as ascertained, would appear to be nearly a million of dollars against the Bank reserve, which stood on the last exhibit $12,009,911. The probability, however, is that the average of the week, to be made up officially this afternoon, will not show much less than $11,500,000, as more of the Spanish coin shipped to the West Indies was not brought into the previous average. The Money Market of the week has not felt the export of Specie to any marked extent. The heavy mercantile payments of the 4th May (last Monday) were met with almost universal punctuality at Bank, though, in some quarters these payments were succeeded by pretty full new applications for discount. The Brokers have been comfortably supplied with money at call, at 7 ₰ cent., throughout the week. Foreign Bills have ruled scarcely steady at the rates of the previous week, a very liberal offering having been caused, first, by drafts against direct shipments of gold, secondly, by drafts against the shipments of gold from San Francisco to England, (which are chiefly covered from this City,) and, lastly, by the coming forward of some free remittances in Sterling from New-Orleans, where an adverse turn in the Money Market has brought down the terms for this description of bills, and hasted the export movement of some considerable parcels of Cotton previously held upon speculation. The rates here for the packets on Wednesday and Saturday last were irregular, 109⅛@109⅛; Francs, 5.18¾@ 5.17½.

According to the official Custom-House record of the Foreign Trade at New-York for the calendar month of April, and our summary, by months, from the beginning of the current fiscal year, 1st July, 1856, to the 1st inst., which we published a few days since, the Import of Foreign Merchandise at this port for the ten months (exclusive of Foreign Coin and Bullion) amounted to.....$187 106 000
Add week in May..... 5,405 517

Total to date.....$192,511,697
Against same time last year..... 164 981,316

Increase to date.....$27,330,281

By the same tablce the Exports of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods (including Foreign re-exported) amounted to.....$69,106,000
Add week in May..... 1,693,860

Total to date.....$70,799,860
Against some time last year..... 66,383,480

Increase to date.....$4 416 380

By the same tables the Export of Specie to to the 1st inst., was made.....$33,115,000
Add week in May..... 671,563

Total to date.....$33,786,563
Against same time last year..... 15,671,700

Increase to date.....$18,114,863
Increase as above in Produce..... 4,416,380

Increase all Exports.....$22 531,243

The Stock Market through the forenoon was irregular in prices, and the fluctuations frequent and contradictory, manifesting, if any distinct feature, a pretty determined contest against every appearance of reaction or buoyancy in the market from its recent long depression. The preponderating influence at the Board of Brokers, and in the immediate Street circle, not of the Board, but following closely its movements, is, as it has been, for months past, strongly against rise, notwithstanding which, the general dealings of the week have shown more strength on the other side. The actual transfers of most of the Railroad Stocks have been against the Street, thus daily lessening the supply, and the tone of the market since Thursday manifestly stronger. The deliveries of Cleveland and Toledo, and Illinois Central, by the speculators against these, as well as other securities, were not accomplished at the close of the week without borrowing the Stocks free of interest, or paying the top price for cash. The following are the most notable fluctuations through the week, scarcely one of which, so far as a downward turn was given, appeared to rest upon the condition of the Money market, which is remarkably steady, or to turn upon the financial news from abroad, and least of all, upon the actual supply of cash Stock at the command of the Board and Street speculators:

New-York Central.....	87⅛@86@86¾@86¾
New-York and Erie.....	42⅞@42⅝@42⅝@41⅞
Cleveland and Toledo.....	69¾@68¾@70@69¾
Michigan Southern.....	66@66¼@65¾@54
Illinois Central.....	135@ 82@134½@135¾

Galena and Chicago.....	101¾@99¾@99@99
Cleveland and Pittsburg.....	50¾@41@48¼@48
Erie Convertibles.....	76@75@78@77

Delaware and Hudson shares advanced to 125, and Pennsylvania Coal to 93½. Michigan Central ruled steady at 95@95½, although attempts were made to depress it by seller, 60 days. Chicago and Rock Island was also strong, 98½ to 99. Against these, two Roads the speculators against the market are wholly unable to make much headway, owing to the gradual withdrawal of the Stock from the Street, though without any effort at cornering.

The prominent financial event of the week has been the able report and funding programme of the new Board of Directors of the Southern Michigan Road, which have been received with very decided favor. The subscription to the guaranteed stock opened on the 7th inst., and the result thus far has been:

To Thursday, P. M., first day.....	$719 000
Friday.....	1,047,000
Saturday.....	1,078,100

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The True Reasons of the Rejection—Our Relations with Great Britain.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, May 10, 1857.

The Government received no dispatches by the Europa, from Mr. DALLAS, in regard to the rejection of the Senate amendments to the Dallas and Clarendon Treaty. They expected none. But they are fully informed as to the objections to the amendments, by Lord NAPIER himself, to say nothing of the article, believed to be official, in the London Morning Post.

Lord NAPIER has stated the grounds of objection, not only to the Secretary of State, but to others, and in terms of the most conciliatory nature. The Senate so altered the article of the Treaty in regard to the Bay Islands, as to require the absolute and unconditional cession of the Islands to Honduras, instead of the qualified cession, which was proposed. Herein res s the whole objection.

It is now surprising to every one that the Treaty made between Great Britain and Honduras, in August, 1856, was not communicated to the Senate. It is more remarkable that Mr. DALLAS had not communicated it to this Government. No official copy of the Treaty was before the Senate, though it was referred to in the DALLAS and CLARENDON Treaty before them. The Senate, however, took the British Treaty with Honduras, as they found it in the New-York newspapers. They found it clogged with various conditions which, being examined, appeared to them to defeat the entire object of the Treaty which Mr. DALLAS had made. There were not half a dozen Senators who were willing to go into a treaty, blindly, in regard to the Bay Islands matter. It was the gist of the whole matter. I know this from conversations with both Northern and Southern Senators.

The Senate have no adequate information from the late Administration, and were required to "go it blind." They were disposed to reject the whole thing, and did reject it, more than once.

But at length Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS, after all other propositions of amendment had failed, proposed some alterations, which were drawn in a bungling and hasty manner, but were adopted under doubt and difficulty, and with a reliance on the new Administration to put the matter right. The prevailing idea of the Senate in regard to this matter was that the new Treaty would lead to new difficulties and complications.

There was not a single Senator who did not insist upon the absolute surrender of the Bay Islands by Great Britain. There was not one who believed that she had any right to those Islands; nor one who did not consider the British occupation of those Islands a gross violation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

It is easy to perceive, therefore, that the Senate, in amending the treaty as to the Bay Islands, did it independently of any regard to the clause excluding Slavery from those Islands. It is true enough, however, that they were indignant at a proposition which would require them to become a party to a provision, which, though in itself nugatory, was not a proper subject for their action. No one in the Senate proposed to establish Slavery in Ruatan, though the London Morning Post, in its official exposition of the question, would so represent it to the British public.

The Senate did not know what was the condition of the treaty between Honduras and Great Britain, or what was its real object. Does any one know now? The Senate thought, and the present Administration believes, that the proposed cession of the islands to Honduras, was to be so arranged as to leave with Great Britain a control over them, for the purposes of a great naval dépôt, for which Ruatan is eminently adapted.

But it is probable that the British Government have found some difficulty with Honduras in regard to the ratification of the Treaty of August, 1856. If so, our amendments were a God-send to Lord ABERDEEN, for if we had ratified the Dallas Treaty as it was sent to us, his lordship would have been placed in an embarrassing situation. It would have been a treaty, but one that would not relive either Government of future embarrassment.

I do not think, from what I learn, that the Administration is disposed to go into any new treaty. There is no danger of any collision. The whole matter must rest till the next Congress meet. The Administration will not instruct Mr. DALLAS to offer new propositions.

General CASS may think that Lord PALMERSTON desires to make war upon the question, but he does not mean to give him any pretext for doing it.

More than one Senator was struck with an ill forboding by the article in the London Morning Post, of the 15th April. It was more full of portent than the Holley comet. But they say that England cannot go to war with us, as a united people. They are impressed with the necessity of taking the question of domestic Slavery out of politics. The Kansas question is the turning point. Let Governor WALKER settle that, as he says he can do. X. Y. Z.

Special Dispatch of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 11.

The consequence of the attack of MURPHY, the other day, upon SICKLES, has been just what I predicted. The appointment to the Navy Yard Engineership of BROWN, of Norfolk, has been canceled; MURPHY has been dismissed; and, to-day, Mr. CHARLES GRAHAM—a brother of the late DAVID GRAHAM, of your City—has been sent the commission for the vacant place. GRAHAM is an unexceptionable man, and his selection will prove universally acceptable.

Much complaint is made here at the Bureaucratic endeavors to secure everything for friends, which are made in the different Departments when vacancies occur, whether of small or great note. It is believed to be a regular trade upon which commissions are paid and received, while the public interest suffers.

PROPOSITION FOR A NEW CENTRAL AMERICAN TREATY—THE OATH OF OFFICE ADMINISTERED TO GEN. WALKER—IMPORTANT MAIL CONTRACTS—CHIEF ENGINEER AT THE BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD, ETC.

[FROM OUR REGULAR TELEGRAPHIC REPORTER.]

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 11.

The official papers, just communicated by Lord NAPIER, contain a formal proposition for a new Central American treaty; but the Administration will probably do nothing in the premises until the meeting of the next Congress, when the entire subject will be laid before the Senate in deference to their views heretofore expressed.

Hon. ROBERT J. WALKER to-day took the oath qualifying him as Governor of Kansas. He was closeted with the President for several hours, received his instructions from him, and will leave for the Territory to-morrow morning.

The Postmaster-General has made a contract for one year with the New York and Havre Steamship Company for the transportation of the mails between these points, thirteen round trips, and a contract for the New-York and Bremen Line with CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, for the same period and number of trips. The compensation in each case is limited to the gross amount of United States postage sea and inland, upon the mails they convey. This is a temporary arrangement until Congress shall have time to determine upon the basis on which the trans Atlantic mail service shall be maintained.

CHARLES K. GRAHAM, of New-York, has been appointed to fill the vacancy of Chief Engineer of the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, occasioned by the removal of J. MCLEOD MURPHY.

It is untrue that the President contemplates a visit to Boston in June, as is stated in the newspapers. The arrangements are nearly completed for his Summer residence in the vicinity of the "Soldier's Home," four miles from Washington.

In consequence of the pressure of public business the President has just declined the invitation to participate in the celebration of the settlement of Jamestown.

New-Orleans papers of Tuesday, the 5th inst, are to hand, but they contain no news of interest.

MARINE MATTERS.

LOSS OF THE BARK RESTLESS, OF NEW-LONDON.—Messrs. WILLIAMS & HAVEN, of New-London, some time since received rumors of the loss of their bark, but, unwilling to credit the intelligence, paid but little attention to the matter. Information of a positive character has now reached them, which leaves no doubt that the vessel is lost, and that all on board have perished. Captain JEFFREY, of the bark Pearl, of New-London, writes that he was in a heavy gale of wind, off Tristan de Acunha, and after the gale abated he saw a roundhouse floating, painted white, which resembled that belonging to the bark Restless, Captain MORGAN.

A letter to ELWOOD WALTER, Esq., dated Jacksonville, Fla., May 4, reports the total loss of the schooner M. J. Prettyman, WM. C. WINSLOW, master, of Milton, Del. She was from New-York, bound to Saltilla River, Geo., and was abandoned, sinking, at sea April 21, in Lat. 20° 20'; Long. 69°—the Captain and crew being taken off safely, by the brig Susan, from Boston, which arrived at that place on the 3d.

The schooner Moonlight, of Newark, had put into Wilmington, N. C., in a leaky condition last week, and her keel was found to be broken and split. She was placed on the ways for repairs.

SMALL BOAT CAPSISED.—At 2½ o'clock this afternoon a small boat belonging to Peck-slip, having on board eight persons, was upset off Pier No. 1 North River, and one man, whose name we could not ascertain, was drowned.

The steamer Thomas Powell broke her shaft on her downward trip from Poughkeepsie this morning. She lays at present at Cold Spring Foundry.

RESCUE OF A PASSENGER SHIP AND FIVE HUNDRED PERSONS.—We learn from a Plymouth paper that the Tagus, one of the Peninsula and Oriental steamers, Capt. CHRISTIAN, came into this harbor (Plymouth) yesterday, just before noon, bringing in tow the ship Martin Luther, of Liverpool, Capt. GORDON, a total wreck, having on board 498 emigrants, bound to Quebec. It happened that at 11½ A. M., on the previous day, Capt. CHRISTIAN observed a vessel dismasted and distressed, a little on the port bow. He started for her, and found she was a total wreck. She had a signal of distress flying, "Can you assist a vessel in distress?" Then she hoisted another: "Passengers on board." The Captain of the Tagus immediately lowered the life-boat, and after much difficulty and danger succeeded in getting her tow-ropes on board. This proceeding took two hours and a half, the sea rolling heavily all the time, so that the Martin Luther could not be boarded. It appeared that the Martin Luther left Liverpool on Saturday, and was caught in a tremendous gale on Monday, at 3 o'clock in the morning. She was picked up about 18 miles from Ushant, and had she not been rescued at that time, she would most probably have soon gone to pieces, and no one would have been left to tell the melancholy story. Lieut. CARTWRIGHT, R. N., of this town, was in charge of the admiralty mails, and he was one of the volunteers to the boat. There was the greatest difficulty and danger in getting the tow line on board the ship.

By a letter from one of the passengers we learn that the ship sailed from Liverpool on Thursday (9th). On Easter Sunday she encountered this gale in the Bay of Biscay, probably 100 miles to the west of Ushant, she became a total wreck at 3 A. M., on Monday, having nothing left but the stump of the foremast, on which, however, they contrived to hoist the signal. On Tuesday the Tagus providentially fell in with her, as above narrated; and on Wednesday noon she brought her into Plymouth. From nothing being said on the subject, we are in hopes that no lives were lost. All her boats must have been carried away or destroyed, thus leaving them without the slightest chance of escape. Five hours more would have drifted the ship and her unfortunate passengers upon the rocks of Ushant, so justly dreaded by mariners, even in the most moderate weather. We are without further particulars, except as to the almost total loss and destruction of everything belonging to the unfortunate passengers.

American Seamen's Friend Society.

The twenty-ninth anniversary of the American Seamen's Friend Society was celebrated at Dr. SMITH'S Church, in Fourteenth-street, last evening. The annual report, read by Mr. WARREN, one of the Secretaries, shows the following results of the operations of the year:

The receipts of the Society during the year were $27,520 95, and the expenditures, $29,481 76. Of these amounts, $3,992 84 were raised and expended by the Boston branch. Were those of all the auxiliaries and local Societies included, the amount would reach nearly $100,000.

Revivals have been enjoyed at the Mariners' Church and other chapels, and at the Sailors' Home in this City. 124 persons have united with the former on profession during thirteen months, and about 60 hopeful conversions have occurred at the latter. 2,940 sailors have boarded at the Home during the year, making 50,096 since the institution was opened. $330,000 have been saved by seamen from their wages, and deposited in the Seamen's Savings Bank, besides considerable sums in other banks, and which have been sent home direct to their families and friends.

The Society's present foreign stations are at St. John's, New Brunswick; Copenhagen, Gothland, Havre, Marseilles, Aspinwall, Panama, Rio Janeiro, Valparaiso, Callao, Honolulu, Lahaina, Hilo, and Canton.

The speakers were Rev. F. L. CUYLER, JOSEPH HOXIE, Mr. JOHN BYRNE (a sailor) and Dr. GUSTEVANT, of Illinois College. Mr. CUYLER held that the title of this Society was a speech in itself—it was "American," and it was "friendly." He knew no class of men who needed friends more than a sailor; no man is more exposed to temptation than he. The merchant he considered in duty bound to aid the seamen to resist these temptations by placing before him the means of becoming a better man. The sailor has no home but such as an institution like this society provides for him; and a home is the first thing he wants. Mr. CUYLER earnestly protested against the continuance of the present system of payment of seamen's wages in advance, and referred to the reports of cruelties of officers of merchant ships and the piracy of the forecastle, and was not backward in condemning such practices.

JOSEPH HOXIE followed in one of his old-fashioned speeches, full of point and humor. He based his argument in favor of this Society upon the fact of the rapid increase of American commerce—from a total tonnage of 1,191,000 in 1830, to 5,212,000 tons in 1855, and from a roll of 90,000 seamen in 1830, to 400,000 in 1855—a quarter of a century increasing both four-fold. He also urged the obligation of merchants to do good to the sailor.

Mr. JOHN BYRNE gave the narrative of his own experience on board a man-of-war, his conversion, and his labors among seamen, and was followed by Dr. STUETEVANT in some general remarks.

Young Men's Christian Association.

The fifth annual meeting was held last evening, according to appointment, in the Church of Rev. A. D. GILLETTE, Baptist, in Twenty-third street. The audience, which consisted mostly of young men and women, was large, and manifested much interest in the exercises. These began at 8 o'clock, by an effective voluntary by Mr. S. LAZAR, followed by a prayer from Rev. Dr. GILLETTE, the pastor of the Church. There was then reading of the Scriptures, an anthem by the choir, and the reading of the annual report by the President, S. M. STEBBINS.

"In presenting our fifth annual report," said that document, "we have to own that for several months past a want of harmony has existed in our midst. Without expressing any opinion as to its cause, we are most happy to believe that we are again to realize a good degree of union and prosperity. Excepting the two or three months past, the year has been one of unusual success, and we are not ready to think less of the work in which we are engaged than ever before.

The Committees of the Association have worked with pleasing efficiency. The Boarding House has a better register of boarding houses than ever before, and a large number of young men have been aided in securing comfortable Christian homes. The Employment Committee has been the means of unusually important service. Some of our most eminent mercantile houses have applied to the Committee for their clerks. On an average about 20 young men a month have received aid. The Lecture Committee secured the delivery, during the past Winter, of lectures by JOHN B. GOUGH, Rev. F. VINTON, Rev. E. HITCHCOCK, Lieut. MAURY, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, and Prof. E. YOUMANS. Large and attentive audiences were generally present. The course of Sabbath Evening Sermons, delivered by Rev. W. W. EVERTS, of Louisville, Ky.; Rev. W. HAGUE, Rev. M. S HUTTON, Rev. R. R. BOOTH, and Rev. T. L. CUYLER, were well attended.

Regular monthly meetings have been held, at which Essays have been read on the following subjects: "The Fruit of Missions," "Action," "Our influence and its teachings," "The Bible in heathen lands," "Sectarianism opposed to the progress of Christianity," "Duties of Christians to emigrants," "Relations of merchants and clerks," "Religion, theoretical and practical." These topics were also discussed by the members with evident profit.

The library has been increased—over 350 volumes having been added during the year, 320 by donation. Total number of volumes now on our shelves, 2,237. Important daily, weekly and monthly publications have been provided; our reading rooms are now scarcely less attractive than any in the City.

We have completed arrangements for classes in the languages, gymnastics, &c., in some of the best institutions in the City.

Financially, we have suffered some embarrassments from the want of proper organization of effort, and from an unusual expenditure in fitting up our rooms; but we confidently believe that by the exertions now being made, we may soon, under Divine favor, owe no man anything but love. * * * While some of our brethren left us under the impression that our want of harmony in recent discussions could never be overcome, we still have over 800 members."

At the Wednesday evening and Sabbath afternoon devotional gatherings the attendance has been large, and the spirit of devotion fervent and humble.

The speakers were Rev. Dr. J. M. STUETEVANT, Rev. R. M. HATFIELD and Rev. THEO. L. CUYLER. GEO. H. STUART, Esq., of Philadelphia, who was announced to speak, was detained at home by a bereavement in his family.

Rev. Mr. STUETEVANT took early occasion to remark upon the extraordinary movement in this City, on the part of some who occupied the pulpit, to bolster up the Play as a necessary and innocent amusement, and deprecated it, with much earnestness, as fraught with great danger to young men.

Rev. Mr. HATFIELD was present against the advice of his physician, and but poorly prepared to make an address—but before he closed the audience evidently thought he succeeded very well for a sick man.

He also referred to the position of Dr. BELLOWS on the subject of amusements, censuring him for desecrating the pulpit by a defence of that fruitful source of all evil—the Theatre.

Rev. Mr. CUYLER made the closing speech of the evening, in his happiest style, holding the audience in breathless attention throughout. In answer to the charge that these Associations were useless, and drew away the young men from their attendance at the church prayer-meetings, he remarked that if the truth were known concerning some of these young men, instead of being at the meetings of this Association, they were decorating themselves for Mrs. Potiphar's ball, or, worse, were blushing, yes, blushing, in the boxes of those moral institutions—as our good fellow-citizen Dr. BELLOWS would have them—at the representation of some lewd French play like "Camille," which ought to be hissed back to Paris, and from Paris to purgatory whence it came.

A collection was taken, and the meeting closed with a doxology and the benediction.

Rebellion at the Sing Sing Prison.

There was a "right smart chance" for a riot and insurrection at the Sing Sing Prison on Sunday morning, which, but for the prompt and efficient action of the officers, would have resulted in a loss to the State of the services of some thirty or forty most hardened rascals.

As the gangs or companies of men were leaving the mess-room to pass into the chapel, those who worked in the quarries, in the tapestry shop and in the plating department, about seventy in all, broke ranks, and raising an alarm of fire, started to run from the yards. About one-half went around the south wing of the prison, and passing through the stone enclosure sought to escape down the railroad. Intimidated probably by the near proximity of the guards, most of the gang turned back, while a few dodged into the arch, and started up the railroad track. As the remainder came through the yard, apparently for the purpose of joining the others, they were headed off by the officers, captured and locked up.

The other half fled up the track of the railroad, towards the dépôt, yelling wildly, and brandishing clung-shots, knives, hammers, and such other weapon as they had been able to conceal about their persons the night previous. They seemed to have no definite plan of action—each apparently looking out for himself. Some kept the line of the railroad—some took to the water—some climbed up the banks, and sought to escape through the back country.

The officers of the Prison succeeded, however, in surrounding this gang, and in driving the men back to their cells. A general muster was then had, and on counting up, it was ascertained that two men were missing. These were soon found—one hid in the lime-kiln, and the other stowed away comfortably behind some machinery in the stone shop.

A partial investigation of the circumstances attending this attempt to escape, reveals the fact that there was a conspiracy organized about a week or ten days ago, the ringleaders being HENRY MCINTOSH alias THOMAS DUNN, of the quarry gang; ABED SMITH alias DAD BRADY, of the tapestry shop, and WILLIAM JOHNSON, of the plating department.

MCINTOSH, or DUNN, was formerly in prison, but was pardoned out last Summer. In January last he was convicted in Kings County of burglary, and sent back to prison for the term of nine years and six months. He is an Irishman by birth, about twenty-three years of age, and a desperate, hardened rogue.

SMITH, alias BRADY, is an American; was convicted in Kings County of grand larceny, and sentenced for three years. He had but about fourteen months to stay. He is an old offender.

WILLIAM JOHNSON, is an Irishman, sent up from this City. He is in for his first offence.

These three agreed among themselves to feign sickness, that they might meet together in the Hospital. This they did so well as to deceive the officers most completely. They finished all their arrangements, and held their final meeting on Friday last, at which time it was determined that the attempt to break out should be made on Sunday morning when marching to the chapel.

They communicated their plans to their associates in their respective shops, until they had secured the cooperation of about forty. It is supposed that the thirty who joined them at the moment when they broke ranks were led off by the alarm of fire, and without any intention of attempting to escape. These made up the gang that first surrendered.

When it was apparent that the officers of the Prison were not to be intimidated, and that they would certainly capture the refractory, the first man to "come in" was DUNN, who begged lustily to be let off, and proffered his services in giving the names of those who were engaged in the plot. He now claims the credit of uniting with them, that he might control and expose their movements.

Only two of the refractory made much show of resisting—when it came to close quarters. One of these clinched with the late Principal Keeper, Mr. CUNDEN, but let go upon the first intimation that there were pistols for one only, and that he stood at the wrong end of the muzzle. Another threatened an attack on Mr. GEORGE WASHBURNE, who is one of the most determined and fearless of the Keepers. He fired his pistol at the convict, but the ball passed between his arm and his body, which it slightly grazed. The convict fell, evidently more frightened than hurt, but thoroughly cured of his pugnacity.

Having established order, the officers proceeded to deal summarily with those who were recognized as engaged in the conspiracy. The shower-bath—that modern substitute for the rack and thumb-screw—was brought into requisition, and kept constantly employed until about forty of the refractory had felt the gushing waters. In addition to the showering, the ringleaders were placed upon bread and water diet, to be enjoyed in a dark cell or dungeon—the diet and the solitary confinement to last until they shall be truly repentant—a state to which they probably succeeded within the twenty-four hours following their incarceration.

Yesterday morning the prison was unlocked at the usual hour, and the men filed off to their work with something more than their accustomed decorum and in excellent order. The prompt, decisive action of Mr. BRAINERLEY, the Warden, and his subordinate officers, together with the cooling waters of the bathing establishment, had left marked traces of the salutary effect which prompt arrest and certain punishment seldom fail to produce.

One of the Inspectors, Mr. WESLEY BAILEY, was present at the Prison when the rebellion broke out. He will promptly commence an investigation of the causes which produced it, and the means by which the men had been enabled to carry on such an intercourse as must have preceded the revolt. He will probably find it somewhat difficult to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the cause and the means; but if common report be not common slander, the Inspectors might see all in a small-sized looking glass. They would, looking back over the past two or three years, realize that for that period, under the government of inefficient and too often inconsiderate—if not intemperate—subordinates, the discipline of the Institution run down until not only men but officers were thoroughly demoralized. Fortunately—it is alleged—for the State, circumstances have lately occurred which have partially removed the causes which so largely produced the demoralization of the inmates of the prison. The rebellion of Sunday must be the inevitable, legitimate fruit of errors and indiscretions which the officials themselves committed. Though these have been in a great measure remedied, the Inspectors cannot be more profitably employed than in thoroughly acquainting themselves with the extent of the evil influences yet pervading the prison, and applying such timely remedies as will best prevent a recurrence of the riot and outbreak of Sunday.

The Quarantine War—Condition of Public Feeling on Staten Island.

A reporter of the TIMES visited the ruins of the buildings burned last week at Seguine's Point, on Sunday. A considerable number of people had gathered on the ground, actuated, apparently, by mere idle curiosity. The complete indifference of the inhabitants of the immediate vicinity to the prospect of the Quarantine's being established among them, their entire ignorance of all circumstances connected with the burning of the buildings, and their general and frequently-expressed opinion of the impassibility of detecting the incendiaries, was quite remarkable. Very few other expressions of feeling or opinion on the subject were heard. One guessed that the men who fired the buildings were never in Virginia. Another that if the Commissioners persisted in building a Yellow Fever Hospital on the ground, it would take more than 500 policemen to protect it. Another thought policemen and nurses could set fire to buildings as well as anybody else; and afterwards, that before they had a Quarantine fastened on Seguine's Point there would be a war a good deal worse than the Anti-Rent war. Oystermen were pretty fierce characters, and wouldn't be very easy to whip. They had got a good deal too much at stake to give it up easily. He expected we should see some naval engagements in course of a month or two.

The coachman who escaped from Mr. WOLFE'S mansion after the fire was started, was on the ground. He stated that no alarm was given and that he was obliged to leap from the third-story window. Some one also said that a stone had been thrown through the window in which he slept, but how he knew this our reporter could not ascertain. It was also said that the house was but two stories in height. After leaping out the coachman said he saw some men dodging among the shrubbery. He thought they were too many for him and he did not go towards them; did not know which way they went, did not know how many there were of them; six or seven he should think.

The following communication, claiming to express the settled and determined sentiment of the people of the vicinity, comes to us from one of the most intelligent, respectable and influential of their members. We give it as an indication of the feeling which prevails among them:

THE STATEN ISLAND INCENDIARIES.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

An article in the TIMES of this morning, under the above title, seems to demand a reply, and, as one of those who sympathize with the incendiaries, and who will do all in their power to protect them, I shall undertake to assert that there is, and is likely to be, a very different disposition on the part of some of the inhabitants of the Island, who claim to be "gentlemen," from that which you recommend, or even that which you assume to exist. Speaking for such, I deny most emphatically that we have the slightest desire to escape the charge of inciting the people to rebellion. We hold fast to our resolution to resist the establishment of the Quarantine at Seguine's Point "with all the powers which God has given us." We meant, and mean all that was expressed in this phrase, and the public should understand at once that if this rascally scheme is persisted in it is likely to cost hundreds of lives and millions of property. To purchase exemption from it we well know we could afford to spend a million dollars, and that the success of the scheme will probably cost not hundreds but thousands of lives we are equally well aware. Do you think we are to be frightened by the denunciations of rebellion? When, in God's name, is the sacred right of rebellion not to be employed, if not in circumstances such as these?

If the State, in mere wantonness or in petty spite, against a bad neighbor, should anchor a fleet of armed vessels in front of our villages and make any preparation to cannonade them, do you think it would be wrong for us to prepare to resist the villainy? What is proposed is a thousand times more palpably an occasion for rebellion.

The burning of the Wolfe houses is only regretted among us as having been at present unnecessary—as premature and unauthoritative action. It is a matter of small consequence, in any case, but understanding and sympathizing entirely with the hasty zeal of the individuals who took these means of showing their sincerity to those who had previously received their warnings with ridicule, it is absurd to suppose that we will treat them as common ruffians, or allow others to do so. The proclamation of Gov. KING, pretending to deem the movement criminal, "arson," is perfectly ridiculous, and would certainly be held to be so by any jury out of Richmond County or in it. If my life is threatened by a highwayman, in whatever Governmental disguise, and I break his skull with the first weapon that comes to hand, am I to be held guilty of murder? Certainly not, not even of manslaughter. We know that an unreasonable influence, as yet unexplained, these Commissioners have used the power confided to them in the most outrageously and infernally base and despotic manner. No man, with the slightest knowledge of the circumstances, can believe them to have acted with any honest regard for the purposes for which they were commissioned.

If Governor KING is weak enough, or stubborn enough, or enough tyrannically cruel and reckless of the facts in the case, to sustain the Commissioners he may make the measures which the necessity of self-preservation obliges us to adopt take the name of arson, or piracy, or rebellion, or what he pleases, not the less shall we demand the sympathy, the moral and material assistance of all humane and just men everywhere. But whether we get this or not, resist we will, and that to the utmost of our property and our skill, and to the last moment, legally and illegally. To talk to us about law is like giving a lecture to a drowning man on the utility of water. The Quarantine cannot and shall not be established at Prince's Bay. The Governor can try it if he likes. We have counted the cost of rebellion, and are quite as willing to die by the bullets of our fellow-citizens as by the silent and filthy arrows of Yellow Jack.

I cannot close without thanking the TIMES for the measure of justice to the Islanders with which it has

The Staten Island Riots.

The Staten Islander of Saturday has the following letter, dated at Westfield, one day after the conflagration of the Quarantine buildings:

WESTFIELD, Thursday, May 7, 1857.

MR. EDITOR: You can say to the good people of old Richmond, that the splendid mansion, with all the out-houses, barns, &c., together with some 500 bales of hay, on the farm purchased by the Quarantine Commissioners, vanished about midnight on Wednesday, not into corporeal air, as friend SHAKESPEARE would have it, but ashes.

Somewhere in the neighborhood of 500 citizens, of Westfield, marched with torch in hand, together with any quantity of tar, to the spot, and made a demand for the three Commissioners, having learned that they, in company with Dr. THOMPSON, (the gentleman who held such large sympathy for us poor Germen of Westfield,) were in the house; but I am informed that these worthies, after surveying the premises, and cracking a few bottles of champagne, also a glass or so of Jersey lightning, left for Paris unknown.

It is also said that an old gentleman, resembling Commissioner BROWN'S father, came near receiving a coat of tar, and it was some time before the excited populace discovered their mistake.

It is generally supposed that should any further attempt be made to locate this nuisance upon the quiet people of Westfield, that not only the strength of the husbandman will be put forth, but that old Mother Hubbard, together with the Miss of 16 and upwards. Yes, I may say that every urchin who can rub a match will aid in producing a general conflagration of materials that shall be sent there for the purpose of erecting an insurrection which will endanger the lives and destroy their homes. AN OYSTERMAN.

The Editor says "our friends in Westfield have sent us two accounts of the burning of the buildings upon the new Quarantine Ground, which we give just as they came to us, for the purpose of showing the state of feeling upon the subject in that region." In the same paper we observe a list of the Grand and Petit Juries drawn for Richmond County, which shows a large preponderance of names from the towns of Northfield and Westfield—the ominous neighborhood. There are of the Grand Jury

FRENCH NEWS AND GOSSIP.

American Law Again—Decline of Population in France—Great Preparations for the Visit of Duke Constantine to Paris—Curious Trial and Acquittal of Three French Officers for Murder in Paris—Burlesque on the Administration of Justice in New-York.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PARIS, Thursday, April 23, 1857.

The last word has been pronounced on the imperfections of the Anglo-Saxon law. M. DE CASSAGNAC in a third leader, devoted his attention to the confusion and the inequalities of this law as it is seen in England. The Débats closes the discussion in an article resuming and reiterating its former arguments in favor of the English law.

The third article of the London Times on the decadence of France was like rubbing salt into flayed flesh. The facts and figures of the Times are startling to the greater portion of the French people, not withstanding they were drawn from statistics first published in France. The stationary population and degenerated physique of the people are indeed extraordinary facts. These conditions depend mostly upon certain habits and certain physiological laws which do not obtain in other countries. They are perfectly known to French statisticians and to the scientific men of the country, but they close their eyes to evils they cannot stay. The French nation is destined to an ultimate decadence from the very causes pointed out by the Times. The French journals, however, endeavor to reply, but their principal argument is downright poltroonery. They boast of their military glory, and never cease to throw Inkermann into the teeth of the English. But the Times never contested the point of military glory; the fact that it is a great military nation contributes essentially, in this age of material progress, towards hastening a decadence. It is the argument of a drowning man, that of Inkermann. Eight thousand Englishmen withstand for four hours the shock of an army five times their number—what the same number of Frenchmen under similar conditions never would have done; and at the end of that time Gen. BOSQUET's division, having finished their breakfast, come to the assistance of the English and help to repulse the Russians. No better evidence is needed of the truthfulness of the Times' argument, than to see a grave and ordinarily powerful journal like the Débats, reduced to such arguments as the battle of Inkermann, to combat the proposition of decadence. The Emperor, it is said, is severely pained—as much as he can be—by this unwelcome discussion. But the question is mainly statistical and physiological, and does not therefore come within the precincts of the law on the press.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the feverish excitement which prevails at Paris at the anticipated arrival of the Grand Duke CONSTANTINE. Is it the prestige which the young Duke has thrown around his name by his indomitable energy, and the marvelous tales recounted of his youth? Or is it the curiosity and the respect which attaches to all the descendants of PETER the Great? It is certain that there is a great similitude of character between CONSTANTINE and his father NICHOLAS, as there is also between ALEXANDER II. and ALEXANDER I. But by that law of nature that makes us admire a redoubtable enemy, France regarded CONSTANTINE during the late war as the enemy of peace, as the evil genius of the Government of St. Petersburg, and as the active mind which sustained the war. They have not forgotten the impression of the famous canard, which represented the Prince attempting a grand naval coup against London during the absence of the troops in the Crimea. CONSTANTINE has always been regarded as the favorite of his father, and as the continuator of the policies of the old Muscovite Party, of PETER and of CATHERINE. All this gives to the name of CONSTANTINE a strange renown, sufficient to excite the immense curiosity of which I have spoken.

A French journal gives a review of the different visits made by the Czars, or their descendants, to Paris. In May, 1717, PETER the Great arrived in the French capital. Marshal TESSE and the Court carriages were dispatched by LOUIS XV. to meet him. PETER refused to get into the carriages of the King, but accepted that of the Marshal. Before arriving at Paris the Czar, suffering from the position he was obliged to occupy, ordered that the top of the carriage should be knocked off, and it was in this strange posture, standing upright, his head shooting high up through the body of the carriage, like a man in a hogshead, that he made his entry into Paris. The Marshal conducted him to the Louvre, where had been prepared for him the apartments occupied by Anne of Austria. They were magnificently furnished and lighted, and two tables, each with twenty-five covers, sumptuously served, awaited the illustrious traveler. After a rapid inspection, the Czar declared all that too splendid for him, and refused either to eat or sleep at the Louvre. He was then conducted to a private palace, which he found still too fine; but here he remained, and received, for the first time, the young King LOUIS XV. PETER took he King in his arms, and kissed him profusely. An occasion presenting in which the King was to precede in a procession, PETER, who could not consent to walk behind a boy, notwithstanding he was a King, and in his own country, compromised the matter by seizing LOUIS in his arms and carrying him.

A half century later, PAUL visited the Court of France, and was received with great honors by LOUIS XVI. Thirty years later still, ALEXANDER entered Paris as the great victory of Waterloo, at the head of the allied army, and quartered his troops in the Champs Elysées.

The Grand Duke CONSTANTINE was born in 1827, and in consequence 30 years of age. He married in 1846, at the age of 21, the daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Altenburg, by whom he has three children.

At Toulon CONSTANTINE was received by the French naval authorities as Grand Admiral. At Marseilles he is to be received by officers of Napoleon's household as Grand Duke and member of the Imperial family of Russia. At both points fêtes are to be offered him and visits made to the fleets, naval yards and manufactories of interest.

Count KISSELEFF, Russian Ambassador at Paris, will meet the Grand Duke at Chalons.

At Paris he will be received by the Prince NAPOLEON, (as is the habit,) at the railway station, and conducted to the Tuileries, where apartments are prepared for him. He will arrive here the 30th. There will be, during his stay, two dinners and grand balls at the Tuileries; three representations at the Opera; a grand chase at Fontainebleau; a matinée at the Trianon; two chases at St. Germain; two grand Reviews, one at the Champ de Mars, and the other at Versailles; and, in fine, a grand fete at the Hotel de Ville. The Review of the Champ-de Mars will embrace the garrison of Paris, and the entire Imperial Guard, in all about 60,000 men.

From Paris the Grand Duke will go to Bordeaux to see the launch of a frigate built in that port for the Russian Government. He will then pass up the coast of France, on the French imperial yacht, visiting all the principal seaports, and will return home through Belgium and Holland, without landing in England.

The legal world were singularly moved this week by the details of a trial which I have already mentioned as having commenced last week. Three officers of the French army, men of courage and respectability, who had made the Crimean campaign and bore the decoration on their breasts, were arraigned for the brutal treatment and death of a young woman of the eastern part of Paris, known for her great beauty as la belle bouchère. The woman went to the barracks one day to receive her pay for beef furnished the regiment, in the company of one of the hired men of the establishment. The man stayed below while his mistress entered to receive her pay. When she came out, this man noticed no change in her personal appearance, nor did she say to him or to any one at the time that anything unusual had occurred. Two days later, after having been more or less exposed to cold, she was seized with a fever. (A few weeks before this event she had had an abortion.) During the fever she was delirious; and while in this state she declared that she had been brutally violated on the day in question by the three officers. As the fever subsided in intensity, though not in gravity, and her reason had apparently returned, she requested that she might be left alone with her husband in order to make a confession. She then repeated to him the details of the horrible outrage, and urged as a reason why she had not sooner made the avowal, that she feared if her husband knew what had happened, he would no longer love her, and that she would have the shame of appearing before a Court of Justice. She feared also that her husband might challenge one of the officers, and as they were better swordsmen than he, his death would be almost certain. She was a woman of great energy of character, and she preserved to keep her secret, and avoid such snares for the future.

A day or two after making this avowal (which was repeated and recorded before a magistrate), la belle Bouchère died. The three officers were arrested, and have just been tried before a court-martial sitting at the military prison of the rue du Cherche Midi.

In reading the details of this supposed crime, one would suppose himself reading the accumulated horrors of a romancer inspired by the most frightful of nightmares. Two French officers, brothers, assisted by a Sergeant, concert together to entrap an honest woman and a mother into a scheme of infamy which the softened manners of our present civilization has difficulty in comprehending. And what is worse, is the fraternity in the crime! The victim, energetic as Lucretia, but understanding her honor and her duty in her own way, tries at first to hide her shame, but it undermines her health, devours and at last kills her. Only when she sees the tomb opening before her, does she decide to make, to the one who is to avenge her, the avowal of her dishonor.

The trial opened with public opinion strongly against the prisoners. Every day the neighborhood of the prison was the rendezvous of an excited mob, which, in the United States, would have taken the law in its own hands. But it was soon evident that public opinion was wrong. Prominent members of the Faculty of Medicine were called on the stand to give their opinion. M. TROUSSEAU, the distinguished physician of the hospital Hotel Dieu, gave the following theory and declared it on the stand as his opinion of the case. The woman had had an abortion; afterwards she had been exposed to the effects of cold in the open butcher's cart in which she rode; she had taken cold, a fever ensued attended with delirium, and in this delirium she had made declarations peculiar to this kind of malady, but which were of no value at all, since we often hear such declarations under similar circumstances. Just at that moment puerperal fever was epidemic, and M. TROUSSEAU did not believe that the fever and the death of the woman had any other than a natural cause. These declarations produced a great effect upon the court, and seemed to change the whole face of the case. M. TROUSSEAU's opinion gained more credence from the fact that he had seen la belle bouchère in consultation before her death, and that he was sustained by all the other medical witnesses called, with one exception. The prisoners, who were defended by Messrs. CHAIX-D'EST ANGE, father and son, were acquitted by a unanimous vote of the Council, and sent back to their regiment. The Court were of opinion that the whole accusation woe but the dream of a delirious brain, inspired perhaps by some gallantries on the part of the accused.

The trial of CARPENTIER and GERLET at New-York continues to be published, word for word, gesture for gesture, exclamation for exclamation, as it occurs, in all the principal journals of Paris, from the Moniteur down. The commente on this trial, if I could give them to you, would not flatter you much; but I cannot resist the temptation of translating a burlesque—one of many—which appeared in one of the literary journals, Les Contemporaine. I hope you will not find it too long:

A COMIC LAW COURT IN THE UNITED STATES.

Audience of the 25th of March, 1857.

At an early hour the crowd occupied the judgment hall. Each one of the audience was anxious to see how this conflict, sustained by the advocate of the unfortunate prisoners with so much obstinacy, talent and courage, would terminate. The sitting was to be devoted to the hearing of the evidence of Tender, an employé of the Northern Railroad, and a comrade of Carpentier and Grelot.

The prisoners are brought in; the audience receives them with lively marks of sympathy. The tribunal proceeds to business. The witness is called.

The Government Commissioner—Witness, what is your name, Christian name, and profession? A.—Edward Tender, employé of the Northern Railroad, in the capacity of——

Lawyer—(interrupting)—Are you really Mr. Tender? A.—I don't believe any one could be more so. [Laugh.]

Lawyer—You don't look like him. [Approbation. Hear.]

Witness—The truth is sometimes not probable.

Lawyer—How do you establish your identity? A.—Here are my certificate of birth, my passport, a receipt for rent, a parade notice of the National Guard, and a pawnbroker's receipt.

Lawyer—[He takes these documents and examines them, then locks them up in his portfolio]—Was one to tell us that these are not false?

Witness—Me.

Lawyer—That does not suffice. At any rate I shall keep these papers as of great use to my clients.

Witness—What! You are going to keep my papers?

Com.—But, Mr. B——

Lawyer—(with energy)—The defence is not free! [Sensation.]

Com.—But if you——

Lawyer—(with increased energy)—You are gagging the defence! [Tumult. Cries of "Good! good!"]

Com.—After all, you may keep the documents, it makes no difference to me. [Marked approbation.]

Lawyer, who has approached the witness—So you pretend that your name is Edward Tender; now then does it happen that your handkerchief, which I have just taken from your pocket, is marked with the letters H. T.?

Witness, in a rage—That's none of your business! My washerwoman without doubt does not know the orthography of names. Give me back my handkerchief.

Lawyer, locking the handkerchief in his portfolio—I shall keep it as being of very great importance for the defence.

Witness—It's outrageous! I've got a cold in the head.

Com.—But, Mr. B——

Lawyer, with great vehemence—The defence is not free!! [Hear, hear!]

Com.—After all, settle your own difficulties. [Murmure of approbation.]

Lawyer—You persist in saying that your name is Tender, notwithstanding the triumphant proof to the contrary which I have just given to the Court, and which I beg it to record? Ans.—Certainly, I persist.

Lawyer—(with an exultant smile)—Let us see what you are going to say to this! [Shows a bar.] Pretended Tender, your bar, which I have just taken from the bench behind you, carries printed in full the name of Pinaud! [Hatter at Paris.] [Loud exclamations in the audience; the lawyer chuckles, the witness is furious.]

Witness—A la bonne heure! Are you going to give me back my hat? This is a robber's den!

Lawyer—No, Sir. I am going to keep it as useful to my cause. [He folds the hat up like an accordeon and crowds it into his portfolio.]

Witness, exasperated—That's too much!

Com.—But, Mr B——

Lawyer, with frenzy—The defence is not free!!! [Shouts of admiration. Some of the audience shake the hand of the intrepid lawyer; the prisoners wipe their humid eyes; the Commissioner makes paper balls; the witness Tender alone seems not satisfied.]

Lawyer, with increasing animation—I am going to go on with the examination, after a vote demanded of the Court that it record the last incident. [Turning toward the witness.] Are you a Frenchman?

Witness, with temper—If you wish.

Lawyer—What is your age? A.—Thirty-two.

Lawyer—Are you vaccinated? A.—In both arms.

Lawyer, with hurried respiration—In that case, you are incompetent to testify in this affair. The defence cannot admit the testimony of a man who has been vaccinated; it is materially impossible.

Commissary, astonished—Explain yourself, Mr. ——. [The entire audience is in a fever to know the new means of defence imagined by the talented and ingenious lawyer; the greatest silence reigns in the courtroom—you might hear the theft of a handkerchief.]

Lawyer—(Slowly and gravely)—I take exceptions to the testimony of the witness because he is vaccinated, and because a man vaccinated is naturally a witness against Grelet!—(peck marked.)

[Shouts of enthusiasm. The crowd rushes toward the advocate, raises him above their heads, and carry him in triumph. The Federal Commissioner sees himself forced to adjourn the sitting in the midst of such a tumult. Tender starts home hatless, and the prisoners, so well protected by the principle of individual liberty, are reconducted to prison, where they have been for the last SIX months.] MALAKOFF.

Later from Hayti.

OPENING OF THE LEGISLATURE—THE EMPEROR'S SPEECH—COMMERCIAL NEWS.

We (Evening Post) have Haytien dates to April 18. The Legislature was convened on the 14th, and on the 16th was formally opened by His Majesty in a speech in which he expressed his entire confidence in the integrity of its members, and promised a speedy report from the ministers on the condition of the empire.

He declared that his relations with foreign States were on the most favorable footing. Twenty-eight members of the fifty-four, who compose the House of Representatives, were present on this occasion. There is no other news of any importance, and we must wait until the official reports of the ministers are handed in to ascertain the present condition of the island, and of the imperial resources. The Moniteur Haytien publishes a translation of President BUCHANAN's Inaugural Address.

Business was quiet at Port au Prince, and the place well supplied with provisions. The arrivals of coffee had reached 0,758 bags, which were selling at $140. Doubloons are quoted at $248@$250

Nothing new at Aux Cayes. Business almost suspended on account of the recent fêtes. Coffee is selling at $118, and doubloons at $256.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.—The State of Michigan has established a College of Agriculture on a farm of seven hundred fertile acres, near the city of Lansing, where the State Capitol is located. JOSEPH R. WILLIAMS, late editor of the Toledo Blade, is President. It has an endowment of $56,000, the proceeds of the salt spring lands originally given to Michigan Territory by the Federal Government. The Legislature has appropriated $20,000 per annum for 2 years to the support of the College. There are already accommodations for 80 students. No charge is now made for tuition, but each student is required to work three hours per day, for which he is paid.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE FIRST WARD ELECTION RIOTS.

Aldermen Wilson Acquitted—Enright Convicted—The "Wood" and "Libby" Factions Before the Court.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Judge Russell.

In the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, the crowd was very great. It was understood that Alderman Wilson, Enright, Foster, Curry, and the rest of the First Ward rioters, would be tried. Rarely in the trial room of the Court have so many ugly faces been seen. There was rowdyism from all the Wards of the City, but the First and Second Wards were represented with such abundance of bad characters, that the police of those Wards must have had an easy time of it during the sitting of the Court. There could have been no felonies committed while the cases of the rioters were on trial.

The District Attorney, after the passing of sundry minor sentences on undistinguished prisoners, moved that the Court should meet during the remainder of the term at 10 o'clock A. M., instead of 11 o'clock A. M. To this motion the Judge acceded, stating that he would be willing to sit to a late hour at night, in order to finish the important cases which were on the calendar.

In the matter of the election riots Mr. John Graham then rose and addressed the Court. He wished to be informed by the District-Attorney which of the defendants, charged with rioting on election day, he meant to try first. The chief defendant undoubtedly was the Alderman of the First Ward. The Alderman and his co-defendants had been unjustly dealt with. The Recorder of the City had endeavored to impress the public, through the journals, that Alderman Wilson was manœuvring to evade a trial. This was not the case. It was entirely and absolutely false. He (Mr. Graham) thought it right that, inasmuch as Alderman Wilson's was the principal case, he should first be put upon trial.

The District Attorney replied that he had intended to place Mr. Enright first upon trial, but it was so delightfully refreshing to him to find a man anxious to be tried, that he would consent, in order to oblige Mr. Graham, to try Alderman Wilson first. With reference to Recorder Smith, his learned friend was wrong. The Recorder was not prejudiced against the defendant, and had not sought to try the case. If the defendants or their friends demanded a scapegoat, he (the District-Attorney) was willing to be that scapegoat. The Recorder was not at all concerned.

Alderman Wilson was then placed on trial. Mr. Graham said he should challenge every Juror. Three were chosen, and after nearly two hours' expenditure of time, the following Jury was obtained:

Stephen Curtis,	Anthony Itchen,
Peter S. Marsh,	Charles A. Faxton,
Robert Neish,	Thorndyke B. Saunders,
Abraham Wood,	David McClatchy,
James C. Odemen,	Adolph Luhers,
Orrin Taylor,	Simon Klaber.

The questions propounded to the Jurors by Mr. Graham were of an unusually "refreshing" kind. The dispute was purely political, arising from the contention between the Wood and Libby factions. WILSON was a "Wood" man; DUFFY was a "Libby" man. Mr. GRAHAM asked the Jurors: "Have you any prejudice against any member of either faction of the Democratic Party?"—"Were you a member of any Democratic Committee or organization of any branch of the Democratic Party?"—"Did you absent yourself from the poll in consequence of any dread of violence?"—"Is there any belief in your mind that the Democratic Party resorts to violence and fraud in order to carry elections?" To these and other queries the accepted Jurors, of course, responded in the negative.

The Jury having been sworn, the District-Attorney submitted the case to them. It was a very simple case, he said. A man named Felix Duffy was assaulted and beaten on election day, at the polling place of the First Ward, as it was alleged, by Alderman Wilson and his friends. The circumstance that it was election day did not add to the heinousness of the offence. The day had nothing to do with it. The question for the Jury was, did Duffy at any time have his person interfered with by Alderman Wilson? On the part of the prosecution, however, he would abandon the charge of felony, and try the defendant simply for assault and battery.

Felix Duffy was then sworn. He deposed as follows:

I live at No. 105 Greenwich street, and know the defendant William Wilson; on the 4th of November last I was assaulted at 10 o'clock in the morning, when I went to vote; I had got part of the way into the polling-place, No. 110 Greenwich-street, when I was dragged out by some parties, and I heard Wilson say, "Go in and give it to him," or something to that effect; he was about three steps from me; I was then struck in the head, about the right ear; I crossed the street, and did not go back again; the man who struck me was John Enright; the blow did not knock me down; Wilson did not speak to me; I do not know who took me out, and prevented me from voting; they were not policemen; I saw Wilson after I made the charge against him; he told me I must have been mistaken in the person, because he was not there at the time; I made him no direct answer; I am certain that he was there, and that he said "Go in and give it to him," or something like that; nobody was there that I was acquainted with.

Cross-examined by Mr. Graham—The poll room was in No. 110 Greenwich street; I keep a drill room at No. 22 White street; it is the room where the boxing exhibitions take place; I have kept that room since February, 1856; I am the lessee of the room; there is a bar connected with it; I keep the bar; I do not take part in the sparring that goes on there; I do not profess to be a sparrer myself; I have had a little exercise with the gloves, but am not in the habit of using them; I do not consider myself a pugilist; I was opposed to the election of Alderman Wilson; I did not "electioneer" for the opposition candidate for Alderman; I did not vote; I went to the poll that morning when it opened; I was perfectly sober; I did not drink when I got to the poll; I had a loaded pistol with me; I put it in my pocket when I first went out in the morning; I was in the habit of carrying it; I put caps on it on the morning of election day; I did not take the pistol from my pocket at the poll room; I made no threats about shooting any one, nor did I exhibit the pistol; there was a large crowd of persons on the spot when I was thrust out and struck; I cannot say that Alderman Wilson could see me or not; I do not know for certain that he knew whom they were putting out; I cannot swear that Wilson meant me, when he said "Give it to him;" I have no reason to know that he knew who I was; I would not like to swear positively that Alderman Wilson made use of the language at all.

To the District Attorney—I was not acquainted with Alderman Wilson's voice; I heard the words and received the blow immediately; the words were said in a tone a little louder than a common conversation; I made an affidavit before the Recorder, and was held to bail as a witness, and have been brought up on an attachment.

The District-Attorney called Mrs. Hoath, but did not cause her to be sworn, as she knew nothing against Alderman Wilson.

Mrs Eliza Wilder was sworn. She said she lived at No. 101 Greenwich-street, and saw Duffy struck; heard Wilson say "Give it to the son of a b——."

Mr. Graham cross-examined her. Wilson, she said, was dressed in a blue overcoat, and wore a drab felt hat.

Mr. Graham, for defence, called Daniel Meahan, who said he had been a member of Assembly during the last two sessions, from the First and Second Wards; he was at the polling place of the First Ward that day, and walked around with Wilson; while they were three or four blocks from the polling place they heard a disturbance taking place; they went slowly in that direction, and it was over before they got there; it was the disturbance in which Duffy was mixed up; Alderman Wilson was not there till it was over; Alderman Wilson, to the best of this witness' belief and knowledge, was quiet, temperate and lamb-like man.

Cross-examined by the District Attorney—Did not know Duffy; Wilson had a black Kossuth hat on, a black overcoat and black pants.

Simon Myers was next called. He was brother-in-law to Duffy; didn't see Alderman Wilson at the poll, but met him immediately after he left there; there was a difficulty; Wilson, pointing towards the crowd, asked him what it was; witness told him that Duffy had got into a row; Wilson said he trusted Duffy wouldn't get hurt.

The evidence on both sides was here closed. Graham said he would leave the case to the Judge, and the District-Attorney agreed to say nothing. Judge RUSSELL told the Jury that it was a case of assault and battery. There was a palpable and direct contradiction between the witnesses. One swore to a drab hat; another to a black hat. Witnesses could not be reconciled.

The Jury, without leaving their seats, and scarcely without looking at each other, returned a verdict of Not Guilty. Alderman Wilson left the Court with his friends, and presently returned, wiping his lips.

TRIAL OF ENRIGHT.

John E. Enright was then placed on trial, for an assault on Mr. Duffy, the same Jury being retained. And here it may be well to state, that Mr. Duffy does business in the Fifth Ward, where he keeps a sporting establishment, but resides, or claims to reside in the First Ward. On this trial of Enright, the whole alleged dispute turned on the question whether he had a right to vote in the First Ward.

The first witness sworn was Mary Heath. She said she saw Enright strike Duffy on last election day. A general row followed; she saw nothing more.

Felix Duffy, was again sworn. He said that Enright struck him on the sidewalk, in front of the polling-place, after he had been dragged out, and prevented from voting; he came up to vote; Enright said he was not a voter, because he did not live in the Ward; he offered to bet $100 that he was a voter, but not having the money about him he was going home to get it, when Enright struck him, at Wilson's instigation; he was also struck by another man.

Nothing was elicited on the cross examination.

Mr. Graham moved that the defendants, inasmuch as they were not implicated in this charge, should be allowed to testify as witnesses. Mr. Hall opposed the motion, and the Judge decided adversely to Mr. Graham.

John Fitzgerald, a police officer, was then called by Mr. Graham. He said he was on duty at the polling place, No. 110 Greenwich street, on the last election day; he saw the difficulty between Enright and Duffy; there was an argument going on between them; it was about Duffy's right to vote; Enright challenged Duffy to bet; Duffy said he would go and get the money; witness saw Enright draw his arm back, but did not know that he struck Duffy; there was certainly no hard blow given, and if anything was done, in the way of aggression, it was a mere shove.

Cornelius Guire, another policeman, was called. He also heard the dispute between Duffy and Enright. There was no violence used that he could see. Enright was very orderly. He might have shoved Duffy.

Edward Hogen saw the affair. He saw Duffy pull out a revolver, and perceiving the deadly weapon, he threw his arms around Duffy, and caused the weapon to fall on the sidewalk. Duffy was directing the weapon, in a wild and dangerous manner, towards the polling place.

Duffy, in his direct examination, admitted that he had a revolver in his pocket, and had placed fresh caps on it that morning.

The District Attorney moved to have this witness' evidence stricken out.

Mr. Graham naturally objected.

Judge RUSSELL first said he would strike it out, and then said he wouldn't. The evidence rested on both sides, and the Judge mildly charged the Jury.

After two minutes deliberation, the Jury found Enright guilty of Assault and Battery. Judge RUSSELL smilingly said he would defer sentence till Saturday.

The District-Attorney said he was ready to try the other cases. Mr. Graham replied that he should demand another Jury. As all the other Jurors had been discharged some hours ago, it was necessary to adjourn the Court, which was done, at a much later hour than usual, until 10 o'clock this morning, when Destiny will be put on his second trial for arson. He will probably meet with a Jury who will not favor him because he is a Freemason.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MAY 11.

Before Judge Nelson.

DECISIONS IN ADMIRALTY ON APPEAL.

Paul Spofford et al. vs. The Steam-tug Hector. Russell Sturgis vs. The Steamship Marion.—These were cross suits, arising out of a collision which occured between the Marion and the Hector about 6 or 8 o'clock A. M., on the 17th January, 1854, about half way between Governor's Island and Quarantine. The Marion was coming in from sea, with all lights set. The Hector was going down in search of business, and had but one light up. The weather was a little hazy. For the Marion, it was alleged that she was coming up in the usual track of vessels upward-bound, on the ebb-tide, on the eastward side of the channel. Seeing the light of the Hector coming down, she ported her helm to go to the right, and slowed her engine. After a little, finding the light still bearing down upon her, she put her helm hard a port and backed her engine. For the Hector, it was alleged that she was bound down, heeding for Owl's Head, and well in on the flats, and seeing the Marion sheer, she steered also to the east to get away, but that the Marion sheered across her bows to the eastward, running right over the bows of the Hector, which was stopped and backing away from her. The Hector struck the Marion on her larboard bow, about forty feet from her stern, cutting through her planks and starting her deck beams, and then struck again on the Marion's paddle wheel, bending its wrought iron rim deeply, and passing on aft.

No proper lookout was shown to have been stationed on the Hector's bows, while the deck of the Marion was well manned.

Judge BETTS, before whom the cause was heard in the District Court, considered the Hector to have been in fault, and gave a decree against her in the first suit for the damages sustained by the Marion, and dismissed the libel in the second suit.

From these decrees the owner of the Hector appealed to this Court, and the appeals coming on for argument, Judge NELSON affirmed the decrees of the District Court.

For the Marion, Messrs. Benedict, Burt and Benedict. For the Hector, Messrs. Martin and Smiths, Mr. Donohue and Mr. Burrill.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Clerke.

Decisions.

ANOTHER DECISION AGAINST THE BALANCE DOCK COMPANY.

Richard S. Roberts vs. The New-York Balance Dock Company.—This is the second case brought against this Company, and the facts were fully given in the Times at the time of hearing. Yesterday his Honor rendered his decision, and read a short opinion, stating that if this case had been tried before him previous to the argument in the case of Hecker vs. The Same, it was very possible that he should have come to a different conclusion from that attained by Judge ROOSEVELT; but propriety and convenience required that the well-considered decision of one judge should be followed by another judge, where the case involved the same facts and principles. As far as the special Term was concerned, the maxim of stare decisis should on this occasion be observed. The questions involved should be deemed open only for consideration at the General Term. Judgment for plaintiff with costs.

In re W. S. Staples.—Prayer denied, without costs.

Dorman vs. Hempsted.—Motion to dissolve injunction denied. Costs to abide event.

Rohae vs. Rothe.—Alimony pendente lite $25 per month in lieu of her present allowance, and $100 counsel fee.

Knapp vs. Knapp.—The testimony is not subscribed by the witness, nor certified by the referee.

The People ex rel. Howell vs. Ward.—Motion granted without costs.

In re Hennessy.—Referred to take an account.

Turner vs. McAuley.—Motion granted to abide event.

Hillman vs. Hillman.—It is not necessary to make the Administrator of J. S. Hillman parties. Let an order be entered making his heirs parties. No costs.

PROPAGATION OF FISH.—An interesting report on the artificial propagation of fish, made to the Massachusetts Legislature, by the Commissioners appointed last year, embodies a great number of useful facts. The conclusions of the report are as follows:

"That the artificial propagation of fish is not only practicable, but may be made very profitable; and that fresh waters may thus be made to produce a vast amount of excellent food; that a small outlay of capital and a moderate degree of skill, aided by such information as can be derived from books that any man can procure, will enable the proprietors of small streams and ponds to stock their own waters; that in respect to the larger streams and ponds a combination of individuals may be necessary, with special legislation adapted to each particular case, and guarding the rights of all persons interested in the waters—especially where they have been applied to mechanical purposes."

A HAUL OF COUNTERFEITERS.—At Covington, on Monday, an old man named BAER was detected in the act of either going to pass spurious gold $3½ and $5 pieces. He was taken to jail, and on searching him, there was found upon his person $300 in counterfeit bills on the Canal Bank of New-Orleans, of the denominations of $20, $50 and $100. Marshal BUTTS obtained information respecting his confederates, which he communicated to Mr. RUFFIN, who yesterday sent with Marshal BUTTS, officers CARR, COLBY, and GRET, to the Bevis House, at the corner of Walnut and Court streets. About 4 o'clock, an old man, named T. SILVER, entered and was arrested. He was arrested about four years ago in this city, and taken on to Virginia to answer a charge of passing bad money there and was sent to the penitentiary, which place he left at the expiration of his time, not long ago. On his person were found seventy one-dollar gold pieces, of the date of 1853. They were carefully wrapped in paper so that no two of them could rub against each other. They are neatly executed, and well calculated to deceive, but they are not nearly so heavy as genuine coins. He had also one of the $20 counterfeits on the New-Orleans Canal Bank, a good $20 gold piece, and $4 in good bills. When he found himself about to be arrested, Silver drew a splendid self loading pistol, which he evidently intended firing, but one of the officers caught his arm with sufficient quickness to prevent the act. In his bosom was found a large new bowie knife. Between 6 and 7 in the evening, another of the gang, whose name is J. MILLER, entered the same hotel, and was arrested. Upon him was found a counterfeit half dollar, and a list of the names and residences of twelve or fifteen counterfeiters who deal in the "stuff." Most of them are located in northern Ohio. BAER remains in jail at Covington.—Cincinnati Gazette.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT.—ALFRED J. VAUGHAN, of Missouri, Indian agent for the Blackfeet and other neighboring tribes, Vice JOHN H. MCBRAYER, who declines the appointment.

THE ATLANTIC AND MISSISSIPPI UNITED.—Last night about 9 o'clock, says the Savannah News of Tuesday, the steam whistle announced the return of the train which left this city on Tuesday last for Memphis, on the banks of the Mississippi. The train which bore the delegation and fire companies from Savannah arrived in Memphis on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, and left that city on Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock, arriving here Monday evening at 9 o'clock, making the run of 750 miles, without a change of cars, in fifty-two hours!

Newspaper Advertising—The Progress of the Daily Times

The Original Confidence Man is unquestionably the Editor and Proprietor of the Herald. The extraordinary demands which he makes day by day upon the public credulity, are quite as amusing as the best of the exploits reported in the police columns of the daily press. Last Saturday's performance in this line capped the climax. "The Herald has been so long at the head of the New York Press,"—says its Editor and Proprietor, that "advertisers are beginning more and more to give it a monopoly of their business." It complacently compares its own position among its "sickly cotemporaries" of the Press in this respect, to that of the London Times among English journals, and represents the Herald as having for years enjoyed, without dispute, the monopoly of circulation and advertising, which the Times has only achieved after a protracted and desperate contest.

We are not disposed to argue against the Herald's assumptions. We should as soon think of skirmishing with an army of wind bags as to enter upon any exposure of its ridiculous and preposterous gasconade. Its readers have become so accustomed to this kind of stuff that it probably produces no more impression upon their minds than it does upon the public at large. But we shall simply submit to the public a few figures, copied by our cashier from the books of the TIMES establishment, and place them side by side with a similar statement made a few weeks since by the Herald,—to illustrate the relative growth of the two journals. We give the Herald's statement first:

From the Herald, April 11.

No better criterion or indication of the vast increase of the general business of this Metropolis during the present season may be named than the increase of the advertising and circulation of such a general business Journal as the New-York Herald. The following is a comparative statement for the month of March, for the years 1856 and 1857:

RECEIPTS FOR THE MONTH OF MARCH.

	Advertising	Circulation.	Tot. Receipts.
1856.....	$ 5,043 63	$27,196 46	$42,640 09
1857.....	18 907 98	30,430 02	49,338 00
Increase.....	$3,864 35	$3,333 56	$6,697 91

The following statement copied from our account books, gives the

CASH RECEIPTS OF THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES FROM APRIL 1 TO MAY 9.

	Advertising	Circulation.	Tot. Receipts.
1857.....	$20,085 51	$23 295 91	$43,391 42
1856.....	15,218 14	20,473 53	35,691 67

We submit these figures, not for the purpose of making any display of our private business—in which we are aware the public feel very little interest, but simply by way of exposing the malicious mendacity and insolent assumption which characterize the Herald's treatment of its cotemporaries. We have never been disposed to underrate the circulation or the pecuniary success of that sheet,—though both are constantly thrust upon public notice as evidence of its strong hold upon the affections of the community and of its claim to be the leading American journal. But its circulation, as any one who knows anything of the facts is perfectly aware and as all who know the character might know must be in that case, is very largely among the lowest, least intelligent and least reliable of newspaper readers. The advertising patronage which it "monopolizes" is therefore that of those classes which depends upon these classes for its prosperity. As a medium for general business advertising,—for notices addressed to business men or families,—it is far inferior to other City journals of far less pretensions.

The Herald has been published for over twenty years. The TIMES is not yet six years old. Taking this fact in connection with the figures given above showing the relative position and progress of the two papers, we are quite content that the public should judge between the Herald and what it styles its "sickly cotemporary."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

We publish this morning the particulars of an insurrection at the Sing Sing Prison, in which about forty of the convicts were engaged, headed by three ringleaders. The prompt action of the officers of the prison prevented any serious consequences, and subordination was speedily restored.

Temporary contracts for carrying the mails between New-York and Havre, and New-York and Bremen, have been awarded—the former to the New-York and Havre Steamship Company, and the latter to CORNELIUS VANDERBILT. Thirteen round trips are to be made on each route, during the year over which the contracts extend.

Advices from Hayti are received to the 10th ult. There is no news of importance. The Legislature was opened by SOULOUQUE on the 16th. His Majesty's address on the occasion contained nothing beyond the routine statement that generally make up royal speeches.

Heavy rain-storms and freshets have occurred at various points South. The low lands on the Roanoke River, in North Carolina, are buried under water to the depth of from three to twenty feet. Crops, fences and every thing are swept away by the current. The rise in the river is thirty or forty feet above the ordinary tides. Several of the South Carolina and Alabama rivers are also swollen by freshets.

The Anniversaries held yesterday, were the Kansas Friends' Society's, where the addresses were made by Rev. Mr. CUYLER, JOSEPH HOXIE, Esq., Mr. JOHN BYRNE (a sailor), and Dr. STURTEVANT; the Yonng Men's Christian Association, where Mr. CUYLER spoke again admirably, Dr. STURTEVANT and Mr. HATFIELD, none of whom omitted paying their compliments to Dr. BELLOWS for his strange defence of the Theatre; and of the Union Theological Seminary, where addresses were delivered by members of the graduating class, and by Dr. HITCHCOCK.

CHARLES K. GRAHAM, of this City, has been appointed Chief Engineer of the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, in place of J. MCLEOD MURPHY.

A man named HUGH DARRAGH was arrested in the Sixteenth Ward, yesterday morning, on a charge of taking the life of ARCHIBALD IRWIN by striking him on the head, with a cart-rung, during a fight in Jefferson-square, on the 17th of October, 1854. A warrant for DARRAGH's arrest was issued at that time by Coroner O'DONNELL, but DARRAH eluded the officers and fled to Canada where he remained until recently.

The Mayor sent a communication to the Board of Supervisors, yesterday afternoon, stating that in accordance with a recent act of the Legislature, he ceased to be a member of the Board. The communication was accepted and placed on file.

The Board of Aldermen met yesterday afternoon, and adjourned without transacting any business of importance.

The Councilmen tried to, but could not, get a quorum yesterday. It will be remembered that under the new Charter members of the Common Council get no pay for their valuable services.

The stables of Mrs. JOHNSON, rear of No. 64 James-street, were destroyed by fire about 1½ o'clock yesterday morning. Four horses, belonging to different parties, and valued at $100 each, were suffocated to death. A young man named EDWARD FOLLIS, who slept in the stable, was so badly burnt that his recovery is considered doubtful.

In the Supreme Court, yesterday, Judge CLERKE decided the case of ROBERTS vs. the New-York Balance Dock Company, in favor of the plaintiff. He intimated that he did so chiefly because the same facts and principles were passed upon by Judge ROOSEVELT, in the case of HECKER vs. the same defendant, and there decided in favor of the plaintiff.

In the Supreme Court the libel case of FOWLES vs. BOWEN & MCNAMEE, came up before Judge WOODRUFF, but by agreement was set down for the 19th inst.

Two interesting collision cases, arising out of a collision between the steamship Marion and the steamtug Hector near the Narrows, were finally determined by Judge NELSON yesterday, in favor of the Marion, on appeals from decrees rendered in her favor in the District Court.

The Burdell Murder.

We trust that our City authorities will immediately offer a large reward for such information as shall lead to the detection of the murderer of Dr. BURDELL. There is now no other way in which this can be accomplished, and there is no longer any excuse for our Mayor and Common Council to refuse or delay such action. Previous to the late trial it would manifestly have been improper to prejudge the action of the Jury; and the offer of a reward at that time would have been equivalent to a declaration that the parties indicted were not guilty. But this conclusion has now been decisively and finally established. The Coroner's Inquest, the Grand Jury and the Criminal Courts have signally and utterly failed in their attempts to explore and develop this terrible crime. It is now time for the Government to interpose, and use all the means within its reach for the accomplishment of this object.

As matters stand now, it is perfectly evident that no further efforts will be made to fathom this mystery. No one has any interest in its disclosure. The regular tribunals have exhausted their powers, and discharged their duty. The parties accused have been declared innocent. The relatives of the victim have no reason and no disposition to push inquiry into the causes of his death, and are apparently absorbed in the struggle for the property he left behind him. The eager appetite of the public for a victim for justice has been dulled by delay, and has given place to apathy and indifference. Yet there is in the public mind a profound desire for the discovery of the murderer, and a deep conviction that the City and the Law will be indelibly disgraced if such a crime, so committed, is left shrouded in darkness and allowed to go unpunished.

There should be offered at once a reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS for such information as will lead to the discovery of the assassin. Such an offer might prove utterly unavailing: but if it should, the City would lose nothing in money and would gain something in credit;—for it will certainly reflect disgrace upon us if this horrible crime is allowed to pass with no further effort at investigation. But we have strong confidence that such a reward would lead to the detection of the assassin. The disclosures of the recent trial have thrown a good deal of light upon the deed itself, although they have done nothing towards fastening its guilt upon any individual. But they have reduced it to a moral certainty that the murder was committed by some person other than the inmates of the house. They have rendered it almost certain that if it could be ascertained where and with whom Dr. BURDELL spent the evening, from 5 o'clock until he returned to his own room, a clue would be obtained which would lead to the detection of his murderer. Now this is precisely the kind of information which a large reward would elicit. If there are several parties who know where he was during that interval, some of them may be restrained from disclosing that knowledge, not from consciousness of guilt themselves, but from an unwillingness to get others into trouble. These scruples would disappear under the stimulus of a large reward. The police, who thus far seem to have been inactive and inefficient throughout this whole affair, would have fresh motives for vigorous exertion, and would be very likely to accomplish some useful and valuable result.

We trust that Mayor WOOD will take this matter in hand, and either make the offer himself, if he has the power, or lay the matter before the Common Council in such a form as to lead to prompt and decisive action. And it seems to us, moreover, a case in which the honor and reputation of the whole State are so largely involved, as to warrant Governor KING in issuing his proclamation offering a reward for the discovery of the author, or authors, of this atrocious crime.

The American Tract Society.

The anniversary meeting of the American Tract Society, occurring to-morrow, will probably attract considerable attention. It will be remembered that the meeting of this Society, a year ago, in the old Brick Church, was vexed by a dramatic debate on the everlasting subject of Slavery, in which several distinguished divines took a prominent part. The result of this debate was the appointment of a Special Committee, consisting of fifteen eminent men of various Christian denominations, to examine and report upon the policy of the Executive Administration of the Society.

We learn that this Committee completed their labors on Saturday last, having unanimously adopted a report, which will be presented to the Society at the meeting to-morrow morning, in Dr. HUTTON's Church, on Washington-square. What this report will definitely recommend respecting the relations of the Society to American Slavery, is not yet publicly known; but it is expected that, in general, it will recommend the same policy as that which the Executive Committee itself proposed one year ago,—and would then have been adopted, but for the "moral convictions" of certain agitators who suspect a cat in every meal bag that is voluntarily left at their door.

Whether this or any Report will be harmoniously accepted by the Society, or not, depends very much upon the Congregational members, whose organ, the Independent, has assumed the right and authority not only to regulate the Tract Society, and all other national and religious institutions—not forgetting dry goods and the finances—but also to dictate to the TIMES lessons in editorial propriety. If the Special Committee who have reviewed the affairs of the Tract Society, have paid only a proper regard to the frequent and gratuitous advice, respecting their duties, with which the columns of the Independent have been filled, we shall have to-morrow a sensible and sound Report; whose effect will be to give new vigor to the operations of the Society, and to extend the field of its usefulness.

Independent advice is not always reliable. For though there is a vast difference between independence and intolerance, it is generally true that they who are the swiftest to boast of their independence in matters of doctrine or opinion, who rant the most rabidly over the "Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri," as HORACE has it, are most intolerant of everything that does not square with their faith. We trust that the Committee's Report has not been dictated by party feeling on either side, and that the meeting to-morrow will not be another act in that sectional drama which was introduced a year ago on the stage of the old Brick Church.

The Finances of the City.

Three communications have been presented to the Common Council of this City within the last two weeks, in relation to the present financial crisis in the City Treasury. Two of them have emanated from the Comptroller's office, and the third from that of the City Chamberlain. The latter was elicited by a resolution from the Board of Aldermen, "requiring the Chamberlain to report his reasons for refusing to pay the City warrants lately drawn on him, with a general estimate of the amount of funds in his possession to the credit of the several City accounts." The former—the first of which was addressed on the 29th ultimo to the Board of Aldermen, and the second to the Board of Councilmen, on Wednesday evening last—contain a comprehensive exhibition of the evils which have led to the present lamentable state of the City credit, as they are understood by Mr. FLAGG. There are several startling facts in connection with these documents which we fear have not been sufficiently taken into consideration by the tax-paying public. Disliking as they do the perusal of official documents, and especially averse as they are to the perusal of columns of figures, it is to be apprehended that even those persons who are most interested on the subject of taxation do not appreciate the overwhelming significance of the announcement, that UPWARDS OF TWENTY MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WERE PAID OUT OF THE CITY TREASURY DURING THE YEAR ENDING WITH THE 31ST DECEMBER LAST! They do not consider the possibility of bankruptcy, and its fatal consequences, as the necessary vortex into which their own criminal apathy, and the downward career of corruption and peculation in the Departments, is plunging this apparently prosperous Metropolis. They do not seriously stop to ponder, how a remedy is to be applied to the scandalous expenditure of eight millions a year for the perpetuation of dirty and ill-paved streets, a police which connives at crime; an insufficient supply of water, and public works, which are notoriously kept up for the sole benefit of a few politicians, whose individual aggrandizement is the sole end of the perjuries which characterize their entrance into office.

Mr. FLAGG's communication of April 29 relates exclusively to the embarrassments into which the City has gradually fallen, through the ill judged manner in which the accounts are kept for opening, regulating, grading and paving streets. It is an amplification of a similar report which was made to the Board of Councilmen on the 10th of June, 1856, and shows the correctness of the prognostications of coming embarrassment which were made in the annual report of the Comptroller for 1853. As we shall take occasion to discuss this subject fully, in a day or two, we need not dwell upon it now. It is sufficient to say, here, that the existing system is so defective that it ought to be immediately altered, if not in precise accordance with the suggestions of Mr. FLAGG, at least in such a manner that security is insured to the City against the recurrence of such vast arrearages as have been the result of the low rate of interest imposed upon defaulting or negligent property holders, in the payment of their assessments. In Brooklyn and Williamsburg the law wisely provides that contractors and others shall wait until assessments are paid before they receive the money due to them; but that parties who do not pay shall be taxed at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum interest, which goes not to the City, but is divided among those to whom payment is retarded by their delay. This affords an ample remedy against complications with the City on the one hand, and injury to its creditors on the other.

The communication which was received by the Common Council from the Comptroller's office last Wednesday, is one which deserves to be carefully perused and weighed by every property owner. In the small space which is occupied by the first half of it, the history of that wretched legislation during 1856 is exposed, which sowed the seeds of mischief, the harvest of which has yet to be reaped and consumed. It closes with the statement that "during the fiscal year ending Dec. 31, 1856, the total payments made from the City Treasury were $20,334,145 82-100!" This brings us to the 1st of January, 1857, when the balances to the credit of the Treasury, according to Mr. FLAGG, were as follows:

On account of the Sinking Fund	$740,139 60
On account of the City Treasury	1,481,162 23
Total	$2,221,301 83

Since that period, that is, during the first four months of the present year, there has been borrowed at 6 per cent.:

On account of Croton reservoir	$1,000,000
Revenue bonds, at 7 per cent	1,876,050
Central Park, at 6 per cent	1,200,000

Mr. FLAGG says that "money has been borrowed" also on Revenue Bonds, to pay the school mill-tax, but whether this is included in the above $1,876,050, or forms a separate item, does not appear. Of the $1,000,000 borrowed on account of the Croton Reservoir, $400,000 were taken by the Comptroller for the Sinking Fund. Thus, the receipts in the Treasury, up to the 1st of May, as appears in the books of the Finance Department, were, exclusive of ordinary taxation, $4,076,000, or, including the balance on hand on the 1st of January, $6,297,301 83-100. Pretty well for the first quarter of the year, when it is remembered that the drafts of the City have been dishonored, and that the Treasury is at this moment largely overdrawn! To explain this, the Comptroller states that the following payments have been made:

Water Loan	$990,000
State School Tax	231,000
Mill Tax	100,000
Central Park	1,200,000
Croton Reservoir	708,000
Revenue Bonds matured	1,491,643 34
Assessment Contracts	61,804 10
Total	$4,782,447 44

He adds that, besides this sum, of which he gives the details, "very heavy payments were made, after the passage of the Tax bill, on account of arrearages for 1856, and for the ordinary expenses of the City Government, during the first quarter of the year 1857." It is to be regretted that the exact object and amount of these "heavy payments" does not appear in Mr. FLAGG's communication, the more so as, so far from the "ordinary expenses of the City Government" having been paid, it is notorious that the clerks in many of the public offices are still kept out of their salaries, and that the members of the Police were refused payment of the same due them, previous to the 1st of May, about which there was no dispute, until it was advanced, at his own risk, by the City Chamberlain. Inasmuch as the Comptroller states that "these operations have swallowed up" all the money "in the Treasury," and a quarter of a million besides, there remains a balance paid out of about $2,000,000, concerning which it were to be desired that a supplementary communication were made to that of May 6, giving all of the items of City expenditure, in order that the Common Council and the public may have full means of judging of the exact state of the Treasury, and of the nature of its wants.

In order that the public may be possessed of the most accurate possible data in relation to our City finances, we have procured from the Clerk of the Chamberlain's office the following account, which shows the state of the Treasury at three periods, viz.: to 1st January, the 17th April and May 8:

1857. CITY TREASURY.	Dr.
April 17—To amount paid sundry times from 1st January to 17th April	$7,051,262
April 17—To balance overdrawn	$1,132,600
Amount paid in from 17th April to 8th May	638,187
Total	$1,770,787
May 8—To balance overdrawn	$330,000
1857.	Cr.
Jan. 1—Balance	$1,481,624
April 17—Receipts from Revenue Bonds to date	1,524,200
Receipts from Stocks and Assessment Bonds	2,095,400
Receipts—taxes and all other sources	816,428
Balance, overdraft	1,132,600
Total	$7,051,262
May 8—Receipts Revenue Bonds to date	$1,156,050
Receipts Stocks and assessment Bonds	26,200
Receipts Taxes and all other sources	253,537
Balance, overdraft	330,000
Total	$1,770,787
May—Amount transferred yesterday from the Sinking Fund to the City Treasury	$500,000

In Mr. FLAGG's communication, he says "the surplus revenues of the Sinking Fund have heretofore been used indiscriminately for all demands on the Treasury. This will no longer be done." The item, $500,000, for which a check was drawn by the Comptroller himself, some days since, but was only countersigned and transferred yesterday, forms an exception which has been too often made to the salutary promise which was made last week to the Common Council. If to this sum of half a million is added the balance of $292,000, which has been borrowed from the Croton Loan to pay other City debts, we have $792,000 misappropriated in direct violation of the law. There may be other illegal appropriations also; but it is clear from the above tables that, while the City credit has been made good at the Bank, it has been by a forced process, and that there is a deficit somewhere, on two accounts alone, of $462,000! With regard to the revenues that may be made to derive from surplusages, whether in the Sinking Fund or unappropriated loans, there will be opportunity of speaking hereafter. It is enough for the present that we have the sad spectacle to contemplate of neglect, extravagance, and reckless disregard of the public interest, in every avenue to and from the Treasury. Since the begining of the year well nigh $8,000,000 have been paid out, against, properly speaking, only $7,500,000 received, and there has been a moment of which the Chamberlain of the City was compelled to speak as follows in his answer to the requirement of the Board of Aldermen:

"On the 11th of March last the City Treasury had to its credit one million two hundred and ten thousand four hundred dollars; on the 12th of March, the next day, the account was overdrawn two hundred and thirty-six thousand eight hundred dollars. This overdraft continued to increase daily until the 17th of April, when the City Treasury was overdrawn one million one hundred and thirty-two thousand six hundred dollars, ($1,132,600.)"

This discrepancy in the figures between the accounts, respectively, of the Comptroller and the Chamberlain, are doubtless explainable by the fact, that the memorandum of Mr. FLAGG was only intended to be partial and approximative, while the accounts of Mr. STOUT are handed in to the Comptroller weekly, and are therefore more precise. Both agree in representing the history of the past as deplorable in the extreme; the prospect for the coming year as worse than any that has ever preceded it, and the moral is a common one by which property-holders and tax-payers will be insanely neglectful of their interests, if they do not profit.

PROPER TIME FOR A CLEAN SWEEP.—It is customary with all good housekeepers when they expect visitors, to dust the parlors, sweep out the entry, and put things to rights generally; and it would be well if our City authorities should follow so excellent an example. To-day is the commencement of our religious and benevolent anniversaries, and thousands of most respectable people from all parts of the country have pounced in upon us to take part in the interesting ceremonies of the week. We are sorry that the streets are not in better condition to receive them; and especially so, as so large a number of our visitors wear white cravats. The new head of the Street cleaning Department ought to have had those streets cleanly swept at least, which are likely to be most visited by our friends from the country. But, the streets are rather better now than they were last year, when we were under the rule of EBLING, and there will be no great risk in promising that they will be better still next year.

NEW YORK, Monday, May 11, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I cannot see, for the soul of me, why you seem so grouty about the simple statement in the Herald of yesterday as to Dr. BLAISDELL's whereabouts.

You disclaim all belief that the Doctor had any thing to do with the murder, and yet you seem unwilling to have one word said to relieve him from the "direct and unwarrantable references which were very unfairly made to Dr. Blaisdell by the counsel who defended Mrs. Cunningham on her recent trial."

Why is it? I think you must be enraged at Ex Judge DEAN for adopting in his defence of Mrs. C the sentiment and almost the very words of the article published in your paper, and of which Dr. B. complains.

I cannot even give Judge DEAN the credit of originality in thought or speech. Read the article alluded to, that appeared in your paper, and then the speech of Judge DEAN as reported by your own corps, and there is a great and striking similarity in all the prominent features.

As to the eight friends that you modestly suggest the public might be anxious to know about, I can assure you they are all "on deck," and ready to respond to any call that may be made upon them, particularly where your interests may be concerned.

You speak of my appearing as a witness instead of an attorney now.

Surely, at all times, when I can aid to relieve any one from so cruel a charge as murder, by simply recording the truth, I shall feel it not only my duty but a great pleasure to do this, especially if I am sufficiently "out of business" to attend to it.

Yours, &c., C. F. WETMORE.

We are very unfortunate in our endeavors to please or satisfy Mr. WETMORE. He seems desperately bent upon a controversy with somebody. He and his "eight friends" seem to be eager for an opportunity to testify somewhere concerning something. Having been drilled and disciplined for service, they seem to be a little tired of waiting "on deck" without anything to do. Mr. WETMORE tells us that he was present throughout the trial, waiting for a chance to testify,—but did not get it. So he consoles himself, and endeavors to alarm us by saying that his cohort of "eight friends" will be on hand—"ready to respond to any case that may be made upon them, particularly where our interests may be concerned!" We have not the slightest doubt of their readiness to obey orders on any occasion where their services may be required.

Now we beg to assure Mr. WETMORE that we were neither "grouty," nor "enraged," nor displeased, about his "simple statement." On the contrary, we were glad to see it. All we did was to ask for more. We learn from this statement that Dr. BLAISDELL was at his room with Mr. WETMORE and eight other friends, from seven o'clock until twelve on the night of Dr. BURDELL's murder. We had previously learned from Dr BLAISDELL himself, that he saw Dr. BURDELL at half past four o'clock that afternoon;—that he then agreed to meet him at his room at seven o'clock that evening—from which it is clear that Dr. BURDELL intended to come home much earlier than the hour at which FARRELL and Ross pretend to have seen him enter the house;—and that Dr. BLAISDELL did not keep the promise which he then made. Upon this point, in his evidence before the Coroner's Jury, Feb. 6, Dr. BLAISDELL testified as follows:

Question—Did Dr. BURDELL tell you recently that threats were made to destroy his life? A.—He told me on Friday.

Q.—On Friday last? A.—On Friday last: I was ere twice; I had an engagement with him at seven o'clock in the evening.

* * Q.—His desire to have you with him was to protect him from assault? A.—He said this: "I want you should come and stay with me; I want you to come to-night; I am afraid to stay; I am very melancholy, and I want you to come."

A Juror—To come to-night? A.—Yes, Sir, to come if possible; "I want you to come and spend the evening with me."

Coroner—Go on.

Witness—I said I would come in the evening, but could not spend the night with him,—that circumstances were such that I could not leave home; circumstances prevented me from keeping my appointment at seven o'clock in the evening; he asked me to be at his house at seven o'clock, but I was prevented.

On Saturday the 7th, being recalled, Dr. BLAISDELL added the following on this point:

Q.—In your examination before you stated that Dr. BURDELL wished you to come on this Friday evening? A.—Yes. I was here on Friday twice.

Q.—And you did come to the house? A.—I came twice on Friday.

Q.—And what time was the last that you were here on Friday? A.—Not far from half past four on Friday afternoon.

Q.—You stated that there were reasons why you did not come: some of the jurors have suggested that they would like to know those reasons? A.—I believe I stated when I got home I had been gone all day, and had been gone off for a number of days before, and I found some friends at the house, and they remonstrated against my going out; there have been remonstrances against my going out ever since the garroters were about; I am very much afraid of them: I started once and intended to come, but SO MUCH WAS SAID ABOUT IT that I declined.

Dr. BLAISDELL was again recalled on the 9th, and then gave the following additional testimony on this point:

Q.—Hadn't you and the Doctor an appointment to meet at seven o'clock? A.—Yes, Sir, I made an appointment to meet him at that time.

Q.—What was the reason you did not return? A.—My folks didn't want me to go out in the evening. I had some folks at the house that evening, and I spoke of coming after I got home, AND STARTED.

Q.—Who were those friends? A.—Mr. WATMORE and Miss COAN. I don't know of any one else.

Q.—Where did you go directly after leaving this house? A.—Directly home.

Q.—How long did you stay at home? A.—Till the next morning about half past eight, my usual hour of going down.

Q.—You didn't like to go out at night; you were afraid, the impression being on the public mind about this garroting business? A.—No, Sir; I had no fear.

Q.—Had you any arms about you? A.—No, Sir; I have no fears of going anywhere, in this or any other city, day or night—not myself. I have no fears of that—of no man, living or dead.

Now, it appears from this that, but for the active interference of his friends, Mr. WETMORE, Miss COAN and others, Dr. BLAISDELL would have kept his engagement with Dr. BURDELL,—would have been with him in the evening, and, in all human probability, would have prevented the foul and mysterious murder, which was perpetrated at very nearly the hour which had been fixed for the meeting. Mr. WETMORE ought to have no difficulty in understanding the feeling on the part of the public, which desires more full information concerning remonstrances which proved to be of so much importance. What was said in that conversation,—and who said it? Did Mr. WETMORE himself urge Dr. BLAISDELL not to keep this appointment? After he had "started," as he says he did, who first called him back and prevented his going?

Mr. WETMORE must not think it at all strange that we suggest these inquiries. Dr. BLAISDELL is the last man who saw Dr. BURDELL except Dr. COX, so far as is known. He is the only man to whom the Doctor revealed his intention of retiring to bed before he left that evening. And he is the only man whom the Doctor is known to have expected that night. It is not at all strange, therefore, that the public should look to him for some hints as to the Doctor's whereabouts meantime. And we trust Mr. WETMORE, in pursuance of his landable desire to clear all innocent persons from the suspicion of guilt, will give the public all the information on the subject that may be in his possession.

THE STATEN ISLAND REBELLION.—There is probably no part of the Empire State where there is so much clannishness and independence of feeling among the people, as exists among the native inhabitants of Staten Island; and this is especially true of the south side of the Island where the population is of a more indigenous character than on the north side. Many of the farms lying on that side of the Island are still held by the descendants of the original owners who received their patents from the Dutch Government; they have descended from father to son, and the same family names have been known there ever since the land was first occupied by its white inhabitants. People who have thus inherited their estates, who have held undisturbed possession of their orchards, cabbage gardens and oyster grounds for centuries, very naturally have stronger local attachments, and believe themselves possessed of greater inherent rights than the new comers, who have but just settled upon their purchased property.

In viewing the sturdy disposition to resist the constituted authorities, in relation to the quarantine at Seguine's Point, by the people of that neighborhood, it will not do to leave out of sight the peculiarities of these conditions. Believing that their inherited rights have been outraged, it is but natural that they should make opposition to the invaders of their territory. But the law can make no such distinctions, and they must be treated precisely as any other violators of the law and disturbers of the peace are treated.

We give place, this morning, to an extraordinary communication from one of the residents of the neighborhood of Seguine's Point, who not only defends and approves of the conduct of the incendiaries who fired the buildings on the Wolfe property, but states that the people approve of the act, and will repeat it as often as an attempt may be made to convert the place into a Quarantine. It is stated, too, that the resolutions of the Richmond meeting will be strictly adhered to, and that the wealthy and respectable inhabitants will boldly oppose the authority of the State. But we hardly think that any open attempt at such rebellious conduct will be witnessed; and, if any more buildings are set fire to, the torch will be applied by some incendiary "fire the faggot" in the dark, and under the protection of a disguise. The Prince's Bay oyster district is but a small portion of the Island, and the disaffected people there will not be countenanced by the inhabitants of the other part of the Island. It must be remembered that the Quarantine is already established on a part of the Island much more thickly populated than Prince's Bay, which is, in fact, much more sparsely settled than any other part of the county. We do not think that Seguine's is at all the most suitable location for the Quarantine; but, if it must be on Staten Island at all, there can be no question that it would produce less inconvenience there than anywhere else. It is, undoubtedly, a hardship to the oystermen to have their oyster beds disturbed, and their business broken up, but their interests are not to be considered for a moment when the question lies between them and the safety of this City. The Prince's Bay people are quite right to resort to every legitimate means to prevent the location of the Quarantine in their neighborhood; but, the Commissioners having placed it there, they have no right to oppose the measure by any act of lawlessness, and their doing so will not tend to the removal of the evil. They may be full of pluck and indignation; but they will receive neither countenance nor sympathy from anybody five miles from their own farms. They must submit to the authority of the State, and any resistance will only be productive of harm to them.

Amusements.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—Miss MITFORD's play of "Rienzi" was produced here last night, under favorable circumstances, and with success. The occasion was rendered important by the reappearance of Mr. WALLACK—an artist, who, if he does not gather strength with years, certainly loses it not. In the estimation of a majority of theatre-goers of this City, he is still the admirable actor of whom we have spoken with fondness for years and years. We trust he will make many reappearances on the boards of a theatre which, by its exquisite taste and judgment, has been rendered the most delightful place of recreation in the City.

"Rienzi" has been shortened, and is therefore more agreeable now than in its original shape. It is not, however, a play of great dramatic power, but one that needs all Mr. STUART's abundant resources to make acceptable. As a historical play it has no interest to the student, for the sources whence it is drawn (GIBBON and SADE) have been set aside by more exact and less pictorial biographers. Miss MITFORD has made Rienzi a hero, which he was, and a brave man, which he was not. She has introduced some female characters, and by evoking strong parental feelings secured an overpowering denouement. The play, as a whole, is a highly respectable play; the acts short and the dialogue not absolutely tedious, except in the fourth act and the fifth. Mr. WALLACK has no opportunity of distinguishing himself; he does nothing but harangue mobs, or scold factious nobles. In the fourth act emotions of a less revolutionary character are excited, and the sympathy of the audience is at once enlisted for the Tribune. In the fifth act he rises into positive grandeur. From the beginning of this act to its close Mr. WALLACK was superb. We doubt if he has ever been seen to greater advantage. The conflict between duty to the State and duty to his own heart was depicted with a vividness that we have never seen excelled. Throughout he was most ably supported by Mrs. HOEY, who displayed more tragic power than we gave this versatile lady credit for possessing.

The other characters in the piece are not important in themselves. They were rendered well in the aggregate, Mr. SOTHERN being especially good as Angelo Colonna.

The play has been put on the stage in a perfectly beautiful manner. The scenery is the best we have ever seen at this house, and the costumes are all that money and taste can effect. "Rienzi" is really a model piece in these respects.

Mr. WALLACK was called out repeatedly during the evening. His performances never fail of exciting the old enthusiasm.

☞ The Messrs. APPLETON have purchased the lots immediately in the rear of their premises, corner of Broadway and Leonard-street, with the intention of enlarging their present store. When the addition is completed, they will have a salesroom with a width of 60 feet and a depth of 150. The rear building will be carried up before the rear wall of the present structure is removed. The estimated cost of the improvement is $15,000.

The Burdell Murder—Developments of the Second Trial.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, or BURDELL, as it is call—and the mystery of Dr. BURDELL's death, is as great as ever. But some new facts have been developed, and the tenor of the whole evidence is very favorable to the accused.

From the answers of the challenged jurors, and from the character of social conversation and newspaper comments, it is plain that public sentiment was directed against Mrs. CUNNINGHAM mainly by the following circumstances: the threats used by her towards Dr. BURDELL, the nature of her supposed relations with him, the impossibility of parties from without having access to the house, the improbability of her not having heard the shrieks and the death-struggle, and the feelings of hatred and apprehension towards her expressed by him.

The last—his feelings of dislike and distrust—rested mainly on the remarks imputed to him by several witnesses, who also spoke of his having prepared and exhibited his will. These were not introduced at the late trial, probably for two reasons first, because the admissibility of his declarations in her absence was of doubtful legality; secondly, because it was well understood that the defence was prepared with facts and testimony that would have prostrated the credit of these witnesses and caused their introduction to recoil on the prosecution.

The belief that she must have heard the noise of the attack and struggle, was really of no force, except on the hypothesis that her daughters and ECKEL (if not SNODGRASS) were privy to it. Yet (monstrous as this is) such belief has been probably more effective than all other circumstances in leading the minds of most persons to a conviction of her complicity. How could such a thing have happened in her own house and she not have heard it? was the inquiry of almost every one. It was shown on the trial that noises could not be heard from one story in another in a house just like this, that the people in the next house did hear the cries of "murder" and "help" made by those who were trying experiments, for the purpose of testing the transmission of sounds, but these same persons, though awake on the night of the murder, heard nothing then. The defence also offered to show that the loudest shouting, in the room of the homicide, with its doors closed, could not be heard either in the street or in the upper chamber where Mrs. C. and her daughters slept. This was excluded by the Court as superfluous. So this ground for suspecting the accused is entirely removed. It was also conclusively shown that the house could be entered with the greatest facility, from either the rear, or through the front door with its unreliable lock.

Very little light has been thrown upon the true character of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM'S relations with Dr. BURDELL. The question of her marriage was not raised. This is a most important consideration. If that marriage had been feigned, there would have been an overwhelming motive for the crime. Why should it have been fabricated unless with a view to profit by his death? The inference would be irresistible, that such was its object. But the prosecution did not venture on assailing its genuineness. This was not seriously controverted, except in the invective of the District-Attorney—certainly not by logic or testimony.

But there was a mystery connected with it—and with their business relations. A woman who consents to a secret marriage places herself in a dangerous and suspicious position, and the unfavorable aspect of this part of the case was deepened by the character of their dealings as landlord and tenant, and debtor and creditor. These are still uncleared and unexplained.

The threats of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM would have been of importance if the evidence of them had been credited. Those made in the presence of the Police-officers, at the time of the difficulty about the note, were previous to the marriage, and were made under the excitement induced by a false accusation. Those testified to by the two servant-women made little impression on the Jury or the audience, especially when the most important of them did not occur to "HANNAH, the cook," at the time of the inquest, nor until after an interview with "Deputy JOHN," a few days before the trial.

The smell of burning woolen and leather was shown to have no connection with the accused, nor with the house. The light in the chamber in the attic rested on the vague testimony of Dr. PARMLY. In view of this, and of the position of this room, with its door next to the open closet, where the servants slept, and with a fan-light over the door connecting it with the closet, no one who knew the facts probably attached the least importance to this point.

If anything unfavorable to the accused could have been deduced from the witnesses as to the purchase of a dagger, or the examination of a sword-cane, they would certainly have been brought forward, as they were all resident in the City.

There was really no ground for suspicion even against the accused, upon the evidence, except that arising from her being an inmate of the house where the homicide was committed, and from the imputed threats, in connection with her peculiar relation to him. Not one physical fact connected with the homicide tended to inculpate her.

On the other hand, it appeared that while there were traces of blood from the chamber of death to the outer door, there were none to the upper rooms, where lived the accused and her family. No weapon was found in her possession, with which the deed could have been committed. There was no spot on her garments, no scratch on her skin, no wound nor bruise of her flesh. There were no facts in proof showing arrangement, contrivance or anticipation, (except the alleged threat,) and she went to bed as usual at night, passed the room where the dead man lay stiff in his clotted gore, took her breakfast as usual, returned to her own apartments and was there with her family and with SNODGRASS in their usual occupations, and with undisturbed demeanor, when the dreadful news was communicated.

Besides, if her daughters spoke truth, she could not have been the murderess. If she was guilty, they were her accessaries then, and are perjurors now.

This is not a vindication of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM, but a plain, undistorted, uncolored statement of the facts as they really were shown on the trial. Other circumstances, appearing from a more minute examination of the mode in which Dr. BURDELL was assailed and killed, will show still more fully the propriety of the verdict acquitting her.

Dr. BURDELL was not assailed when he first entered his room. His boots were bloody, but his over-shoes were not. They had been taken off and were placed on one side of the hearth. On the other side, and between it and the window, was a sofa, on which he had deposited his cap and shawl. These had no blood nor dirt upon them.

It is plain, that after he reached his room, he lit the gas at the rear window, laid aside his outer garments and shoes, unlocked his secretary, took out his bank book and portfolio, placed his keys on the secretary, carried the portfolio to the desk under the gas light, and there opened it, returned to the secretary, sat down in a chair in front of it; and while in that chair was struck the first blow on the right side of his neck, and probably by a person from behind, or standing over him. The room was about twenty feet deep. The secretary stood about half way between its rear and the closets, separating it from the front room, and against the wall, between it and the hall. There is no place of concealment in the room, and it is difficult to conceive how a person could have approached him from the closets, without being perceived. Be this as it may, it is evident that, after receiving this blow, the Doctor struggled towards the door leading to the hall. This is very near one of the closets, and there is not more than eighteen inches betwee its edge and the wall of the closet. Into this corner he was thrust, while the dagger was plied. After the first blow failed to be immediately fatal, it would appear that he was seized by the neck-cloth in front, and partially choked. Probably the assassin held him by thus intercepting his right arm, and forcing him past the door. While Dr. BURDELL was yet erect and crowded into the corner, he received the disabling blow on the left side of his neck, severing the carotid artery. He then was thrust back, and as he was sinking he received two more mortal wounds in his heart. He was found where he had fallen, though it is probable, as suggested by Judge DAVIES in his charge, that he was drawn back a few inches so as to allow the door to open. The straightened position of his limbs would seem to indicate that this was done.

After the deed of death was wrought, the murderer went down stairs, his bloody garments or hands leaving their stains upon the wall. He passed down the basement stairs, returned to the main hall, went to the front door, and on the casing and outside of this, dried blood was found in the morning. The snow and rain which fell in the interval obliterated all further traces, if there had been any.

Who was this murderer, and how did he approach his victim?

Could we learn where Dr. BURDELL spent his previous evening, we would gain a better ground for seeing and judging. But this is kept a secret, and the closely-guarded concealment of so important a fact is a most pregnant circumstance. In this direction lies the solution of this mystery of iniquity. Conscious guilt is involved in this silence.

The key to Dr. BURDELL's chamber, contrary to his usual custom, was left in the lock on the outside of the door. It was difficult to approach him stealthily in his lighted room, for he apparently had taken out his papers for the purposes of business. In view of the facts, it appears to me that the murderer was one who accompanied him to his room, whose presence there gave him no alarm, with whom he was transacting busines, and who, standing by his chair as he sat in it in front of the secretary, suddenly struck the first blow, and grasped him by the throat, when he failed to fall at once; who possibly seized and appropriated money and papers (none were found on the Doctor's person), and who then groped his way through the darkened hall to the outer door, and thus escaped. The nature of the wounds and the character of the struggle, tend to show that the assassin must have been a man of powerful frame, and probably of taller stature than the victim; and there are strong reasons for supposing that he knew well where lay the great arteries, and how to reach the vital organs.

These are fair inferences from the facts, and they furnish the only theory consistent with what is indisputably proven. LEX.

The Burdell Murder—Some Curious Points in the Case.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

At the risk of fatiguing public attention with this extraordinary affair, I venture to point out two or three rather singular features connected with the proceedings in regard to it.

1. Coroner CONNERY, as the world knows, took the matter into his own hands at once. His first act was to send his son-in-law, a Mr. SHEEHAN, to act as counsel for Mrs. CUNNINGHAM. The offer of his services was respectfully declined.

2. The Coroner's next step was to commit the medical part of the inquest to Dr. KNIGHT, another son-in-law: and his first act was to take away the stomach of the murdered man, and thus prevent any examination of its contents. Any competent chemist and physician will tell you that a careful test of the extent to which digestion had proceeded upon the contents of the stomach, would have fixed the time of the Doctor's death within half an hour at the outside. But this evidence was destroyed by the Coroner's son-in-law.

3. Next came the appointment by the Coroner of his son JOHN, to be Clerk, Assistant Coroner, and general superintendent of the whole proceeding,—with what design can only be inferred from the results.

4. And finally the Coroner's brother-in-law was called in to officiate as Undertaker, and the result of this was seen not long since in the presentation of a bill for over $600 against the Doctor's Estate for the expenses of his funeral.

While the Coroner was thus busy in developing his "theory" of the murder against the CUNNINGHAM family, he was equally busy in directing his practice with a view to the profit of his own.

5. It will be noted that not one syllable of evidence was offered on the trial to establish the time at which the murder was committed. At the inquest every possible effort was made to show that it was done at, or after, 11 o'clock. My own opinion is that it was perpetrated not later than 9 o'clock,—and probably while part of the family were out of the house and the remainder were in the basement.

6. I believe a large part of the testimony on this point, as on several others, was fabricated by persons cognizant of the Doctor's whereabouts that evening, one of whom may have accompanied him to his room, engaged in the settlement of business disputes, became angry and, perhaps, in a phrensy of passion, committed the homicide. And I think it altogether likely that the discovery or suspicion of this fact, was what prevented the prosecution from putting these witnesses upon the stand.

7. We shall never know anything more of this murder, until we know where the Doctor went that night after dinner. And we shall never know that, until it is made the interest of somebody who knows to tell.

From all this I draw two practical inferences:—first, that Governor KING ought to remove the Coroner from office, and second, that he, or the Mayor, or both, ought to offer a large reward for useful information touching this startling and revolting crime. Yours, JUROR.

The Trial of Mrs. Cunningham.

To the Editor of the Herald:

A day or two previous to the opening of the Cunningham case, Judge CAPRON informed me that it was the intention and determination of the District-Attorney to effect the acquittal of Mrs. C. and ECKEL. On my observing that such a statement required proof, he said that he did not desire to give his reasons for the assertion, but that his knowledge of HALL'S conduct had entirely removed any interest he might feel in the progress of this trial O. P. Q.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: The above statement, published in this morning's Herald, has been called to my notice. It does me manifest injustice, as being in its most essential particulars an erroneous statement and calculated to induce the public to draw unjust inferences as to the real facts of the case. The foundation of the statement I have no doubt is a remark of mine made casually to a person who represented himself subsequent to a conversation between us as one of the editors or reporters of the Herald. The person met me in the street. Among other subjects talked upon was the Burdell murder and the trial of Mrs. CUNNINGHAM. The conversation I am quite positive was during the progress of the trial and not "a day or two previous," as alleged. I told this editor or reporter that I deemed it surprising that certain evidence had not been laid before the Jury which I considered as rational and competent, and that the Jury ought to have the whole case before them. I made no such statement that "it was the intention and determination of the District-Attorney to effect the acquittal of Mrs. C. and ECKEL." It is possible that I said that it appeared as though the District-Attorney did not wish to convict Mrs. CUNNINGHAM. It is certain that in the remarks I made I intended to cast no imputation on Mr. HALL, the District-Attorney, in that matter. Respectfully, yours, &c.

E. S. CAPRON.

The Prohibitionist Party and the New Excise Law—Letter from Judge Capron.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Allow me to recall your attention, for a few moments, to your strictures, published a few days ago, on the action taken by the "Executive Committee of the New-York State Temperance Society," in regard to the new statute, entitled: "An Act to Suppress Intemperance, and to regulate the sale of Intoxicating Liquors."

I always derive pleasure and often much instruction from the perusal of the editorials in the TIMES, but I read the several articles to which I now refer with peculiar interest. It is not, I presume, unknown to you that I have been, for many years, devotedly identified with the cause of Temperance. I have long believed that the individual and social welfare of my fellow-citizens, and even the perpetuity of our Republican Institutions, depends, most essentially, upon the success of that great cause.

In the articles to which I solicit your attention, you did not hesitate to impeach the wisdom of the Committee, and even to impugn their motives I have waited since the publication of those articles for a statement of the grounds on which you predicate your censure, but as you may not intend to lay them before your readers, and as neither the cause of Temperance nor its friends should be prejudiced before the public unheard, I respectfully solicit the privilege of making a few suggestions through the medium of the TIMES in their defence. By the term temperance I mean prohibition; for the latter is the only sure guarantee of the former.

Now, Sir, is it palpably certain that you are right and that the Committee is wrong, in respect to the duty of Prohibitionists in the present crisis? Is it clear that they should expend their money and employ their time in efforts to enforce obedience to the new license law? You insist that they should; but after considerable reflection on the question, I am compelled to differ from you in opinion. The experience of the long past, as well as the physical and moral nature of man, proclaims with terrible emphasis, that, as reformatory or preventive agencies in the work of redeeming our country from the thraldom of drunkenness, license statutes are but mere delusions. For all the purposes of success in that cause, the most rigid enforcement of such statutes must always be as puerile as would be the attempt to reduce Gibraltar with a battery of pop guns. Prohibitionists are practical men; they aim at substantial results While they admit that every citizen should aid in the enforcement of law, they deny that duty requires of them especial action in vindication of one which sanctions immorality and crime, by legalizing a traffic that largely increases both. Such is the new license law. It contains within itself the elements which render it powerless for good. Let us examine it, and that we may the more clearly appreciate its weakness, let us assume that it is strictly obeyed; that no necessity arises for an appeal to the law to enforce its observance. On this hypothesis, the Commissioners are presumed to grant licenses with commendable caution, and sales of intoxicating beverages are, it is also understood, made only by licensed vendors.

In the light in which we are now considering the subject, on whom do the preventive provisions of the law operate? Not on the temperate; not on the sober. These may indulge in the pleasures of the wine-cup as often as they please. To these, the licensed vendor may sell his intoxicating draughts with impunity, and his interest will not deter him from cheerfully supplying all their wants. At his inn, tavern, or hotel, these may meet their convivial companions and enjoy the social glass, from time to time, until they have acquired the appetite for intoxicating drink, which in the end, "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." When they have become "drunkards," or "habitual drinkers," but not before, the preventive virtues of the statute operate. Yes, when the once temperate and sober citizen has been ruined, "according to the statute in such case made and provided," the vendor licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, "according to law," must desist, until his victim has reformed, if such an event should sometimes occur, and then the rights and privileges of both revive, and the same scene may be reënacted. Here is the fundamental defect in the license system. While it secures to the citizen, by law, facilities to become intemperate, as favorable as free sale could present, it offers no preventive of that destructive evil until it is too late.

I know that it is a popular idea that a well-regulated license law will largely diminish the number of dram shops, and correspondingly circumscribe the evils of intemperance. If we admit the correctness of the first branch of this proposition, it by no means follows that the last is sound. If the number of places in which intoxicating liquors may be sold to be drank on the premises, and the number in which they may be sold in quantities less than five gallons, not to be drank on the premises, be reduced to one-quarter of the present number of those places, who shall say that a less quantity of liquor will be drank in the one-quarter, than that which was before drank in the larger number? Does not community contain the same number of drinkers? And will not all those drinkers find the places, either inns, hotels, or groceries, in which the liquors are sold? It is frequently said that a stringent license law will necessarily close up all the low tippling-houses, and thus destroy the resorts of large multitudes of poor people, who obtain their liquor at those resorts. I believe, Sir, that man is the same animal to day that he has been in all previous time, having the same instincts and the same sympathies, and that in trade, he will conform his mode and place of business to his interests. The idea that, by the operation of any law, a large class of citizens will be deprived of the opportunity to drink ardent spirits, because they are poor, is simply preposterous. Those who look to the present or any other license law for such an effect, are doomed to suck their fingers in disappointment. That class of our fellow-citizens creates a large demand for many of the articles of lawful commerce, and ardent spirits, being one of those articles, will find a market-place under the forms of law, for that class. The men, pronounced by the Commissioners worthy and competent to sell intoxicating liquors, will find that market and supply it. Such is the inevitable law of trade.

The foregoing are some of the reasons which induced the Executive Committee of the "New-York State Temperance Society" to advise the friends of Total Prohibition, in the series of resolutions which are the subject of your animadversion, to reject the License Law as a substitute for their principle, and to make no special efforts to enforce its provisions. Could the Committee have consistently done otherwise? I think not. It is clear that the principal effect of the present law, if implicitly observed, or rigidly enforced, will be the reduction of the number of places in which intoxicating liquors will be sold, while, from the principle involved in it of legalizing the sale and applying its prohibitory force to the localities in which sales may be made, and not to the quantity and purpose of sale, except in the limit of five gallons at a time, that law will have no important influence to check the numerous evils which originate in the traffic.

It is sometimes quaintly suggested that, as this statute is partially prohibitory, consistency demands of Prohibitionists its faithful enforcement as an experiment. That suggestion is plausible, and many persons may, without reflection on the subject, deem it sensible. But have not license statutes been tested as experiments, for more than two hundred years, in this country? And has not the same syren's song—"Try it—try it"—been as long sung by those who would beguile the friends of temperance, and delay their action? Is not almost every law partially prohibitory? Does not every law prohibit that which it does not permit to be done? The truth is, this cant phrase is wholly illusory in its application to this law. The statute is not prohibitory in any practical sense as a preventive or reformatory agent; but in those respects only is any law on this subject deemed valuable by Prohibitionists. An important fact may be stated in this connection in further justification of the Executive Committee. It has been very satisfactorily ascertained that the aggregate of intoxicating liquors sold as a beverage in the cities as well as the towns and villages of this State when the former license law was in force, was as great, in the same length of time, as that sold during the portion of the year in which the Prohibitory law was a nullity, and the Stats was practically without any law on the subject. It is true, also, that the Prohibitory law was effectual in all the country towns and villages to banish intemperance and rum-shops very generally before it was declared unconstitutional, and that immediately after that decision these evils, in those localities, assumed their former scale. This was also, in an important degree, true of the cities; in New York the number of dram-shops, very soon after that event, received an addition of about seven hundred.

The provisions which particularly appeal to Prohibitionists are the two designed for the protection of the Sabbath and election days, and those will undoubtedly receive their support.

Now Sir, with these destructive elements existing in the new license law, elements at open war with the vital principle of prohibition, and operating to defeat the very object which it was enacted to subserve, and with the foregoing practical facts appearing on their records, can Prohibitionists consistently make organized or individual efforts to enforce that law? What is it as a measure of political economy, but a system to raise funds for the support of paupers, by selling for money the privilege to make paupers?

Wherefore "spend money for that which is not bread, and labor for that which satisfieth not?"

Very respectfully yours,
E. S. CAPRON, No. 115 Nassau-street.

NATIONAL HOTEL DISEASE.—Mr. BRIGGS, of the National Hotel, has called and requested us to correct a statement in our article of Saturday evening touching the fatal disease. We observfully do so. He says that no rats were found in the tanks—that the one on the ground-floor was made of granite, and the other, on the roof, was closed by a spring-door. The water was pumped from the lower to the upper one, which he visited twice or three times daily, and can vouch as to the impossibility of rats getting into either. The assertion made in distant papers that the disease made its first appearance when Mr. BUCHANAN came, Mr. BRIGGS states to be untrue. Cases as early, he thinks, as the 8th of January, were noted. The hot weather of February succeeding, the house was kept cool; and no cases presented themselves. In March the weather changed, and it became necessary to close windows and doors, and light fires; which being done, the disease commenced with the fury which has made it so lamentably notorious.—The States.

JOHN MONROE & CO.,
AMERICAN BANKERS,
No. 5 Rue de la Paix, Pa

NEW-YORK CITY.

New Buildings.

There is probably more building going on in New-York now than ever at any time before, and the three-score-and-ten architects who plan for the City, from the most famous to the least known, all have plenty to do. In nearly all the down-town streets, costly warehouses are being constructed, while residences of the first class are building up-town without number. Besides this "legitimate" work, or work done by order, speculators are building a great many houses in the upper Wards. We give a list of some of the more prominent on which work is already or soon will be commenced.

A new church is to be built for Dr. SPRING'e congregation on the corner of Fifth-avenue and Thirty-seventh-street. It is to be of the Corinthian order, 134 feet deep, and to have a front of 77 feet. Adjoining will be a session-room. The material is to be brick. A spire, about 200 feet high, will surmount the Fifth-avenue front.

There have been several designs offered for this new Catholic Cathedral on Fifth-avenue, near the Central Park. It is said that the plan of Mr. Lockwood, of Newark, (the artist who painted "The Last Judgment,") has been adopted. He proposes "the perpendicular Gothic" style; the building to be of brown stone, all its pinnacles and exterior ornaments of cast iron, and to have two cast iron spires 320 feet high. The inside will be finished throughout with a white stone, the ceiling to be fluted and the roof to be a wooden one. The building will cover the whole block and have a front of 150 feet. It will be commenced probably during the coming Summer.

The building Nos. 561 and 563 Broadway, lately occupied by HAUGHWOUT & Co., is coming down. On its site GEORGE CHRISTY & WOON are to build a very neat marble-front theatre, 50 by 130 feet. The architecture will be in the Italian style. It will have two tiers of galleries and the whole to be elegantly ornamented. The height from parquet to ceiling will be 55 feet, and the stage 35 feet deep.

On the present site of their building in Chambers-street, the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank will erect an elegant iron banking house. It will cost about $40,000 and be painted in imitation of Caen stone. The upper floors are to be used as warehouses.

A bank will be erected on lots Nos. 96 and 98 Broadway, between Wall and Pine streets, to be called the Astor Bank, after its owner, Mr. WILLIAM B. ASTOR. It will be 40 by 100 feet, four stories high, fire-proof, and have an ornamental marble front. It is to be built very strongly, and will be commenced on the 1st of May.

The Union Mutual Insurance Company will put up a building for their use on lots Nos. 61 and 63 William-street, corner of Cedar. It will have a brown-stone front of 68 feet 4 inches on William-street, and a depth of 46 feet 7½ inches.

The work of rebuilding Tompkine Market will shortly be commenced. Its dimensions will be 181 feet 9 inches by 100 feet; it will be three stories in height, and the two upper stories will be used as an armory and drill room for the Seventh Regiment.

An addition is making to the Astor Library of 65 feet, making the front of the whole building 130 feet, and its depth 105 feet. The exterior of the addition will be in the Italian style, matching the old building, but the interior of it will far surpass the old in beauty, and be in the Corinthian style, highly ornamented.

On the corner of Twenty-eighth-street and Ninth-avenue, in the Twentieth Ward, a very large public school building is to be put up. It will be four stories, and have all the modern improvements. The lot is 125 feet front, and the school will be 103 feet.

Mr. AMOS ENO is to build on the ground formerly occupied by the Hippodrome of the the largest hotels in New-York; its dimensions 200 by 204 feet, its front and sides of white marble, and six stories in height.

Mr. S. HALSTEN is putting up a hotel on the corner of Twenty-first-street and Broadway. It is of brick, with brown stone trimmings; to be 48 feet on Broadway and 82 feet on Twenty-first-street. The first story and cellar will be occupied as a store. The cost will be about $35,000.

The old Columbia College building is being torn down, and on that portion of the ground at the corner of Park and College places, Mr. THOMAS HUNT will erect one of the largest stores in the City, of white marble, five stories and basement, 75 feet square, with Corinthian colonnades, and cornices with pediments, on both streets. It will cost about $85,000.

Mr. THOMAS SLOCOMB will also build on the College grounds, commencing 75 feet from Church-street, two marble 50 feet stores. The Corinthian style will be adopted,—the windows to have panel pilasters and trusses, with modillion cornices. The stores will cost about $80,000.

Mr. STOEVOKEN is putting up a store of brick with white marble trimmings, five stories and basement, at No. 94 Warren-street.

In this street there are a number of first-class brown stone and marble front stores erecting.

In College-place, directly opposite the old College grounds, a large white marble front building 25 by 75, and five stories high, will shortly be erected for stores

In Chambers-street, Mr. CAREY has had erected a fine store, running through to Reade-street. Its height is five stories, surmounted by a pediment on each street, with a basement and sub-cellar; its depth is 150 feet, and width 50 feet. Iron, in imitation of rusticated stone, is the material used for its fronts—the style is Corinthian. Its cost will be $100,000.

At No. 77 Chambers-street—lot 25 by 75 feet—another iron building will be erected.

Mr. JOHN J. PHELPS, the purchaser of the Tabernacle property, intends to erect a five-story warehouse, with a front of white marble, highly ornamented. Its dimensions will be 70 feet on Broadway, and 200 feet on Catharine-lane.

Judge ROOSEVELT is to build on the lot No. 12 Park-place, 23 feet front by 75 feet deep, a large marble store, to cost some $25,000.

At No. 51 Exchange-place, Messrs. E. A. & G. H. WITTHAUS intend to put up a marble building, 25 by 100 feet, five stories high, in the Roman style, to be occupied as offices for lawyers and others. It will cost about $45,000.

On lot No. 40 Barclay-street, 25 by 100, Mr. C. WALKER intends to build a dry goods store, with marble front, five stories high, and to cost about $20,000.

There is but one store erecting in the Bowery, but in the Bowery extension there are several fine buildings going up. One block of eight stores, brick and brown stone trimmings, is nearly completed.

In Thirty-fifth-street, near Fifth-avenue, and in Lexington-avenue, near Thirty-ninth-street, in the vicinity of Fifth and Madison avenues, a great many neat English basement residences from 14 to 18 feet front, and costing from $6,000 to $9,000, are being put up on speculation for sale.

On the northwest corner of Broadway and Twenty-fifth-street, Mr. ISAAC TOWNSEND is building an addition to his house, of brick with white marble trimmings.

Two fine private residences, Nos. 1,016 and 1,014 Broadway, near Twenty-eighth-street, four stories high, are being erected for Mr. RICHARD F. CARMAN.

On the corner of Twenty-first-street and Broadway, Mr. SAMUEL NICHOLSON is building two brick dwellings with stores on the first floor; both four stories and basement.

Mr. WILLIAM WINSLOW is erecting two first-class brown stone-front houses in Twenty-eighth-street, between Sixth-avenue and Broadway.

In Fifteenth-street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, Mr. CHARLES WHITE is having a first-class brown-stone residence erected.

In Second-avenue, near Twenty-first-street, Messrs. HAINES Brothers are having constructed two first-class brick residences, with brown stone dressings.

In Thirty-fourth-street, near Tenth-avenue, Mr. NOAH H. JONES is building a brick dwelling-house, with a brown-stone English basement. There are several other fine houses going up in the vicinity.

Mr. ABEL MAYNARD is putting up a private residence, four stories high, in Thirty-fourth-street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

Mr. LANGSTAFF N. CROW is erecting a four-story residence in the same street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues.

They are erecting a row of cheap tenant houses, which run through from Houston to First street, the lower part to be occupied as stores.

Mechanics' Institute—Tanning.

A regular meeting of the Mechanics' Institute was held on Wednesday evening at the rooms, No. 12 Fourth-avenue, Prof. MAPES in the Chair.

After the minutes were read, the subject of Tanning was called up for discussion by the Chair, after which he announced a new centrifugal apparatus by which he had been enabled to force the tannic acid through every part of the raw hide by means of centrifugal force exhibited in a rapidly revolving perforated cylinder resembling the sugar machines.

By the prevailing modes it requires about seventy days to tan completely the average of raw hides, while by the improved process Prof. MAPES said that he had succeeded in tanning a calf skin thoroughly in less than fifteen minutes. The process he used was to place the hide around the inside of the cylinder, and holding it there by means of the centrifugal force resulting from a very high velocity, and then passing a stream of tan liquor into the centre, which was then carried by the centrifugal force against the hide, and passed through under the intense pressure, after which it escaped through the perforated cylinder into a surrounding vat, and was returned to perform the same journey over again until the tannic acid was exhausted.

It was stated that the process of tanning was almost instantaneous when the minutest particles of albumen, gelatine and fibrin were brought in contact with the tannin liquor. Mr. SCHULTZ stated that he had experimented with the hydrostatic column in the tanning of calf skins, and found that the process produced the most positive results, the raw hide being thoroughly tanned in about 15 minutes—the hight of column being about 25 feet.

Mr. SCHULTZ also stated that the process of decomposition usually commenced in the raw hide immediately after being sweated and placed in the tan liquor, and that often in the months of July and August this process went on so rapidly that the entire interior of the hides would become a putrid pulpy mass like soap or pus, which could be readily removed by cutting through the thin tanned surfaces, thus making a sack of the hide and destroying its commercial value. The new process would reduce the entire time required in working hides from seventy to about fifteen days, with the positive certainty that the process of decomposition would be checked before any serious injury could accrue.

The conversation was frequently interrupted by questions calling for specific information. In answer to one as to the cause of the increase of weight in the tanned leather over the raw hide, the ons being about double the weight of the other in certain instances, Prof. MAPES stated that it was due to the absorption of the extractive matter of the taobark, and was not due to the action of the tannic acid, which was the only tanning agent—the extractive matter having no such property.

Some very interesting facts were given about the peculiar form of the texture of the skins of different animals, and about the uses of tannic acid in the processes of vegetation. It was stated that the flavor of the strawberry existed only in the outer skin or back of the fruit, and that tannic acid was the principal agent necessary to produce flavor in all kinds of fruit.

There were several ladies present in the reading-room and in the debating room.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE EXCELSIOR.—The procession and addresses, &c., which were to have signalized the removal of Columbia College from Park-place to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, are not to come off after all. The students did not like the idea of marching through the streets all the way to Fiftieth-street; and there were disagreements on other points, so that the faculty gave over their previously formed Mr. WEEKS, the Janitor, was busy moving all last week, and to-day the College resumed its session at its new quarters, the former Deaf and Dumb Institution in forty ninth-street, between third and fourth avenues. The wings of the old structure have been disconnected from the main edifice, and are to be used for the residence of professors. The front portion of the centre building is likewise to be occupied by professors and their families. The rest is construed into recitation rooms, chapel, library, astronomical and chemical rooms. The repairs and alterations are not all fully completed yet. The college bell remains unswung and hangs suspended on a skeleton frame in the front yard. A good many old desks and chairs are scattered about, and the paint smells very fresh. It is expected that by the end of the week everything and everybody will be in the place. Bishop POTTER officiates at the opening exercises in the chapel this morning, assisted by President KING. A chaplain has been engaged to conduct the exercises and prayers hereafter instead of the President—quite an innovation upon former customs. The present number of students is about 150. Four new professors are shortly to be appointed. The Fifth avenue omnibuses will run hereafter up to the college, and the Harlem cars have promised also to stop at forty-ninth-street and accommodate students in getting to and from the College.

THE ALLEGED SLAVER MERCHANT.—The examination of the parties found by the United States Marshal on board the schooner Merchant, when she was detained on suspicion of having been fitted out for the slave-trade, was continued yesterday, before United States Commissioner MORTON. Two witnesses were examined.

Captain LAFAYETTE TOMPKINS, of the steamer Satellite, testified to the manner of the capture as before given. When the schooner was just outside of Sandy Hook, he saw something thrown overboard, but could not tell what it was.

A. D. STANFORD, also on the Satellite, testified to having seen something thrown overboard from the Merchant, which he thought was either raw cotton or papers. He said the Captain of the Birkbeck told him that he making for the brig was a mere ruse or sham; and the captain of the tug told him he had been engaged to put "the foreigners" on board the Merchant that morning. A further hearing was postponed to Wednesday.

ARREST ON A CHARGE OF MURDER.—On the 17th of October, 1854, a man named ARCHIBALD IRVIN was killed during a fight in Jefferson-square, by a blow on the head with a cart-rung. An inquisition was had by Coroner O'DONNELL, and a verdict rendered that IRVIN came to his death by violence at the hands of HUGH DARRAGH. A warrant was issued for the arrest of the accused party, but he eluded the officers and fled to Canada, where he has remained until recently, when he returned to this City. Notice of his return was given to the police, and yesterday morning, about 2 o'clock, Officers ROACH and MCDERMOTT, of the Sixteenth Ward, arrested DARRAGH, whom they found at a place of resort in their District. He was committed to await further action.

THE STUYVESANT PEAR TREE.—The Stuyvesant Pear Tree, corner of Thirteenth-street and Third-avenue, is white with blossoms. The Knickerbockers should make a pilgrimage to see the fine old relic in its glory.

☞ We learn that the Fifth-avenue Baptist Church, Rev. S. A. COREY, pastor, which has been laboring under pecuniary embarrassments since its completion, is now in a fair way of being relieved.

☞ The Hudson River boats brought down, during the last 48 hours, 15,000 barrels of Flour, and 41,000 bushels of Wheat.

Board of Supervisors.

The Supervisors met yesterday afternoon, Supervisor CLANCY in the chair. There was no business of importance before the Board, with the exception of the following COMMUNICATION FROM THE MAYOR.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, May 11, 1857.

TO THE HONORABLE THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS:

Gentlemen—I beg to call your attention to an act passed by the Legislature April 15, 1857, relating to the Board of Supervisors of the City of New-York.

By the provisions of this law, the Mayor and Recorder have ceased to be members of the Board, the former assuming the same relation to its proceedings as he bears to the proceedings of the Common Council.

Deeming it necessary that the Board shall organize and assume its duties under this law, I hereby tender my resignation as Chairman, and now withdraw from the Board.

Returning my thanks for the courtesy and kindness extended to me, and desiring that the Supervisors will continue vigilant and industrious in the discharge of the important trusts devolving upon them, I am sincerely their well-wisher, FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

The communication was accepted and ordered on file, and the Board adjourned till Monday afternoon.

Coroners' Inquests.

FATAL FALL FROM A SCAFFOLD.

A German laborer named SCHOP, aged 38 years, was killed about 7 o'clock yesterday morning by falling from the scaffolding of a new building in Essex-street between Stanton and Rivington streets. He had just ascended and emptied his hod, which he was about raising to his shoulder when he fell to the sidewalk and was instantly killed. Coroner CONNERY held an inquest upon the body at the Seventeenth Ward Station house. The Jury rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts.

DEATH FROM INTEMPERANCE.

MARY COOPER, aged 35 years, a native of Ireland, died very suddenly on Sunday evening, at her boarding house, No. 160 Worth-street. An inquest upon the body was made by Coroner CONNERY. A medical examination was made by Dr. WELTJE, who expressed the opinion that deceased died of congestion of the brain, from intemperance. The Jury so found.

ANOTHER BODY FOUND IN THE RIVER.—Another body, that of a man about 5 feet 5 inches high, with black hair, large whiskers, was found yesterday morning in the river at the foot of Dey-street. Coroner Connery held an inquest upon it. It was not identified. Verdict: "That the said unknown man came to his death by being drowned, but from what cause the Jury cannot say." The body appeared to have been in the water about two months.

Fires.

IN JAMES-STREET.—A fire broke out in and destroyed the stable rear of No. 64 James-street, about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. It was owned by a Mrs. JOHNSON. Four horses were suffocated to death. One of them belonged to Mrs. MCLAUGHLIN, one to TIMOTHY RYAN, one to Mr. DWYER, and one to Mr. GRAHAM. They were valued at $100 each. A young man named HENRY FOLLIE, who slept in the stable, was not awakened until his clothing had taken fire, and he was so badly burned that his recovery is considered doubtful.

IN READE STREET.—The cooper's shop of S. ROBERTS, No. 74 Reade-street, took fire from sparks from the chimney, about 5 o'clock yesterday morning, and before extinguished did about $100 damage to the building. Some furniture on the second floor was injured to the extent of about $100. The cooper's shop is insured for $800 in the National Insurance Company. There is no insurance on the furniture.

INCENDIARISM.—An unsuccessful attempt was made on Saturday night to destroy the building corner of Broadway and Twenty-sixth-street, occupied by JOHN EBON. A large quantity of shavings and paper was stuffed in between the 1th and plaster in the basement ceiling. No damage was done.

EVERYBODY IN RAPTURES.—Hosts of our acquaintance are in raptures with a medicine called "The Extract of Cannabis Indica," which, we are assured by an abundance of competent and reputable witnesses is a sure, speedy, and permanent cure for consumption, coughs, cold, bronchitis, asthma, pleurisy, nervousness, and general debility. This highly-prized medical preparation was discovered many years ago, in Calcutta, by Dr. H. JAMES, a London practitioner, who had taken his only child,—a daughter—there with him, hoping that the climate would prolong her life. She was pronounced an incurable case of consumption. He had heard much of the wonderful restorative and healing qualities of preparations made from the East India Hemp, and the thought occurred to him that he might make a remedy for his child. He studied hard, and succeeded in realizing his wishes. His child was cured, and is now well. He has since administered the wonderful remedy to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the world, and he has never failed in making them completely healthy and happy. He is now an aged man, and long since retired from practice; but he thinks it his duty to confer the grand benefit he holds upon his sick fellow-beings; and he therefore supplies it to all who apply for it. His charge is $2 a bottle; but if you cannot pay that, he will send you full instructions for making and successfully using the Extract. To get these instructions, you have only to inclose four postage stamps to the address "Dr H JAMES No. 19 Grand-street, Jersey City, N J" Try this famous medicine. THE DESTINY OF NATIONS MIGHT HAVE BEEN CHANGED BY BRANDRETH'S PILLS.—If Gen. WALKER'S soldiers had used BRANDRETH'S PILLS his army would not have disappeared beneath yellow Panama and putrid fevers. The ravages of cholera and dysentery would have been stayed, and the lives of two thousand soldiers saved. These would have sufficed to have conquered his enemies, and "manifest destiny" would have advanced one more step on the sure basis of victorious possession. BRANDRETH'S PILLS are as important to Southern filibusters as powder and ball. With the one they can destroy their foes; with the other, conquer tropical climates. ☞ There was a fire in a dwelling at the corner of Lorimer and Meserole streets, E. D of Brooklyn, about 10 o'clock Sunday evening. It was extinguished without much damage. Engine Companies Nos 6 and 9, for the want of any more legitimate excitement, pitched into each other, and had a very nice fight. 9's boys threatened subsequently to sack the house of No. 6, but the Police interfering kept the peace. The Chief Engineer reported the conduct of these companies to the Common Council last evening.

KINGS COUNTY LIQUOR DEALERS' ASSOCIATION.—An adjourned meeting of this Association was held last evening in People's Hall, Brooklyn.

REPORT OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER.—Mr. SAMUEL A. FRENCH, the Chief Engineer of the Jersey City Fire Department, reports that during the year ending May 1st inst. there were twenty-two fires, and the loss is estimated at $520—which is about the same as during the preceding year. There were seventy-five false alarms—the most of which would be prevented by a fire-alarm bell, which would have an expense of about $700 per annum in repairing fire apparatus injured in this manner. The Department is 390 strong.

Medical News.

The annual meeting of the Kings County Medical Society was held at the Brooklyn Institute yesterday, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—SAMUEL BOYD.
Vice President—C. L. MITCHELL.
Secretary—A. LITTLE.
Treasurer—A. OTTERSON.
Censors—H. I. Cullen, John B. Ball, T. L. Mason, H. S. Smith, Ulrich Palmedo, F. R. Wade.

The first meeting of the Brooklyn Board of Health for this year was held on Wednesday. There were present—Aldermen WALSH, PRESTON, FITHIAN, SCHOLES and CLARKE. In the absence of the Mayor Alderman WALSH was called to preside. It was received that the Board meet every Wednesday, at 4 P. M., until the 1st of June, in the office of the Health Officer. The following Health Wardens were appointed: For the Third Police District, LEONARD HOFF; for the Fourth Police District, GEORGE WARNY; for the Fifth Police District, JAS. W. BROWN; for the Sixth Police District, HENRY BOICE. The appointments for the other districts were laid on the table for one week.

Dr. JOHN V. LANSING has been appointed Resident Physician at the Kings County Lunatic Asylum, vice Dr. BAILEY, removed.

Dr. INGRAHAM has resigned his position as Consulting Physician to the Kings County Hospital, with the intention of visiting Europe.

From a medical monthly (which copies our report of the proceedings of the Academy of Medicine, honorably crediting it to "a daily journal") we extract the following prescription—translating it into English—of which Dr. HORACE GREEN says: "we are accustomed, while traveling in summer, always to take a small vial of it with us; as this medicine is quite sure to arrest, in children or adults, the intestinal irritation which in the warm season is so liable to follow a change of diet and the drinking of a different and perhaps a harder kind of water than that to which we had been accustomed:

Tincture of camphor, an ounce and a half; tincture of capsicum, half an ounce; compound spirits of lavender, one ounce and laudanum, one ounce.

Mix, and take from 20 to 40 drops at a dose, (for an adult) according to circumstances, several times a day if necessary.

At the last meeting of the Medical Society of London, says the London Lancet of March 7, Dr. SNOW showed a specimen of amyleue which had a less powerful and more agreeable odor than that which he showed to the Society on a former occasion. He said that the change had been produced by great care in its preparation on the part of Mr. BULLOCK, and that the chief obstacle to the use of this agent was in a great measure removed; and he expected that the odor would be still less when the amylene could be procured in a state of more absolute purity. He had given the amylene in 69 operations, and in one case of labor, since he read the paper on January 10, making a total of 91 cases. The results confirmed what he had stated on the former occasion, as to certain advantages it possessed over chloroform in a number of instances. A little vomiting had occurred in six of the cases; this was much less than would be met with from chloroform, more especially as many of the patients had taken a meal just before the operation.

Personal.

The Galveston Civilian thinks that Maj. BEN. MCCULLOCH, who now holds the office of United States Marshal of the First District of Texas, will not accept the appointment to the Governorship of Utah, which the telegraph informed him had been tendered him.

The editor of the Macon Citizen (Georgia) has been sued for libel, damages laid at $20,000, for saying something personal about a man who refused to pay a bill of 20 shillings.

A German teacher in Austin, Texas, accused by a German girl, a pupil of his, of taking improper liberties with her, was taken across the river by an infuriated mob, who proposed to lynch him, but the Mayor interfered, and the assailants were punished, while the man went scot free.

THE STORM AT MOBILE.—FURTHER PARTICULARS.—The telegraph has noticed the occurrence of a terrible rain-storm at Mobile, Ala., on Friday, the 1st inst., which is stated by the papers of that city to have been more destructive than any except the great storm of 1852. The rain commenced running in torrents at 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, and continued without intermission until a late hour on Friday morning, attended with thunder and lightning. The Advertiser says:

The gutters soon became overcharged and overflowed into the intermediate streets, which became quite respectable rivers, the lower parts of the city became impassable lakes, and many dwellings were encroached upon by the rising flood. On and beyond Broad-street the water attained a depth of several feet, penetrating some of the dwellings in the vicinity, covering the first floors, and in some instances so increased as to alarm the occupants, and induce them to vacate their premises and seek shelter in less exposed situations.

In all parts of the city bridges at the street crossings have been torn up and carried off, and wood piles and lumber washed away—several of the gutters being literally strewed with these evidences of the destruction. The sidewalk on the north side of the public square, as in the case in several other places, has been undermined, and is now in shocking order. Gardens have been beaten down, and in some instances growing vegetables carried away by this unlooked for irrigation.

The furnace at the gas works became submerged, and at 1 o'clock in the morning the fires went out. The street lamps all over town soon followed suit, and so the city continued until daybreak in total darkness. A man, in attempting to cross a bridge, fell off, and was drowned.

The Granite State Register is a new weekly, very handsomely got up, issued at Nashua, N. H., by BARRETT & GRAY. It is Free-Soil Democrat.

RESISTANCE TO STATE LEGISLATION.

Great Mass Meeting in the Park.

Recent Legislative Acts Denounced.

"Peaceably if we Can, Forcibly if we Must."

A DIVISION OF THE STATE TALKED OF.

Speeches by Marshal Rynders, Hon. John Kelly, Theodore E. Tomlinson, Hon. John Cochrane and Wm. J. Rose.

There was a very large meeting in the City-Hall Park last evening, called together to express the sentiment of the people with reference to the acts of the late Legislature concerning New York City. Ten thousand persons were present, and they were orderly and attentive until the close of the proceedings.

Three platforms had been erected for the accommodation of speakers, but soon after the hour appointed for commencing, it was found necessary to organize a fourth on the Chambers-street side of the Hall of Records. The main and wing in front of the City Hall. From a pole near this stand the American flag hung at half mast, and the following inscriptions on transparencies purported to give the popular sentiment in a condensed form. The most prominent were the following:

"When the wicked rule, the people mourn."

"In righteous authority the people rejoice."

"We obey all Constitutional law, but defy despotism."

"Despotic laws demoralize the people."

"We choose our own rulers, and pay our own taxes."

"We know our rights, and will defend them."

"The people's rights shall not be infringed."

"We sustain our City authorities."

"Resist aggression."

"Our Commerce shall not be destroyed."

After short-ons's Band had concluded a "Welcome Home to Willis," Marshal Rynders came forward and spoke, in substance, as follows:

REMARKS OF MARSHAL RYNDERS.

Captain Rynders, in moving to appoint a Chairman, and calling the meeting to order, said: At the request of the Committee of Arrangements and your permission, I will now call the meeting to order. In doing that, however, permit me to define my position in regard to the meeting called here to night and its object. I come here to make a common cause with my fellow-citizens in a matter that I consider of deep importance to every individual inhabitant of this City as well as the prosperity of the City itself. I come here to join you in protesting against the despotic laws that have been enacted by our Legislature at its last session. I believe that such laws are contrary to the genius of our people and our institutions. I believe they are subversive of the freedom and independence of the people, and detrimental to the commercial interests of the City. The gallant Captain then went on to say that it mattered little to the people of New-York whether they were defrauded out of their rights by a cheating majority of the Legislature, or whether we are deprived of them by force or violence. They meant to defend their rights—LOT by force, out by legal means. Mr LITTLEJOHN had said that he would march with the army to New York to enforce this measure, and he had better try it. He believed that the late act was a violation of the people's rights, and he thought the people so understood it. The people of New-York did not want to bear additional taxes, as they had enough already, —indeed, more than they could well bear. They fought for their rights, (the Captain) did not mean that they were going to knock anybody down, but that they would fight under the law and Constitution of the State.

The Captain then nominated JOHN KELLY as President of the meeting.

The question was put and carried, unanimously, amid loud applause.

The Chairman responded, and asked why this large assemblage had congregated? He believed that it was to give vent to feelings against the iniquitous laws that had been passed by the Republican Legislature.

It was true that the Democratic Party had been largely outnumbered in the legislative halls of this State, but our opponents had taken advantage of that weakness, by passing such laws as were no only derogatory to them as legislators and as liberal citizens, but in violation of the Constitution and the rights of the citizen. This they had done by giving a Charter, the provisions of which were favorable alone to the members of the Republican Party. That Party had legislated Democrats out of office, and Black Republicans into office. More than that. Men who have been chosen as municipal officers for two years have been deprived of their office in one year. The Black Republican Party have invariably legislated for their party, and for no one else.

There were many provisions in this Charter that he (Mr KELLY) might dilate upon to show the outrages that had been committed upon the rights of the citizen, but he would abstain from doing so as it would more appropriately fall to the lot of other and more able speakers. He would, however, say we should Democratic Commissioners be legislated out of office, and Black Republicans put in their stead.

A VOICE—And Know Nothings.

THE SPEAKER—Yes, and Know Nothings Now, nobody would deny that SIMEON DRAPER was not a partisan. He was the most suitable man for the office for he used the office for his own benefit. The Black Republicans have chosen five Commissioners, and divested the Municipal Councils of this City of their power, and placed it in the hands of these Commissioners.

The Chairman then briefly alluded to the bill for the building of the City Hall, and the Central Park, as well as the Harbor and Excise bill, which he contended were iniquitous, and concluded as follows: "If the Court of Appeals decide that these laws are Constitutional, it is your duty to abide by the laws of your country, for laws are made by the people." [Applause.]

When the President had concluded, Mr. RUSSELL proposed a host of Vice-Presidents, and Mr. DUNLAP a host of Secretaries.

The organization then stood as follows:

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, The Legislature of this State, at its recent session, did by various enactments assume to itself the right to manage and direct the municipal concerns of this City, without reference to the will of its inhabitants or its corporate authority, forcing upon us a new system of Police, which lugs within its embrace three other Counties; changing the form of our City government, by abolishing our Charter and creating another; requiring the removal of our merchant ships from a great extent of dock, to accommodate other interests to their prejudice; creating an organization of Port Wardens, to answer the cravings of hungry politicians, and against the express wishes of the merchants of our City; and putting upon one extensive branch of trade an impracticable and severe excise tax law, full of oppressive absurdities; and

And whereas, While anarchy and confusion follow the introduction of such daring usurpations of power, our City is threatened as a consequence with an overwhelming increase of taxation; our high officials continue jointly interfered with in the exercise of their duties; and the best interests of a loyal people trampled under foot to subserve the purposes of political adventurers, we, therefore, members of this great City, do most solemnly protest against this effort to deprive us of our chartered privileges, and with one voice and one heart call upon the people of this State to condemn the acts of a Legislative body which attempt to deprive us of our freedom as a City, and "send hither swarms of office-holders to eat out our substance," and for the pledge of our determined opposition to such abuses do adopt the following:

Resolved, That the majority of the Legislature of our State, in attempting to fasten upon the people of this City a new form of government without submitting its provisions to those who are to be governed by it, or the authority which has been elected by them, have grossly outraged the constitutional rights of freemen, and must be opposed in this tyrannical career by "due process of law" until relief is found in the wisdom of our Judiciary, or the majesty of insulted electors hurls these vandals from power and place.

Resolved, That the bill establishing what is facetiously termed "An act to establish a Metropolitan Police" in this City, which provides for a commission of parts men, elected from a small minority faction, to rule this right arm of our Metropolis, and sets at defiance the constituted authorities of this City, aims a blow at municipal rights which, if unresisted, will eventually make our boasted freedom a by-e-word and a reproach, and blot out the last vestige of Democratic principles from our constitution.

Resolved, That the resistance thus far opposed to these abominations by the Chief Magistrate and corporate authority of this City, merits and should receive the highest approbation of all true Democrats, and men of every political sentiment, who rest their principles under the ægis of our Constitution and shrine with unwavering confidence in the ermine of our judiciary, and we hereby tender to the reliable powers the support of this large gathering and those whom they represent in every effort justified by law to arrest the progress of this broad upon vested rights.

Resolved, That the imposition practiced upon the commercial men of this City by the Port-Warden bill enacted by the majority of our Legislature at its late session is such as to call forth the condemnation of every one who rightly estimates its features, while it should teach those who are aggrieved by it, that the party who sustained it are not to be relied upon for the support of commercial interests. Such a law would have been most properly entitled "an act to provide for the support and maintenance of official paupers."

Resolved, That the act "To suppress intemperance, and to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors" passed by the so called "Republican" Legislature, is an effort to secure "prohibition" under the guise of a falsely named license system, and it is difficult to decide which has the preconception, the weakness or the wickedness of those who altered this bill from the form in which it was first presented, and introduced features so highly repugnant to the spirit of Constitutional law, and so fraught with impracticable provisions, or the unmatched want of legal and practical knowledge which, in the haste to reward a fanatical and frenzied constituency for their votes, has "thrust into the world-cursed half-made up" this patchwork of absurdity and legislative travesty. We turn it over to those whose immediate rights as citizens it was intended to violate, and doubting that their determination to resist this oppression by "due process of law," and the force of the ballot-box will teach the abettors of this foul sentiment that those whom they attempt to tread upon will find their remedy in the principles of true Democracy, and the bar of a sound judiciary, and we pledge ourselves to stand by them in their conflict.

Resolved, That we are opposed to this Excise law, because under the pretence of reforming an evil, it enacts restrictions on the sale of an article of commerce, recognized as property, and in which a vast amount of the wealth of our citizens is invested; because it creates a useless property-qualification to the right of petition; mocks at the leading feature of our Constitution in its provision for an equality of citizenship, and gives to wealth the right to declare what citizen shall enjoy certain privileges, thus raising an aristocracy in our land, and because, further, the professed object of the law is lost sight of in the absurdity of its provisions, and will fail to be attained in the pursuit of a theory, entirely obnoxious to practical common sense.

Resolved, That the measures taken by the same legislative majority, in appointing Commissions to erect a new City Hall, and manage the affairs of the Central Park, are of a kin to those already referred to, and grossly insulting to the people of this City, who are to be responsible for all the indebtedness to be created for these purposes, and to be severely taxed for expenditures, on which they are not permitted to exercise an opinion; nor is the fact of placing two or three Democrats on these commissions, however complimentary to them as individuals, to be received in justification of this unwarrantable course toward the constituted authorities of this City.

Resolved, That while we acknowledge that our form of municipal government requires amendment and correction in many respects and that there are evils and abuses arising from which should be remedied, we are opposed to the so called amended charter, because it infringes upon our rights of local sovereignty, and is characterized by the worst feature of partisan legislation.

Resolved, That as by the Constitution of the Union powers not delegated to Congress are reserved to the States or the people, so by the same principle do we hold that powers vested in our City by charters, that have had the sanction of its electors, are infringed upon by acts such as we have named, and hence these acts place us as a City in an attitude not to be tolerated by the National Democracy.

Resolved, That as a member of our State compact, contributing the greatest portion of means to its treasury, and in its operations as the commercial emporium of our country acting as the heart from which flows through all the arteries of the States the life-blood of its support, we feel that we have cause to be indignant at the attempt of Legislators from the interior to seize upon our municipal powers, and claim to rule over those to whom the people have entrusted their interests.

Resolved, That we hold the so-called "Republican" party and all of any other party who furnish aid and comfort in carrying out the obnoxious features of the unconstitutional and aggressive schemes, responsible for the designs and consequences of their attempt, and we do hereby declare that by public discussion and by individual effort, we will agitate the question thus forced upon our consideration until the rights of the people in the premises are restored, and these tyrannical enactments prohibited from the statute book or purged of their Anti Democratic character.

Resolved, Finally, that in the state of anarchy and confusion which these grievances are producing we call upon every sound Democrat in this metropolis, and upon conservative men of all classes, to come to the rescue, ere intolerance, misrule and usurpation place this City in a state of bankruptcy, while selfish and designing politicians of the State who design to appropriate our City treasury to mercenary purposes.

When the resolutions had been adopted,

THEODORE E. TOMLINSON, Esq., was introduced. He said the right of free speech and of a free press was written in the Constitution, as was the right of the people to meet in public and interchange ideas concerning the acts of those chosen to enact laws for our government. And yet, although there was a great deal of olitical liberty, it was true that there was very little personal independence. If a man ventured to oppose a tyrannical Excise law, he was denounced as a man-slayer, and a maker of widows and orphans. Some present might wonder why he was there. If there were any such, he would tell them that he was a Whig while the Whig Party fought for principles and until it murdered HENRY CLAY. [Applause and cries of "If did, it did."] And he would add that he intended to stand by the National Democratic Party while that party stood by the Union. Why, he would ask, had they gathered together? What great calamity had befallen the City? A great calamity indeed. Its rights had been infringed and like all acts of tyranny, it had been done under the cloak of an honorable name. Nearly two hundred years ago the city of New York had received a Charter, guaranteeing to the people the right to appoint their own officers and license their own men. That right has been infringed by the recent Legislature. Mr. TOMLINSON here named two various acts relating to the City of New-York, and commented severely upon their consequences if allowed to go into effective operation. He was followed by Mr. COCHRANE.

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN COCHRANE.

Hon. JOHN COCHRANE was presented amid loud applause. He was here, he said, to speak to them upon no ordinary occasion. It was upon the infringement of their sovereign rights that he came here to-night to speak. It was their rights, their liberties, their existence as free men that were at stake, and now was the time and this was the place where the issue was to be decided. It was to be decided by their voices. It was to be decided by their determination. It was to be controlled by their will, by their sovereign popular will manifested in the thunder tones of the voices and the resolves of freemen. [Cheers.] He was not to speak to them on the subject of tariffs or of United States Banks. He was not to speak to them upon the conventional doctrines of Black Republicanism and of Democracy, but he was to speak to them upon the inalienable rights of men, upon the right to self government that had been ruthlessly attacked; upon the great franchises of the City of New York, that had been dashed to the ground; upon the individual rights of citizens of New-York, that had been prostrated and ruined. This was the theme of his discourse; this was the subject of their thoughts; this was the source of the anxiety that pervaded the land. That men armed with a little brief authority, clothed with no representation of theirs, (the citizens,) located 150 miles off-shore, coming from the rural districts, should pretend to legislate upon the rights of the inhabitants of New-York, nay, more, to rob them of those rights, was a monstrosity unheard of, a monstrosity unparalleled in the history of the world! In ancient times it was said, among a high born and spirited people, a people who legislated for themselves, as we now were legislating here for our ourselves, the Locrians, that if a man would propose a new law, to sure and confident should he be of its rectitude and of its propriety, that he should come into the Assembly of the people with a halter about his neck, so that if it were rejected, he should be strangled upon the spot; and his only safety was in its approbation at the hands of his fellow citizens. These Black Republicans who stood in the Legislative halls at Albany had no halter about their neck when they proposed those infamous, unconstitutional laws. But you, he continued, have the halter about their neck now; you disapprove of the law. Strangle them in your midst. [Loud cheers.] The right of the people to govern themselves had never been questioned. It rules in the State of New-York as it rules in the State of Georgia. It welds this whole confederacy together. Away in yonder Kansas, overtopping all the shrieks for freedom we have heard swells up that powerful right—swells out over her mountains and her plains—the right of the people to govern themselves. We have that right. It has been attempted to be taken from us. Resist this oppression [cheers.] Resist the despotism of infamous law—a despotism as ominous in its consequences as this anarchy itself. And, if the only preventative of anarchy is law, the only remedy for oppressive law is Revolution! Revolution at the ballot box, if it may be—at all events Revolution—peaceful, violent, unarmed or armed! [Immense cheering.] I recommend it. That is the higher law. That is the law of the people. [A VOICE —"And HORACE GREELEY's."]

The law of the people is the voice of God. It will assert itself. It shall be heard, or you are slaves. Now, choose the alternative! [A voice: "The knife."] Choose to submit tamely, without resistance, or resist peacefully, if it may be, but violently, it must be! Choose your resistance on the one side, or degradation on the other! [Loud cheers.] That is the issue, and you have to determine it here to night. It is no painted field of quiet. It is no tournament, where gallants have to tilt, or splinter a lance, in favor of their ladye loves. It is an armed and contested field, occupied by freemen, who know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain them. [Cheers.] And I ask you to settle in your minds what those rights are—determine this night henceforth that you will maintain them against all the powers of despotism, whether in the shape of anarchy or of corrupt and oppressive laws. Now, then, for one moment let us examine what this thing is. I did not come here to present to you a constitutional argument. It is unnecessary to appeal to your own feelings. I appeal to you in your own common sense and judgment to declare with me whether the law which, in the shape of a renewed charter, legislates out of office the officials of your choice before the expiration of their terms of office, although wearing the semblance of law, is not an infraction upon the force of your ballot which sealed your elections for a given term. I appeal to you to answer me this, whether the attempt to dislodge a Police force upon which your safety, your quiet, your protection from the wrong-doer depends, is not evidence of a despotism unparalleled, when accompanied by the attempt to replace that police force with another force that shall do the behests of the political masters who have appointed them? [Cheers.] I ask you to answer the question whether that is constitutionally and morally right? [Cries of "No, no."] That a police force should be established for a certain district here, which may be established equally for the whole State, thus creating, as has been stated by my predecessor, here, an army of police. An army of police! For what purpose? Armed and equipped to resist a foreign foe? Oh, no; but to restrain their fellow citizens. In other words, a large standing army in your midst. What says the Constitution of the United States?

[A VOICE—"It says 'No!'"]

It says there shall be no standing army tolerated in this free Union, for it is the implement of a despot, and is used for the oppression of the liberties of a people. [Cheers.] It is unconstitutional, and it behooves you, gentlemen, now, at the threshold, to resist that unconstitutional and unpatriotic law. [Loud cheers.] Again, here is our great City of New-York. It is the pride of our citizens; it is the wonder and admiration of the world. Into her lap flow the streams of the commerce of the world. By her is received the tribute of those streams, and you and I and all of us are enriched. Here we stand, with our wealth, our intelligence, our enterprise, our liberty—the political light-house of the benighted regions of Europe—and yet these infamous laws aim a deadly, vital blow at the commerce of your City. It would tear it from you, and leave you wrecked upon the quicksand of political perversation and political corruption, an object for the scorn of your enemies and the pitiful contemplations of your friends [Cheers.] Fellow-citizens, it does more. Under the garb of a so called license law it, in effect, prohibits "free-trade and sailors' rights to all." It takes from you the liberties which you determined upon the former application of a Prohibitory law, that you would indulge and enjoy. It in fact proclaims to the poor man, because of your poverty you shall not enjoy the rights which your richer neighbor is enabled to purchase. [Hear, hear!] In that infamous license law you perceive that the right of petition is placed at the disposal of the free-holder, and withheld from the honest poor man. Then, again, you have a whole collection of infamies under the garb of legislative enactments which are thrust upon you in the shape of the laws of the State of New-York for 1857. You are asked, humble slaves, to bow your necks and to receive their yoke. If I mistake not the spirit of this people, if I mistake not the principles of my fellow-citizens, they will resist this legalised tyranny: they will resist illegal oppression, whether it be for the benefit of the few, or whether it be alone for the misery of the many.

Gentlemen fellow-citizens: I have dwelt upon but one consideration in one distinct line of argument with you this evening. I have chosen to occupy your attention with it in its serious aspect; and as I began I conclude, by stating that this is a graver, a more important question for you to decide now and here to-night than any other that has been presented to you in the tide of time by the more opposition and conflict of parties. It is not what set of principles shall prevail, but it is whether principle shall prevail or all. It is a conflict between right and wrong. There is no intermediate ground. Every independent and patriotic man of every party, of every denomination and designation, who wishes well to his country must meet upon this common platform and decide that here we will stand and resist these infamous efforts to construct power for the few at Albany and ruin for the many in the City of New York, and I resist now, hence forth and forever. [Mr. COCHRANE retired amid loud cheering.]

Mr. WILLIAM J. ROSE was the last speaker. He spoke eloquently to the effect that the question of the rights of Municipalities were older than the Republic, and had ravaged since before Christ in France, in Germany, in Switzerland, and in England; and asked, was it to be supposed that in this free country which was regarded as the exemplar of liberty to all the world, there should be tolerated a return to those systems of Municipal despotism which were abolished in the dark ages of the oligarcies of Europe?

When he had concluded,

Mr. PHILIP W. ENGS came forward and, after expressing his thanks for the extent in point of numbers and respectability, in point of character, of the assemblage which had responded to the call of the gentlemen by whom the meeting was brought about, he proposed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Chairman of this meeting, Hon. JOHN KELLY, appoint a Committee of seven gentlemen to cooperate with our City authorities in opposing the tyrannical laws which the Legislature has recently passed, and that the Chairman name the Committee through the public press.

The resolution was seconded and carried unanimously, whereupon the meeting, on motion, was dissolved and peacably dispersed.

AT THE SECOND STAND

A very large crowd collected, composed mostly of Germans. CONRAD SWACKHAMER was chosen President; Messrs. OTTENDORFER and WINDMULLER, Vice-Presidents; and Dr. NAST and GUSTAVUS BACH, Secretaries.

Mr SWACKHAMER thought it strange that he had been called to preside over a German meeting, but he trusted to hear English and Irish speeches, too. [Cheers.] The so-called Republican Legislature at Albany had attempted to trample down the rights of the people of this City. The Chief Executive, FERNANDO WOOD, with a majority of the Common Council, had determined to resist them, and test the constitutionality of the laws they had tried to impose upon the citizens of New-York; and he felt sure the Court of Appeals would decide against those unjust acts. They say that this Police Commission is not a political organization, while it is well known that the contrary is the fact. He, however, felt confident that JOHN A. KING had the authority of the State in opposition to the interests of the City. FERNANDO WOOD would lead the Democracy of this City on to war against him, and the Democracy had proved themselves to be ever victorious, never terrified, nor never will be. In relation to the corrupt laws of this corrupt Legislature, said the speaker, we will not obey them until the Court of Appeals decides in their favor; and if it does we have a still higher authority to appeal to—the enlightened citizens of the City of New-York. They will by their votes next Fall make all things right. He concluded by saying that the demonstration of the evening would convince all sensible men that New-York will be true to her own interests and also regard the rights of her neighbors. [Great cheerings with cries of "Bully for you."]

Dr. PHILIP MERKLE then read the resolutions in German which created great amusement among the boys and incited an Irishman to request the lads to "kape still till yez hear the Dutchman spake."

Dr. FREDERICK FAESCH then spoke in German. He said the main principle of freedom was liberty for each separate community. He protested against such violations of the Constitution as had been enacted in Albany during the past Winter. The Legislature had in charge the interests of the whole State, but they had perverted their offices to subserve party ends. But all such violations of right were null and void. [Cheers.] These tyrannical laws have been referred to the Courts; and, if they should decide against them, they must appeal to the fundamental law which is higher than that decision.

Dr. PHILIP MERKLE made a few remarks in English, and afterwards spoke in German. He prophesied in the last campaign, that if this Union were carried by the Opposition Party it would be demolished, and they have now a fair example of what would have been their actions, by the transactions of the Republican Legislature of this Empire State. The Legislature had determined to deprive them of their rights, and if they did not fight these obnoxious laws with all their might, their rights would be forever lost to them. But the large army of Democrats then present there would teach the Legislature that all lawful means would be used to resist them. Few Germans, said the speaker, voted with the Black Republican Party at the last election, and those few would not have done so had they known what was likely to be the future acts of that party they were all too good Democrats for that. Does Westchester County need such a police force as New-York? Every sensible man knows she does not. But these Legislators were about as smart in making laws as they were in overruling the Constitution. He trusted that they would show common sense and take every step to see at naught these laws.

[During this address Dr. MERKLE was repeatedly and vociferously cheered.]

Dr. SCHONCKY next spoke in German. He said that the aim of the Republicans in getting into office was to fill their pockets. They had made a great cry out when a proposition was made a short time ago to increase the pay of the Councilmen, while they had at the same time created fifty new offices, with large salaries attached, for their partisans. Now, the question was, should they submit to these laws? [Cries of "No, no," and "Put them down."] No, they must not submit to them, because they had sworn to support the Constitution. Should they passively acquiesce in these laws they have taken the first step towards despotism. As these legislators have taken four counties, they could as has much propriety take a hundred, and make the Governor not only King by name, but a King in reality. He trusted that with their lives they would resist these tyrannical laws.

Mr. C H. BRACKETT spoke next in English. He abused the "Black Republicans" to his heart's content, or rather until his lungs gave out, saying the recent acts of the Legislature invaded the sanctity of the fireside, and if they were allowed to proceed without a check on their actions a law would soon be passed enjoining every Patrick from sleeping with his Biddy.

Dr. WM. J. C. KENNY and other speakers subsequently addressed the meeting.

THE THIRD STAND.

A meeting was organized by appointing Hon. ARTHUR WOODS President, and MICHAEL MULLIGAN and RICHARD C. FELLOWS, Secretaries. A fair degree of enthusiasm was manifested, and Capt. JOHN CASIGHTOR, Alderman GOELTZE, WM. JENKINS, and others, were the speakers.

A fourth meeting was improvised on the steps of the Hall of Records, which was addressed by Messrs. DE COURCY, BAGLY, SHINE, Councilman HUGHES, and others.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

WASHINGTON, Monday, May 11, 1857.

HON. ROBERT J. WALKER, Governor of Kansas, having received his final instructions, drew his "outfit" from the Treasury to day, and leaves tomorrow morning for his destination. A clear road has been prepared for him by the open and manly course pursued by Acting Governor STANTON, and his conciliatory course pursued by the Government, with Mr. WALKER's prestige, may hild us hope for the most amicable adjustment of the difficulties so long pending. The following very interesting extract from a private letter received in this city from Hon. FRED. P. STANTON, dated Lecompton, 27th April, gives an exceedingly graphic description of the country, and the present affairs of Kansas. He says:

"I have been here now nearly two weeks. The country is indeed very beautiful and inviting, but it is perfectly new and uncultivated. We have none of the conveniences of living, and have great trouble even in getting the necessaries of life. The civil war of last year prevented the farmers from making or saving any crops; and now almost everything we eat is hauled from the Missouri River; yet notwithstanding this, the people are coming in great crowds. Most of them come however with a view to speculation. This brings a great deal of money into the country, and the consequence is that everything is extremely high—quite as high as in California upon the first discovery of gold. But these prices will not last. One year of peaceful industry will give plenty and prosperity to the Territory. I hope to be able to maintain peace. The prospect is quite good."

JOHN CLAIBORNE, Esq., formerly editor of the New-Orleans Courier, has been appointed special agent for the Government, to collect statistical information in Europe in relation to the use and consumption of cotton. He leaves to-morrow for your City, and goes out by the steamer Africa, on Wednesday next. Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, who fought a duel with LEVIN WOATH, and who more lately was wounded by Mr. NIXON, of the New-Orleans Crescent, took a charge of the editorial department of the Courier, in the absence of Mr. CLAIBORNE.

On Saturday afternoon last, the Marine Band played in the President's grounds, which were more densely filled with our citizens and strangers than I ever remember to have seen, the fairer portion of creation prevailing. It was a most exquisite evening, and the fresh green sward, and the new leafing foliage of the trees, never looked more beautiful; while the landscape was enlivened by the view southward of the tiny sails on the Potomac. Mr. BUCHANAN appeared in the grounds, and attempted to enjoy a quiet walk, but he was besieged and surrounded by a crowd of political buzzards which still infest the city. He is yet quite feeble from his severe and arduous labors, as well as from the periodical attacks of the National Hotel disease, to which he is yet subject. To establish the fact beyond doubt, that this disease proceeded from the malaria at the hotel, and not poison, Mr. BUCHANAN, when at the hotel, neither ate nor drank there.

The anniversary of the Episcopal Sunday Schools was celebrated yesterday afternoon, in Trinity Church, Rev. Mr. CUMMINS officiating. It was a most imposing and interesting exhibition. There were four schools present, numbering about 600 children, and 80 teachers. The ceremony was opened with prayer, and a number of beautiful hymns were sung by the children. The different classes then presented donations of money, which they had contributed during the year, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of building a small chapel. Each class bore the name of some missionary noted for his labors in Africa, China, or our own country, and as they were called in their order, a little girl would approach and present the donation, contained in some appropriate emblematic device, accompanied by a paper containing a quotation from Scripture, and lines of poetry, which were read out by Mr. CUMMINS, with the amount contributed. Many of these devices containing the donations of these little ones, were very beautiful; for instance, the class named after the Bishop of Minnesota, presented its offering in a miniature log cabin, with the smoke of the burning incense escaping from the chimney. Another presented a little well, with gold dollars contained in the bucket. A cross decorated with flowers, from which hung a number of ribbons with gold pieces attached. An anchor, emblematic of hope; baskets of flowers, satin banners, and other national and religious emblems conveyed the savings of these little children, which amounted to the handsome sum of over $600!

The Secretary of the Navy has established a fourth Court of Inquiry for the trial of the garroted officers, to which Mr. CARLISLE (who was first appointed, and resigned on account of the death of his wife) has been reappointed as Judge Advocate. A fifth Court is also contemplated, as Secretary TOUCEY is determined to give all the officers as speedy a trial as possible. This is but what justice demands. The service requires that as many Courts as possible should be instituted at once, in order that the victims of the Naval Board should learn their fates, as well as that the other officers should know their position. While matters remain as they are, our Navy is in a useless state of dislocation.

The weekly report of the Treasury on line on the 7th inst., is as follows; Amount of receipts, $1,376,344 62; drafts returned paid, $2,136,618 27; drafts issued, $1,823,127 19; amount on deposit, $25,548,661 42; subject to draft, $23 315,334 16.

The Burdell Murder. A Public Spirited Citizen

NEW YORK, Tuesday, May 12, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

MY DEAR SIR: I have been long highly gratified with the general course your excellent DAILY TIMES pursues; and in no matter have you more suited my particular appreciation than in the expression of your sentiments on the recent Mrs. BURDELL trial. Last of all you wish to stimulate those "who know" of the whereabouts of Dr BURDELL on the fatal evening, to make the same public, bits my views precisely. I therefore take this opportunity to offer, through your columns, to make one of ten or twenty who will pay one thousand dollars each, to any person who may give such information as shall lead to the conviction of the individual who killed Dr. BURDELL. If Governor KING will offer five thousand dollars, and Mayor WOOD five thousand, perhaps a reward which might embrace thirty thousand dollars, might excite the memory of "those who know," to healthful activity. I am, with great respect,

Your obedient servant.

B. BRANDRETH.

The passenger and freight cars used by this Company are all of their own manufacture, (which probably cannot be said of any other road on this continent,) and are built in their shops in this city.

They are all built of the best materials and in the best possible manner, in every respect, but particularly with a view to strength and durability.

The Company have seventy passenger cars, all of same size and quality, some of which were built nine years ago, and having been well built and kept in good repair, are good for

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

American and Foreign Christian Union.

The American and Foreign Christian Union celebrated its eighth anniversary yesterday morning at Mr. Wood's church in Broome street. Rev Dr. DeWitt presided. The receipts of the year were $75,296, and the expenditures $72,122; balance in hands of the Treasurer, $4,174. Five thousand dollars worth of periodicals on the subject of Romanism have been gratuitously distributed. The number of laborers in the home field of this Society is 71, and it has 70 in the foreign departments. This aggregate of 141 persons is an advance of 72 over last year. The Report looks upon the Church of Rome as the grand obstruction to the progress of the Gospel, and warns the Protestant community to see that the statute law of the land is made to guard the rights of the citizen, no matter what his religious faith may be, in the following particulars: the public school system, the tenure of ecclesiastical property, and the due inspection of convents. The Society also acknowledges its indebtedness to the Bible and Tract and other benevolent Societies, for aid furnished it in the course of the past year.

Rev. Mr. Pressley, of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church of this City, moved the adoption of the report. He enlarged upon the duty of Christians to uphold this Society in its operations, in view of the rapid spread of error and the present rampent position of the errorists. Christian labors have already been so greatly blessed that there is stimulus for still greater exertions and encouragement to hope for better things.

Rev. Mr. Mitchell seconded the motion, and the report was adopted.

Rev. Rufus W. Clark (late pastor of the Meverick Church in East Boston, and now pastor of a Congregational Society in Brooklyn) offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the friends of Protestant institutions are under the most solemn obligations to make direct and vigorous efforts to preserve and extend their institutions upon American soil.

In advocating this resolution, Mr. Clark said he did not desire to raise any note of alarm, but held that we are bound to recognize the existence of evils, and to take measures for their extinction. Christians are especially under obligations to recognize the power of Romanism, to measure its forces and resist its progress. God does not give us blessings without the obligation to be active in sustaining them untarnished.

The speaker believed in the doctrine of the perseverance of the Saints, but he likewise believed that the Saints must persevere in order to make the doctrine true. Blessings and curses in this world are set over against each other, and God undoubtedly intended to try us, as he has tried every other nation. Mr. Clark did not believe in allowing things to take their own own way, waiting for the natural course of events. This system had been urged in reference to Slavery, but the idea that that system would die out by letting it alone had been effectually exploded by the course of recent events in Kansas. And so with the evils of Romanism. All that the Devil asks is to let alone, but he, for one, was in favor of taking the Devil by the horns, [laughter,] and of meeting evil with a bold and determined front. Rome is fixing her eyes and her hopes upon this country, and in politics her adherents already hold the balance of power among us. Shall we refuse to open our eyes to her machinations because they are conducted secretly? The speaker argued that the Romish system is antagonistic to our institutions; Romanists are the enemies of education; they would take the Bible from our public schools; Rome is the enemy of virtue; Rome is opposed to internal improvements and the development of national resources. Christians are under obligations to put forth every effort to counteract her baleful influence, and the speaker rejoiced that this Society had already done so much.

Rev. Dr. Kennedy, of Brooklyn, spoke to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the happy experience of our country, whose resources have been so remarkably developed under the fostering influences of a pure and scriptural faith, gives to the American churches a special missioe to spread abroad the blessings and the benefits of a pure Christianity in all parts of the Papal world.

Dr. Kennedy recalled the memory of the Puritans and the founders of our Government, to show that the country owed its present greatness to the spread of a liberal Christianity. He proceeded to argue that the Roman is an aggressive church, and that it seeks to destroy our literature, as well as our religious freedom.

Rev. Dr. Wilkes, of Montreal, said he was a loyal subject of "dear little Vic," and being a foreigner, though speaking the same tongue as his friends before him, must be looked upon, he supposed, as a representative of the foreign field of the Society. He spoke of the nunneries of Canada, and warned parents to beware how they committed their children to such institutions for purposes of education.

Rev. Mr. Rossiter (filling the place of Rev. Mr Harper, who was detained,) spoke of the work in the Northwestern States, and supported the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That in view of the remarkable and unprecedented emigration of the present age to this land—an emigration from all climes, but especially from those of nominal Christendom; and in view of the providences of God in regard to this nation in preparing it for the same, the American Church has devolved upon it a special, peculiar and important mission—no less than the emancipation and evangelization of the apostate portions of the nominally Christian world.

The proceedings closed with a hymn and a benediction.

American Anti-Slavery Society.

The Twenty-fourth Anniversary of the American Anti-Slavery Society was commenced at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, in the City Assembly Rooms.

On the platform were Mr. Wm. Lloyd Garrison, the President, and Mr. Wendell Phillips, of Boston; Rev. Mr. Furvis, of Philadelphia; Mr. Thos. Gerrit, of Wilmington; Rev. T. W. Higginson, of Worcester, Mass.; Mr. Parker Pillsbury, of Concord, N. H.; Rev. Chas. May, Jr.; Mr. Edmund Quincy, Mr. Francis Jackson, Mr. John Pierpont, Mr. Chas. L. Remond, and others.

The audience nearly filled the hall. A majority of the persons in attendance were ladies.

Mr. Garrison, the President, preached the proceedings by reading a portion of the Scriptures, after which

Rev. A. D. May, a Unitarian clergyman from Albany, offered prayer.

Mr. Garrison, in compliance with the instructions of the Executive Committee, which had met on the previous evening, submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the only Abolitionism we promulgate, and call upon the nation to reduce to practice, is embodied in the self evident truths of the Declaration of Independence, and in the Golden Rule of the Gospel—nothing more, nothing less.

Resolved, That we have but one object in view—the immediate liberation of the Slave; but one test of statesmanship—the Slave; but one proof of patriotism—the Slave; but one standard of piety—the Slave; in other words, we pronounce that statesmanship to be folly which leaves the freedom of the Slave out of sight; that patriotism to be hollow which does not break his fetters, and that piety to be spurious which does not hail him as a man and a brother.

Resolved, That he who was before all institutions, and is to survive them all, is greater than them all; hence, that he is never to be sacrificed that they may be preserved; and whenever they come in conflict with his God-given rights, they are to be modified or abolished, and he is to stand crowned with glory and honor, as one created but a little lower than the angels.

Resolved, That we shall allow nothing to stand between the slave and his emancipation—neither political party nor religious sect, neither church nor compact, neither Constitution nor Union; but we shall press through them all, or over them all, diverted by no side issue, intimidated by no menace, appalled by no danger, till we break his yoke, and place him redeemed and disenthralled upon the world-wide platform of a common humanity.

Resolved, That if to make human liberty paramount to all other considerations be fanaticism, then we glory in being fanatics; that if to be in deadly antagonism to a Pro-Slavery religion be infidelity, then we are infidels; and if to declare that no slaveholding Union ought to be dashed in pieces be treason, then we are proud of the title of traitors; for "the head and front of our offending hath this extent—no more."

Resolved, That all the features of the late decision of Judge Taney, and his nine slaveholding associates of the United States Supreme Court, in the Dred Scott case, are marked by a brutality of spirit, a daring disregard of all historical verity, a defiant contempt of State sovereignty, a wanton perversion of the Constitution of the United States in regard to the rights of American citizens, and an audacious denial of all the principles of justice and humanity, that justly call for the sternest condemnation, and its indignant rejection as a decision binding upon the conscience or conduct of any man, or any part of the country.

Resolved, That while the armed invasion and bloody conquest of Kansas, by southern "Border Ruffians," and the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in regard to the citizenship of the colored population of the country, are atrocities of the most fiendish character; and while no language of indignation and horror is too strong to be uttered in view of their perpetration, still, these are not accesses of the Slave system, but its very nature and bent—effects of the same cause—fruits of the same poisonous tree; hence, to dwell upon these unparalleled crimes, and to leave the source of them untouched—nay, to keep it in full operation by constitutional protection, is not only a lamentable waste of time, but a gross moral absurdity.

Resolved, That the South has simply been true to her necessities—taking no unnecessary steps, resorting to no extraneous measures seeking no superfluous safeguards, in order to give security to her slave system; that she could do no less, and will be continually constrained to do more and more in the same direction—trampling upon all agreements, guarantees and compacts, and making fresh aggressions upon the rights and liberties of the people of the North, until the very forms of Republican government are overthrown, and a military dictatorship be established all over the entire country.

Resolved, That while the North gives its sanction and support to slavery in fifteen States of the Union, it can make no consistent moral resistance to its extension in the Territories; that we tell the Republican Party that if it would be a curse and crime to plant it in Kansas, it is no less criminal and disastrous to perpetuate it in Carolina; that it is equally absurd and immoral to make it a question of soil and climate, of latitude and longitude, or of bargain and compromise; that it is be compatible with Christianity and Republicanism to hold four millions of slaves as property, it is no less so to hold four hundred millions in the same condition; that to license oppression is to lose the power to limit it; and that any other issue with Slavery in this country, except that of its immediate and total abolition, is wild and delusive.

Whereas, (In the language of John Quincy Adams,) "It cannot be denied—the slaveholding lords of the South prescribed as a condition of their assent to the Constitution, three special provisions to secure the perpetuity of their dominion over their slaves: The first was the immunity, for twenty years, of pursuing the African slave trade; the second was the stipulation to surrender fugitive slaves—an engagement positively prohibited by the laws of God delivered from Sinai; and, thirdly, the exaction, fatal to the principles of popular representation, of a representation for slaves—for articles of merchandise, under the name of persons—thus constituting a privileged order of men in the community, more adverse to the rights of all, and more pernicious to the interests of the whole, than any order of nobility ever known, and making the preservation, propagation and perpetuation of Slavery the vital and animating spirit of the National Government;" and

Whereas, This view of the design and character of the Constitution is sustained by all the historical facts in regard to its formation, by its uniform interpretation by all the Congressional and Legislatures of all the States, and by the spirit and action of the American people under it from 1789 to the present time, thus placing it beyond all reasonable doubt or denial; and,

Whereas, A Constitution so formed and administered is nothing better than a "covenant with death, and an agreement with hell," to uphold which is morally wrong and politically vicious—making responsible, as it does, the whole country, for the safety and perpetuity of the Slave system, therefore,

Resolved, That it becomes a high moral duty to dissolve the present National Compact; to raise the banner of secession; to join in the cry of "No union with slaveholders;" to separate the North from the South; that the awful responsibilities growing out of the existence of Slavery may be placed upon the heads of those who proclaim their determination to perpetuate their nefarious institution; the resources of the Slave Power, whereby it is enabled to extend and strengthen itself, cut off—the slaves permitted to stand erect and look their lordly masters in the face, and settle the question of their liberty without any extraneous influence—the slaveholders deprived of all auxiliary aid, and put in a situation in which it will be a physical and geographical impossibility for them to retain a single victim in bondage.

Resolved, That we do not, can not, dare not, will not, recognize as Churches of Christ those Churches which sanction Slavery; which justify, excuse, or apologize for slaveholding, under any circumstances, and which admit slaveholders to their communion and fellowship; that it is blasphemy against God, and treason to Jesus Christ, to admit that such Churches are His; that, on the other hand, we regard them as the actual atheists and infidels of this country—as determining the foundations of society, subverting genuine Christianity, filling the land with impurity and unrighteousness, and poisoning, by their pernicious doctrines and example, the moral well-springs throughout the land.

Resolved, That, in the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the American Bible and Tract Societies, the Methodist General Conferences, Baptist Unions and Presbyterian General Assemblies, we have full and fair exponents and representatives of the religion of the country.

18. Resolved, That as all these bodies are composed of denominations claiming the prerogative of making terms of communion and church fellowship, and as not one of them has ever included slave-holding among those conditions, even while, in some instances, expelling members for differences upon modes of baptism, it becomes necessary, in fidelity to the Anti-Slavery cause, to declare, that no person who intelligently supports any of these organizations, or the churches composing them, either by countenance or contribution, is worthy to be regarded as a Christian or an Abolitionist.

14. Resolved, That we shall hail the day with hope and joy, when all these associations, so long the shield of the tyrant and the scourge of the slave, shall pass away, as have many others like them in former ages, and thus leave a more open entrance for the coming of the Kingdom of Peace and Purity, of Love and Liberty, in this as well as in all other lands.

The President then introduced, in terms highly complimentary,

Rev. T. W. Higginson, of Worcester Mass., who eulogized Mr. Garrison, in turn, as a patriot, and gave, he said, as an authority for so calling him, no less a person than the principal wire-puller of the Republican Party, (Hon. Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts,) who, at the Liberator meeting in Boston, six years ago, extolled, not the courage, nor the truth, nor the zeal, but the patriotism of the disunionist, Mr. Garrison. [Applause and laughter.]

In the course of his subsequent remarks the Reverend speaker affirmed that Slavery was as strong now as when Mr. John C. Fremont was an explorer of the Rocky Mountains. It had forgotten God, and there were but two things in the world which it feared, the devil and Wm. Lloyd Garrison. [Laughter.] He (the speaker) had never accepted the character of the Federal Constitution as it was understood on this Anti-Salavery Society's platform. He had never held and he never should that the Constitution was to be interpreted in a Pro-Slavery sense if he could get any other sense into it. But it was no matter whether the Constitution meant Slavery or Anti-Slavery, so long as it was conceded that a revolution would be necessary to make it act in an Anti-Slavery manner. His own opinion was that of Tallyrand regarding the French Constitution. He said it never meant anything, and never could, for he made it himself on purpose.

Like every legal document the Constitution should be interpreted according to what was put in it, not what its framers wanted to put in it. The true rule was laid down in the case of Shylock vs. Portia, reported by one William Shakespeare. He would hold the Shylock of Slavery to the bond. Give them an Anti-Slavery Supreme Court, and the Constitution would be an Anti-Slavery document to-morrow. But the Constitution was a dead letter; it was disregarded by the South, and no true Northern man paid attention to it when a fugitive slave stood before him. And the way by which to acquire the power to get rid of Slavery was by revolution. This was not one nation. Slaveholders and Freemen constituted two distinct nations, and the opposition between them was growing stronger every year. Every year Slavery was more Slavery and Freedom was more truly Freedom.

The best Anti-Slavery lecturer he (the speaker) ever knew, was the Hon. Thomas H. Benton, of St. Louis. That gentlemen had been at Worcester some time since and undertook to settle the argument, that if the Union were dissolved the slaves would desert. Said he, "If you dissolve the Union, frisnds and fellow-citizens, twenty slaves will run away, for one that does so now." There was a demonstration of applause among his audience, and he (thinking himself so understood,) continued, "If you dissolve the Union, you will practically bring Canada to the borders of Maryland." He looked up to see them weep, and was astonished to hear the house shake with laughter.

"He went to the undertaker's to buy them a coffin.

And when he came back he found them all laughing" We were now, the speaker continued, in the midst of a revolution.

"Treason, they say, no'er prospers; what's the reason? Why, when it prospers, man don't call it treason."

There were two institutions of the Free States which he wished to have put out of the way. One was the Underground Railroad to Canada. That railroad was demoralizing the consciences of free men. The soil was not free, so long as there was a difference between Canada and Broadway. The Underground Railroad made cowards of us all. It might be a necessary evil, but it was an evil to be looked on as degrading and demoralizing. The other thing he was in favor of abolishing was the Personal Liberty bills, placed on any narrower ground than the absolute right of every man to freedom, law or no law, constitution or no constitution. What he wanted to see, was a law not to make escape from Slavery the last proof of crime, but the crowning mark of virtue. In the resolution which had been proposed, but not acted on, in the Legislature of New York, it was declared "that this State will not allow within her borders Slavery in any form, upon any pretence, or for any time." Massachusetts must look to her laurels. And though Speaker Littlejohn, like his English namesake, might become an outlaw, with Gerrit Smith for his Robin Hood, and Henry Ward Beecher for his Friar Tuck, the shaft he had fired was surely aimed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Garrison rose and corrected Mr. Higginson in stating that the interpretation of the Constitution which he had attributed to the Anti Slavery Society was not their interpretation, but the interpretation of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Higginson said he wished to say that he had merely desired to place that interpretation of the Constitution in the most respectable view he could. It was a little matter to him what the Supreme Court thought of it, but it was of much importance to him what Mr. Lloyd Garrison or Mr. Wendell Phillips thought of it. [Applause.]

Mr. Francis Jackson, of Boston, the Treasurer, submitted his annual report of the finances, of which the following is an nbstract:

Receipts of the American Anti-Slavery Society	$19,308 63
Receipts of Auxiliary Societies in Massachusetts, New-York, Ponnsylvania, Ohio and Michigan	18,854 03
Total	$38,162 66
Expenditures for one year of the American Society and Auxiliaries	$33,970 12

Mr. Parker Pillsbury, of Concord, N. H., read the annexed resolutions:

Resolved, That in the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; the American Tract and Bible Societies; the Methodist General Conference; the American Baptist Union, and the Presbyterian General Assemblies, we have a fair exponent and representation of the recognized religion of the country.

Resolved, That as all these bodies are composed of denominations claiming the prerogative of making terms of communion and church fellowship, and as not one of them has ever included slave-holding among those conditions, even when expelling members for so slight an offence as differences upon modes of baptism, it becomes necessary in fidelity to the Anti-Slavery cause to declare that no person who intelligently supports any of these organizations, or the churches composing them, either by countenance or contributions, is worthy to be regarded as a Christian or an Abolitionist.

Resolved, That we shall hail the day with hope and joy, when all these associations, so long the shield of the tyrant and the scourge of the oppressed, shall be put away, as have many other like them, in former ages, and thus leave a more open entrance for the coming of the reign of peace and purity, of love and liberty, in this as in all other lands.

The speaker proceeded to animadvert upon the Pro Slavery or negative proclivities of the American Board of Missions, the American Bible Society, the Methodist General Conference, the N. S. Presbyterian General Assembly and the Democratic and Republican parties. He was peculiarly severe in his criticism upon the conduct of the two great religious bodies, the Methodist and Presbyterian, and fortified his comments on their alleged Pro-Slavery tendencies by reading extracts from the proceedings of their conference and assemblies. There was really only one true denomination, he said, in the land, the Old School Scotch Covenanters, and that was so small in point of numbers and so attentive to notoriety as hardly to attract public notice. In conclusion, he deprecated the aberrations of the New-York Observer, and expressed his dissatisfaction with the Anti-Slavery of Henry Ward Beecher, for though he had no doubt he (Mr. Beecher) disliked Slavery very much, yet he was afraid he (Mr. Beecher) disliked genuine Anti Slavery a little more. He (Mr. Phillsbury) was thankful to the audience for the attention they had borne with on his remarks. He had taken part in these Anniversaries since 1850, when they were set on by a mob, with Captain Rynders at its head, and indirectly sustained, if not approved, by the then Mayor. But now, in the wonderful workings of Providence, we saw that same Rynders as United States Marshal, intent on capturing slaves in the East River, instead of hunting the friends of the slave. Verily, he believed that publicans and harlots were nearer to the kingdom of heaven than many of the professed friends and ministers of religion, and that Rynders himself, with all his depravity, was nearer to it than the New-York Observer, with all its editors. [Loud laughter and applause.]

The President then introduced Mr. Purvis, a colored gentlemen from Pennsylvania, who delivered a brief speech, expressive of his personal feelings on the subject under discussion, of his cordial sympathy with the American Anti-Slavery Society, and of his high admiration of Gerrit Smith, though he differed with him in his interpretation of the Constitution.

The President announced that a collection would now be taken up, to defray the expenses of the anniversary, which, he said, would cost them about $500. He urged the propriety of a liberal contribution, not only to meet the present contingency, but for the sake of the cause behind. Whilst several ladies were going round soliciting donations,

Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell ascended the platform by invitation of the President, and addressed the ladies present on the importance of the influence which they might wield in their homes and by their firesides in promoting the great cause of redeeming the slave. She gently twitted the previous speakers for having ignored this branch of the subject entirely, and reasserted her firm belief in the right of the sex to the suffrage.

Mr. Wendell Phillips was introduced as the last speaker of the morning session. He was received with much applause. He said he would not detain the audience by any long remarks. Indeed, after all that had been said, he was very glad to feel that there was no necessity to do so. Although his friend, Mr. Higginson, thought he had not fully and entirely represented the essential character of this Society, he (Mr. Phillips) was willing, for one, to leave at least nine tenths of the principles which underlaid his (Mr. H.'s) speech as the representatives of their movement. He (Mr. Phillips) did not care, as also Mr. Higginson did not, what any man before him maintained as to the character of the American Constitution. It had long ceased to be a question of the slightest moment. Governments were not made. They grew—grew like the oak, from the seed and the soil, from the dew and the sunshine. Our Government had grown out of the character of the people. What that character was was evinced in the practice of the Government—unbroken, unchangeable—not heterogeneous, but all of one color and character, from beginning to end; a Government which Governor Boutwell, of Massachusetts, a Democrat, never suspected of being a sentimentalist, nor of being deluded by any over-fondness for Liberty—a government which Gov. Boutwell had within a month described to him (Mr. Phillips) as in his opinion literally a compromise against justice. Against that compromise, he (the Governor) went on to say the object of every honest man must be to marshal the public opinion of the North. Within twenty years it would be settled with which side the victory would rest, whether the government passed into a despotism, or whether subverted Liberty ruled in these thirty-one States. Now, if that was the character which a Democrat high in office, never suspected of Anti-Slavery leanings, gave of the government, it certainly should surprise no one that an Abolitionist, with his eye constantly fixed on the essential tendency of the government, should be willing to ignore the parchment and judge only by the fruits. He judged, both in the Church and State, by the fruits, His friend, Mr. P. Pillsbury, had read them very properly and with great emphasis and force the speeches and resolutions of religious conventions and eminent divines. He (Mr. Phillips) did not try the Christianity of this nation in Mr. Pillsbury's method. His method was different. If he had a vase of nitric acid and into it he put a mass of chalk, he knew there would be agitation. If there was not, it was not chalk he put in. So if, into a nation of sinners, he dropped Christianity, there would be agitation. If there was not, it was not Christianity he had dropped in. [Applause.] Now, when he walked up and down New-York, Philadelphia, Boston or Cincinnati, the queen-cities of these States, and looked up to the stately piles of popular fashionable religion, fine churches cushioned in the affectionate confidence of a people the corner stone of whose government was to smother the prejudice, as they termed it, which makes a Christian love his fellow man, and whose test of allegiance was to hunt slaves—when, from the decency of Washington to the bottomless pit of Frank Pierce—[applause and laughter]—he dropped into such a Government 40,000 churches and witnessed no commotion, he could not be mistaken in the character of the Government and therefore he must be mistaken in the character of the Church. (Loud applause.) So he judged of the State. His friend, Mr. Higginson, thought the Underground Railroad a weakness. It was so. He thought it a badge of disgrace. He (Mr. Phillips) knew it. He was trying to get rid of the yoke; he dare not get rid of it at the expense of the slave. He dare not say to the fugitive who dare not tell his own name in the streets of Boston that it would be safe for him to stay there. His rights were haunted by the vision of Anthony Burns carried down State-street amid 2,000 muskets borne by the best blood of the Boston churches. And while that vision lasted he dared not trust the fugitive slave in the shadow of those steeples. But he would do his way as he (Mr. Higginson) would do his. He loved beyond expression those Boston pavements over which his mother held up his baby footsteps, and if God granted him the time and the power he would yet make them sacred enough to shelter the footstepe of the slave. [Loud and prolonged applause.] But now, while these facts stared him in the face, he must, as Mr. Higginson did, accept the Underground Railroad, for they could not ignore facts. Three years ago in the Senate, their favorite statesman, Wm Seward, accepted the Southern challenge. He said in words as nearly as he (Mr. Phillips) could remember: "Gentlemen of the Slave States, come on. There is no avoiding your challenge. I accept it in the name of Liberty. Let us fight out the struggle on the virgin soil of Kansas, and God give the victory to that side which is stronger in numbers as it is in right!" The exalting tone in which he accepted that challenge, what had three years said of it? Kansas beyond all doubt, as he (Mr. Phillips) thought, would come in as a Slave State, stronger as we had been in numbers stronger as we had been in right. In the language of the Old Book "on the side of the oppressor there was power." And that power rested its conquest on the virgin soil of Kansas.

Far West, from Oregon, as they had learned, from private letters, this very month there was to be framed a constitution which would undoubtedly be a slave constitution. Under this Administration Cuba was to be the jewel wrenched from the crown of Spain; Texas to be divided into two or three Slave States, and if Southern signs were to be trusted, the slave trade revived, and the stigma of illegality and piracy stricken from the Statute Book against it. Who would say that the North could prevent aught of this? Where had she succeeded? Where was the simple instance in which the North had succeeded? The stronger we were in numbers. Yes, stronger in right? Doubtless. But the world was not ruled by numbers. The day was far distant when the world was to be ruled by a majority. He thought it was no unfair statement of the Anti Slavery position to say this: that within the last 20 years the Anti Slavery idea had grown beyond all expectation. Nobody, however sanguine, could have hoped to have had a greater advance. It took a great while to plant an idea. We were too much apt to be in a hurry. Oaks didn't grow in a day. It took good 2,000 years, it used up a whole people, to plant one single idea, the unity of the God-head. [Applause.] The Jewish people and the whole effort of the Old Testament had been used up, he might say reverently, in the one Almighty purpose, to plant that one single thought in the breast of the human race. (Hear, hear.) So far in this country it has taken two centuries, all the experience, all the heroism of two centuries, to implant in the American heart this idea of the sovereignty of the nation—national independence. They might subdue Americans to almost anything, but there was one thing he firmly believed to which they could never bend them, and that was, to be the vassal of a foreign State. It has taken two centuries to write that idea in the very blood of the American race, and, in his opinion, that was the only thing which this nation had learned in two centuries. How long it would take to teach them the sovereignty of the individual he did not know, but that was the idea which the Anti Slavery Society's enterprise was laboring to plant in the American conscience and heart. They must not be in too much of a hurry. They were gaining fast enough, but the Government was gaining in the same ratio, the organization strengthened itself in the same proportion. Within the last twenty years every triumph of institutions had been on the side of the South; every triumph of ideas had been on our side. But, at the same time, ideas made but slow headway against a rich population and an active organization. Mr. Phillips proceeded to discuss the effects of a dissolution of the Union, in so far as the mere suppression of the governing organization was concerned, and argued that the character of the race, and the system of State and town government, would be effectual bars to anarchy. The North, he continued, is tied to the Constitution by its love of law. The South has no such love, but has only a disrespect of law. The first elements of victory were not to be sought for in cannon and muskets, but in the hearts of those who went to battle for the right. He did not care for political parties, for those who were Republicans, or those who believed in the manhood of James Buchanan. What thought South Carolina of the Constitution? Goethe said: "If you plant an oak in a flower-pot, one of two things will happen—either the oak will be dwarfed, or the flower-pot will break." So it was with Slavery and the Constitution. But John Hancock could give the sublime answer, that George the Third might have heard across the Atlantic: "Never mind our property; never mind our real estate; let the cannon beat down Boston." Suppose, when asked whether Boston should be spared, he had said: "Oh, cannonade her, but don't knock my house down." Suppose "Old Put" had so acted, or Wellington, in Spain. Suppose the latter, instead of saying, as he did, "What will they think of us in England? God's earth will remain, but we shall be dishonored,"—suppose he had said, "Fire on the enemy, but spare that shelter, that hull." What then? Or suppose Lord Baeoham, defending the Queen, had yielded her cause to the popular clamor, where would he have been now? Respecting Republicanism, he had something to say. The Republicans were afraid to meet the question of Slavery. Like the victims in the isle of Vathek, they went about, every man concealing his own heart. No Republican dare tell in speech to his fellow that there was a revolution impending. Yet the country had been almost paralyzed by the Dred Scott case, and the Lemon case was yet undecided. If decided as there was most reason to believe, it would complete the triumph of Southern aggression. But no Slave Law must be obeyed. He wanted Massachusetts especially to say that no Slave Law whatever should be obeyed. He would make the soil of Massachusetts so hot that the slaveholder would sooner go down to his birth-place, Hell, than come to Massachusetts.

Mr. Phillips narrated the anecdote told by Jonah Barrington, how that fifty years ago, in Ireland, they used in the houses of the wealthy, to pad the walls a foot thick, so that drunken guests might not hurt themselves as they stumbled out of doors. Such, he argued, is the present condition of American politics. The North has to pad itself with cotton to prevent the South from striking its head against the dangerous places, and going out of the Union. The South thought nothing in the North was good. Once in the presence of Prentice, of Louisville, a Southerner spoke of "the damned North." Prentice showed him, that from New-York, Boston, Lowell, and other Northern cities came every article of clothing which he wore, and that if he depended on the South for garments, he would have to sit down a naked man.

Mr. Phillips retired amidst a burst of applause, and the meeting adjourned to assemble again in the evening.

The Staten Island Quarantine Rebellion—Letter From Judge Cropsey.

RICHMOND, Tuesday, May 11, 1857.

To the Editor of the New York Daily Times:

SIR: In your paper of this day you charge me with going to the Commissioners of Police and threatening them and their agents with lynch-law if they should come here to ferret out the incendiaries who fired the Wolfe farm buildings.

I know that we have to deal with men who are seeking to fasten this incubus upon us for their own personal interests, to the great injury of our citizens, and that they, having no good reasons to offer for or in justification of their unholy acts, will seek to impugn our motives and misrepresent our words and actions. But that a paper such as yours, claiming respectability, should be lent to their aid, and publish a gross libel on me without the least authority, is more than I had a right to expect.

What are the facts? I have not only not seen the Commissioners of Police since the fire, but have never exchanged a word with either of them, nor is either of them personally known to me, nor have I ever exchanged a word with any member of the present Police of your City on this subject; nor have I ever expressed a wish to any person that my actions in this matter should have been otherwise than they have been.

I do not mean to enter into a newspaper controversy with these men, but will lay before the public a brief statement of the course we have pursued and the course that has been pursued toward us.

While we were supposing that the principles of the last Fall campaign would be honestly carried out, (viz: the removal of Quarantine from Staten Island,) they were in the most secret manner arranging their plans to establish it at this place, and not until the plot had been consummated did we find it out as it afterwards appeared.

We then about the 3d of April commenced to lay our complaints before the Governor; a public meeting was called, a Committee of twenty appointed to lay before the Governor and Commissioners our complaints. This duty was performed by twelve of us. The Governor gave us a patient hearing, and declared at its close that he had not before any knowledge of the great interest involved. This was on the 15th of April. Why was this? Why was it that all of our citizens, some of whom were deeply interested, kept entirely ignorant of what was going forward? We had written before to the Governor. We had one of our citizens on the Commission to remove.

When these facts were fully known, was any other feeling but that of a high degree of excitement to be expected? And when all hope of avoiding this great wrong had fled, and when it is considered that our citizens have more than half a million of dollars of property about this place which may be destroyed and must be, or their lives put in the greatest danger from daily contact with the diseases that may be brought there, is it any wonder then that our citizens are desperate? It would be a wonder if they were not.

In our interview with the Governor we stated facts and left conclusions to be drawn by him and associates. But Ex-Senator Cooley, who was accidentally present, made some remarks, at the close of which he said that he did not believe a quarantine could be established at this place. That the interests of the inhabitants were so great, and so many would be injuriously affected thereby, that the most determined resistance would be made; besides, it was a most unfit place for the purpose, and would be a great injury to the commercial community.

Why not charge Ex-Senator Cooley with threats; he used plainer language than any member of the Committee. His motives have been impugned by them; and, if it suited their interests to proceed further with him, they would do so.

In another place in the same paper I am made to caution the Commissioners on Saturday last, that, if they were caught there, they would be lynched. This, also, is incorrect. I called to see Mr. Hall, he having expressed a wish to see me. I did not find him in when I first called; but I saw Bowne, during which I cautioned him against being caught by those who felt themselves injured by his acts. For I feared if such an occurrence took place he might receive a personal injury. And notwithstanding, you may construe my warnings into a threat, which it was not, I shall continue to give them whenever I think there is cause.

I now ask and demand of you the publication of this paper over my signature as some reparation for the injury you have done me by thus improperly using my name. Yours, H. B. CROPSEY.

N. B.—I would also state that after my interview with Bowne on Saturday, I met Mr. Hall, and had with him a very pleasant interview.

The Washington Epidemic.

NEW-YORK, Monday, May 11, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: I am surprised to see in your columns a communication signed by Wm. W. Hubbell, giving utterance to the following remarks: "I suspect that some of the slaves there gave the poison intentionally, in revenge for the defeat of their party, and to cripple or destroy the President and his friends, or persons supporting the elected party."

The above objectionable remarks are extracted from the communication of a Philadelphia correspondent in relation to the "Poisoning at Washington."

Now, Sir, having been an occupant of a room on the east wing of the National Hotel, Washington, at the time of Mr. Buchanan's first visit, during the latter part of January, 1857, I should be pleased to communicate that I regularly partook of meals at the public table without experiencing any ill effects; but on the contrary, I did perceive a deadly and disagreeable smell about said premises, particularly along the west wing, contiguous to the bar-room and privy of said hotel. So much so that I took occasion to speak to the proprietor of the hotel of the subject—advising him to use remedies in order to destroy said deadly smells.

Having been in the room set aside for Mr. Buchanan—being temporarily occupied by the gentlemen connected with the Submarine Telegraph—you can well imagine my surprise on returning to the City of New-York, and within a few days having my prediction verified by a public notice of Mr. Buchanan's sickness, and the astounding facts which have since appeared from time to time, during the past three months. Yours, respectfully, J. D.

Omnibus Fares.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The New-York public undoubtedly possesses an extraordinary and uncommon share of patience and good nature, or it would never submit so tamely and unmoved to the manifold and outrageous imposition practiced upon it by those who pretend to cater for its benefit and convenience. I would occupy too much of your valuable space to enumerate in detail all the various grievances which our citizens endure with the spirit of true martyrdom, but I will select one from the catalogue which is the source of no inconsiderable degree of discomfort and annoyance. I refer to the labor which passengers riding in Omnibuses are daily performing without a particle of compensation from the proprietors, who reap the benefit. It appears that it is now customary to pay your fare as you enter the omnibus. The gentleman who happens unfortunately to be seated near the pigeon hole where the money is received is obliged, by courtesy, to act the part of money collector, and literally may he said to work his passage by handing to the driver the various fares of those who enter the vehicle from time to time. Now, this is anything but a pleasant task, and your politeness and good nature is severely tried in passing through this ordeal. Besides, you often receive short change, and, if for a lady, you are subjected to the unpleasant alternative of engaging in an altercation about the matter with an abusive driver and before an omnibus full of passengers

CHIEF JUSTICE OAKLEY.

Proceedings of the Courts in his Memory.

SUPERIOR COURT.

The Superior Court room was crowded as early as eleven o'clock yesterday morning, by members o the bar, convened to show their respect for the memory of Chief Justice OAKLEY, who died Monday night, at the age of 74. Amid profound silence, WM. CURTIS NOYES, Esq , arose and said:

Upon coming into Court this morning I was pained to hear, as I have no donbt all of my brethren also were pained to hear, of the decease of the Chief Justice of this Court. I beg leave to mention it to your Honors, for the purpose of asking that the Court adjourn, as a fitting testimonial to the great professional and judicial merits of the deceased. My earliest recollections are connected with Chief Justice Oakley, for I remember that he was the first lawyer that I ever heard address a deliberative body, and I was struck even in my boyhood with the ponderous sense which characterized all that he said.

His professional reputation goes back for a period of nearly 50 years, and his judicial reputation covers a space of 30 years. His loss, almost having regard to his great talents, and to his very large experience, is certainly a public calamity, and the inquiry now is upon every lip who is to fill his place? We cannot hope, Sir—all the members of the Bar, and I think your Honors will concur with the sentiment—we cannot hope at present to fill his place successfully; for there were few minds so logical, few men with so much learning, and, above all, few men with the strong common sense which he possessed. Without going at large, therefore, into the melancholy circumstances connected with his decease, I have to move that the Court adjourn out of respect to his memory.

Mr. Francis B. Cutting—I rise, if the Court please, under sentiments of the most profound grief, to second the motion that my learned brother has just made to the Court. It is not upon this occasion that I propose to say anything in reference to the great calamity that has befallen the public, or to refer particularly to the eminence of him whose death has taken place among us. A great and powerful mind has passed unexpectedly to all of us, and this bar upon assembling this morning have been struck, so that profound silence and grief reign throughout, upon hearing the melancholy intelligence that has been brought. I trust that this bar will take occasion at once to manifest that respect for the memory of the illustrious dead that all so profoundly feel, and upon the adjournment of this Court we shall meet informally for the purpose of making such arrangements as are necessary and proper for the purpose of testifying our respect for the departed Judge.

I therefore second the motion, if the Court please that we adjourn.

Judge Duer—It is needless to say how greatly we all feel the loss which the community have sustained by the death of the late Chief-Justice, but that sense is swallowed up in our personal feelings of regret for our friend, associate, and brother, between whom and ourselves a feeling of entire and unreserved confidence has lasted for so many years.

I shall probably find a more fitting occasion of expressing my feelings upon the subject, and of stating my own personal knowledge of the intellectual and moral qualities of the deceased, as I am perhaps the oldest friend now living to whom he has been known from his entrance at the bar until his final departure. The motion that has been made is now granted, and will be entered upon the minutes of this Court. It is proper to give notice here that there will be a meeting of the bar at 1 o'clock in the Supreme Court Room.

The Court then adjourned.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Hon. Judge Mitchell, Roosevelt, Strong and Emott.

This Court was crowded to excess at 10 o'clock. When the Judges took their seats, Mr. W. D. FIELD rose and said: May it please the Court, I move an adjournment. It has been known to the Court that since the adjournment of yeeterday, the Chief Justice of the Superior Court, the oldest of our Judges and the Father of the Bar, has died. Until lately the Chief Justice, though full of years, has shown no signs of decay. His eyes were not dim nor his natural forces exhausted. A long time prominent at the bar, actively engaged in political life, and as a member of our National Legislature, he ascended the bench in 1829, and from that time to this he has dispensed justice in that Court. For more than a quarter of a century he has worn the ermine, having passed a judicial life nearly as long as that of Lord MANSFIELD. The earliest recollections of most of us who are now practicing at the Bar are associated with his venerable form on the bench of justice. His great vigor of mind, his logical reason, his profound knowledge, and his unerring sense of justice are known throughout this whole community; but the honorable head which so long seemed to us the representative of justice, is laid low, never to rise until the resurrection. At last "the silver cord is severed, and the golden bowl is broken." It is fitting that on such an occasion we should suspend our ordinary professional labors, so that we may reflect upon the fate which awaits us all, and mingle our tears with those who are nearest to him. Let us adjourn.

Mr. Noyes having seconded the motion, Judge MITCHELL, with a few appropriate remarks, stated that he concurred in the observations which had been made by the gentlemen who had addressed the Court, and adjourned until to day (Wednesday) 12½ o'clock.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT.

BEFORE HON. JUSTICE EMOTT.

Mr. LARocque announced the death of Judge OAKLEY, and moved an adjournment of the Court. Mr. JOHN D. SHERWOOD seconded the motion. He desired to express the feelings, in so far as he could, of the junior members of the bar. No one who had practiced in the courts of this City but could hear testimony of his worth, and had experienced his urbanity of temper. He was the incarnation of Justice. He had left a vacancy which it would not be easy to fill. His history was part of the history of the State, and his name was identified with the Court over which he so long and so nobly presided.

EX-Judge DEAN said that the deceased had been a prominent lawyer in Dutchess County, whence he (the speaker) came. He referred to his early association with Judge OAKLEY, and said that at another time and place more extended tribute would be paid to his memory.

Judge EMOTT remarked that though it was perhaps needless for him to add anything, he could not refrain from saying a word. He, too, was born in Dutchess County, and his father had been succeeded by Judge OAKLEY in Congress. The deceased stood as his sponsor at the heptismal font. To the regret which all felt in the loss of so able a public officer, be added regret at the loss of an acquaintance and a friend.

The Court was then adjourned until this morning at eleven o'clock, at which time they will sit until 12½ o'clock, when the Court will further adjourn to the public meeting of the Bar.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.

BEFORE HON. JUSTICE NELSON.

A. L. JORDAN, Esq., announced the death of Judge OAKLEY in a few appropriate remarks, and moved an adjournment of the court in respect to his memory. His honor accordingly adjourned the Court until 11 o'clock to-day.

DISTRICT COURT.

BEFORE HON. JUSTICE BETTS.

The District-Attorney moved the adjournment of this court. He briefly spoke of his intercourse with the deceased, from his early manhood until the day of his death. He highly eulogized his mental and intellectual powers, and adjourned the Court until Tbursday morning.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

BEFORE HON. JUSTICES DALY AND INGRAHAM.

On the opening of the Court this morning, WILLIAM FULLERTON, Esq., in compliance with the request the Court, announced the death of Chief Justice OAKLEY, as follows:

May it please the Court: Only that I have been requested to do so by your Honor, I would not take upon myself the duty of announcing in this place, the melancholy intelligence of the death of Hon. THOS. J. OAKLEY, and to move this Court that it do now adjourn out of respect to his memory.

Having just been informed of his sudden death, I cannot find fitting words with which to express the grief I feel at the loss which all have sustained in the death which has now arrested our attention. Judge OAKLEY has for a very long period of time filled a large space in the public and judicial history of the country. He was the cotemporary of such men as WEBSTER, WIRT and PINCKNEY when a member of the legal profession, and his name is most honorably mentioned in the history of those great legal conflicts in which, with those men, he was engaged. For more than a quarter of a century past he has adorned the bench of the Superior Court of this City, and has left behind him an example, which, if few can imitate, yet all will take pleasure in honoring and respecting.

I doubt not, Sir, that your Honor will be pleased to grant the motion I have to submit, which is that this Court stand adjourned, as a mark of respect to the great and illustrious man whose death will be esteemed a public calamity.

Judge DEAN said, Sir: In rising to second the motion which has been made, I do not do it only as a member of the Bar. To me, the name of Judge OAKLEY is associated with the earliest recollections. A native of Dutchess County, where he resided until he occupied the leading position at its Bar—represented it in the State Legislature and at least twice in Congress. It is there that his brothers and sisters and relatives reside, who have been and are among my acquaintances and friends. So that while I can join as a lawyer in any tribute of respect to the memory of this distinguished and venerable Judge, yet mingled in my mind at least must be these associations, which are awakened by the place of my nativity and the recollections of what I so early heard of his triumphs as an advocate.

The inhabitants of that county, which claims the honor of his birth, and which was the theatre of his earliest exertions and success, will mourn his death. And as a native of that county, I could not refrain from saying thus much. At a more appropriate place and time, when a general meeting of the Bar shall be called, older members of the profession will pronounce that eulogium on the deceased which his pure life and exalted talents as a Judge deserve. But I could not second this motion without giving an expression, feeble as it is, to those sentiments of respect and reverence which are cherished for the deceased by the citizens of his native county. I beg leave, therefore, if your Honor please, to second the motion.

Judge DALY, after a few remarks, in which he referred to the great moral worth and legal attainments of the deceased, and of the great loss that the community had experienced in his death, directed the Court to be adjourned.

MARINE COURT.

BEFORE HON. JUSTICES MAYNARD AND M'OAETHY.

Judge MAYNARD, in terms of appropriate eulogy and deep regret, adjourned the Marine Court simultaneously with the rest. It had long been the custom, he said, of the Courts of this City and State, on the announcement of the death of any eminent jurist or member of the bar, to adjourn the Court out of respect for his memory He to whose memory this mark of respect was being paid on this occasion, had no superior on the Bench of this State, and hardly any equal at the Bar. To the reputation of that Court over which he presided, his great talents, his wisdom, his urbanity, his impartiality, and his industry, had largely contributed. It was, therefore, not simply as a mark of ordinary and formal courtesy, but from a conviction of duty, shared in by the members of the Bench and the Bar alike, that he (the Judge) now ordered an adjournment of the Court, as a feeble tribute to the virtues of the departed.

The Court of General Sessions also adjourned, on motion of the District-Attorney. Mr. HALL postponed his remarks, however, until a more fitting occasion.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Justices OSBORNE and BRENNAN presided at the Court of Special Sessions yesterday. No less than sixteen pickpockets, nearly all of them young lads, were tried, found guilty, and sentenced, each to the Penitentiary for six months. James McCarty, a "knuck," and an old offender, was brought up for assaulting officer Mount, on Saturday evening, at Wallack's Theatre. Mount swore he discovered the prisoner in the act of picking a gentleman's pocket, and at once seized him, but McCarty resisted and, by the aid of two associates, got off and ran away. The officer pursued, and overtaking McCarty again arrested him, when again he was assailed by the prisoner's friends and beaten about the head, but he clung to his man, and after a fierce struggle took him to the Eighth Ward Station-house. McCarty gave his occupation as a sailor. He was "sent up" for six months.

Ferdinand Siebira, a recruiting sergeant in the U. S. Army, was placed at the bar for assault and battery upon a Mrs. De Courcey, who appeared upon the stand, with both eyes blackened and swollen. She stated that on Sunday evening, while proceeding to her home, she was met by Siobra, who followed and insulted her with indecent language. At length, exasperated by his conduct, she turned upon and clapped him in the face. Siebira returned the blow, and inflicted serious injuries upon her. The Judge asked the prisoner what he had to say for himself. His counsel answered that he (Siebira) was on a spree when he committed the deed, and furthermore, that he was a recruiting sergeant in the United Stntes army; also, that he mistook the lady for a friend. The Judge inquired whether the prisoner was in the habit of treating his friends in that manner—striking them with his fists and blacking their eyes. Counsel answered it was not, but then he was on a "spree." Mr. De Courcey, husband of the complainant, here said that if he had had his say about the matter, the complaint never would have been made. He himself would have adjudged the case promptly and inflicted due punishment with dispatch. The associate Justices consulted a moment. Two months' imprisonment in the Penitentiary and a fine were spoken of, but sentence was finally deferred until Thursday, defendant being required to give bail. A man named Heffron stepped forward and expressed his willingness to become the prisoner's bondsman. Heffron had a black eye. He said it was given him by De Courcey, who suspected that he (Heffron) had hailed the defendant out of the Tombs, when arrested for the assault. Bail was taken.

George Brendt, who was discovered about daylight the other morning stealing vegetables from a neighbor's garden up town, was brought up to answer. It was shown that the garden in question had been robbed several times. Suspicion rested upon the prisoner. He was watched, and on Friday morning was caught just as he had plucked from the ground a large bunch of leeks. The prisoner had nothing to say. He was sentenced to Blackwell's Island for two months.

Mary Currin, Catharine Curry and John Clark were tried and found guilty of assults and battery, and were each sentenced to the Penitentiary for the space of one month.

Henry Doty was found guilty of a similar offence, and was sent to the Penitentiary for three months.

Joseph Eshmael got 3 months in the same place for the same offence.

Several other cases of assault and battery, and petty larceny, were laid over till Thursday.

The Court room was thronged during the proceedings with spectators, and friends of the complainants and defendants.

PROSPECTUS.

ELISHA KENT KANE.

A BIOGRAPHY.

BY WILLIAM ELDER.

In announcing the LIFE OF DR. KANE, we are but anticipating the wishes of the thousands and tens of thousands of the admirers of that great man.

His family have kindly placed in the hands of Dr. WM. ELDER all his manuscripts, journals, and other documents available for the preparation of an accurate and complete biography.

Having been a personal friend of the deceased, and enjoying a large share of his confidence, Dr. ELDER is well qualified to do full justice to the subject.

The work will be issued in one handsome octavo volume, and will equal in every respect the superb volumes of "Arctic Explorations," recently published. It will contain a new full-face portrait, executed on steel, as well as engravings of his residence, tomb, medals, &c.

In order to give this work a large circulation, it will be sold to subscribers at the low price of $1 50.

THE MORMONS.—THIS WEEK'S NUMBER of LIFE ILLUSTRATED has an interesting and instructive article about the Mormons—describing their origin, religion, government, what they are doing and the prospect.

It also contains several finely illustrated articles. Letter from my Garden, The West and Western Men, Sugar Making, and many others, all combining to make it one of the best numbers ever issued; and as it costs only four cents, no one should fail to buy it. Ask your newsman for it.

THE SUBSCRIBER WOULD RESPECTFULLY call the attention of his friends and the public, that after having been in business 25 years, is reluctantly forced to sell out on account of his sight failing. He will sell very low to reduce his stock, until he meets with a purchaser to buy him out; it will be well for the clergy and those that love literature to call and examine his stock, consisting of theological, historical and miscellaneous works; they would save a large per centage.

New-York Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1857.

Business of the Daily Times.

The increased circulation of the DAILY TIMES, and the excellent character of that circulation, combine to make it one of the best mediums in the City for all advertising which is addressed to families and the great body of the business community. The following statement, copied from our books, by the Cashier of the TIMES establishment, shows the very great increase in all departments of our business which has marked the present year:

CASH RECEIPTS OF THE NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES FROM APRIL 1 TO MAY 9.

	Advertising	Circulation.	Tot. Receipts.
1857.....	$30 045 51	$28 995 91	$43,891 42
1856.....	18,218 14	20,473 53	35,691 67
Increase.....	$4,877 37	$8,522 38	$7,699 75

This is an average increase over last year in cash receipts of over $1 530 per week, and shows conclusively that the prosperity of the TIMES is but just commencing. The pressure of advertisements has hitherto rendered it very difficult to give the full amount of reading matter which the public has a right to expect from a daily newspaper,—nor is it easy to do this while the price is kept at so low a mark. We have arrangements in progress, however, by which we hope this difficulty may be overcome.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Governor R. J. WALKER arrived in town last evening, on his way to Kansas. He was present at a dinner-party given to him by his friend Mr. KORNSTAMM, at the Astor House, and took occasion to make a very clear and explicit statement of the principles which would govern his administration in the Territory. He declared his fixed determination to do every thing in his power to secure for the people of the Territory a full, free and unbiassed vote upon the Constitution which might be offered for their acceptance. He believed this to be their right,—a right guaranteed to them by the fundamental law of the Territory, and by the Constitution of the United States, and he should consider it not only a point of law and of official duty, but a point of honor as a man and a gentleman, to do every thing in his power to secure them such a vote. All the other questions which had created dissension in the Territory he considered merely preliminary to this:—and if this were properly adjusted, he believed all dissension in the Territory would cease. The Governor's remarks were received with great favor. He remains in the City only a day or two, and will depart immediately for Kansas.

Danville, Penn., is at present the scene of great excitement, relative to two supposed cases of poisoning—one of a wife by her husband, and the other of a husband by his wife—the two alleged poisoners being suspected of a criminal connection. The bodies of the deceased persons have been exhumed, and an analysis of the contents of the stomachs is being had. The parties are named respectively CLARK and TWIGGS.

The National Quarantine Convention meets today in Philadelphia, having for its object the framing of a uniform system of Quarantine Laws for the ports of the United States. The deliberations of this Convention will be watched with interest by the inhabitants of our seaboard cities, as the results of the meeting are expected to exercise an important influence upon the general health.

A descent was made by the Boston Police yesterday on twelve lottery ticket dépôts, in six of which tickets of the Delaware State Lottery were found. Seven persons were arrested as agents. The descent was a very successful one, and might be profitably emulated in this locality.

The hill for the sale of the Main Line of the Pennsylvania Works has passed through both houses of the Legislature of that State, and awaits the signature of the Governor.

The Anniversaries opened "rich," yesterday. The streets swarmed with Sabbath School children in Sunday clothes, in processions with banners and badges, going to and from their 3 o'clock meetings. In the evening, the general Anniversary of the New-York Union was held. The New-York Colonization Society, the American and Foreign Christian Union, the Port Societies had their Anniversaries. The Infirmary, of which the Misses Drs. BLAKWELL and Miss Dr. TARNOWSKI are at the head, had a very interesting opening Anniversary. The Anti-Slavery Extremists met all day again at the City Assembly Rooms, and talked treason eloquently.

There was a very large meeting held in the Park last evening, called for the purpose of obtaining a popular expression in relation to the recent acts of the Legislature, having special reference to the Government of the City of New-York. These acts were denounced as tyrannical. The rights of the City had been infringed, the resolutions and the speakers said, and the enactments ought to be resisted, "peacefully if we can—forcibly if we must."

The new Police Commissioners yesterday appointed WELCOME R. BEEBEE, Esq., to be Superintendent of the Police under the new law. We understand Mr. BEEBEE has accepted the office. He has had a good deal of experience in the administration of the criminal law, not only as a practicing lawyer, but as City Judge, and is a man of decided energy and efficiency of character.

The appointment of Excise Commissioners—an office created by the new Liquor Law was effected in this City yesterday—the appointing board consisting of but two persons, since the late Chief Justice OAKLEY was to have been the third. The Excise Board is constituted as follows: ROBERT J. HAWS, till 1863; JOHN KERR, till 1861; WM. J. HASKELL, till 1859. For Brooklyn the Commissioners are: WILLETT J. JONES, till 1863; JOHN WYCKOFF, till 1861; THOMAS MURPHY, till 1859.

All the Courts in the City were yesterday adjourned on account of the death of Chief Justice OAKLEY, of the Superior Court. Short addresses were made in the different Courts, by Messrs. NOYES, CUTTING, DEAN, LAROCQUE, SHERWOOD and others. A public meeting of the bar will be held to-day at 11 o'clock in the Supreme Court, to express the sense of the great loss sustained by the community in the death of Judge OAKLEY.

The trial of Mrs. DECKER, who was indicted by the Grand Jury of Richmond County, S. I., last Winter, for manslaughter in the first degree, in causing the death of the girl ANNA HILTON, has been laid over till November next, in consequence of her confinement, which it is expected will soon take place.

An inquest was held yesterday upon the body of Mrs. EDWINA COLDWELL, who on Monday afternoon committed suicide at her residence, No. 18 Leonard-street, by swallowing a solution of silver. She did it in presence of her husband, to whom she had been married only two months, because he had spoken to her unpleasantly.

JOHN MORRISSEY, the pugilist, was arrested yesterday and held in $1,000, on charges of assault and battery preferred against him by two Fifth Ward Policemen, whose power he defied on the occasion of his late drunken and shooting exploit at the Girard House.

The election of officers of the Mechanics' Institute took place last evening, and resulted in the choice of the regular ticket, with a few exceptions WILLIAM MILES was elected President.

The Tammany Society organized last evening WM. D. KENNEDY was elected Father of the Council, and RICHARD WINNIE, Scribe.

The annual meeting of the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association was held last evening. The annual report was read by the President, who mildly condemns the agitation of the Slavery question, and comments generally upon the favorable progress of the Society. The lecture and concert experiment proved a loss financially. Fortunately an enterprising Committee had charge of the matter and they made up the deficiency from other sources than drawing upon the Treasury. There are at present 491 members—an increase of 152 during the last year. The Library consists of 1,144 volumes, 200 of which have been added during the year. The receipts of the year amounted to $2,010 20; expenses, $1,436 88. Officers were elected for the ensuing year. Mr. GEORGE A. BELL was elected President. Fifty-four new members were admitted last evening.

The running of Sunday cars in Brooklyn was decided upon yesterday by the Directors of the Railroad Company, by a vote of 8 to 4. The cars will be run for three months as an experiment—leaving Fulton Ferry at 9 o'clock, A. M., and running at intervals of 30 minutes until 9½ o'clock, P. M., and oftener if found necessary for people who wish to go to or return from church.

The firemen of the Western District of Brooklyn met last evening in Firemen's Hall, and elected Commissioners, under the recent act of the Legislature, placing the Department under the management of five Commissioners.

A young lady about sixteen years of age, named A. F. KISSAM, has been missing from Jamaica, Long Island, since Monday morning. A committee of twenty-four citizens are in pursuit of her.

"The New-York Times."

We yesterday laid the corner-stone of the building hereafter to be occupied by the TIMES Establishment, upon the property recently covered by the Brick Church. We shall proceed immediately and prosecute with all possible dispatch the erection of this building,—which we hope we shall be able to occupy by the first of November next. It will have a front of 60 feet on Spruce-street,—95 on Nassau and over 100 on Park Row. It will be five stories high,—constructed of stone and will form one of the finest architectural ornaments in the lower part of the City. The entire front on Spruce-street will be occupied as the TIMES' publication office; we shall have abundant vault room for our Engines, Lightning-Presses and the storage of paper,—and we expect to have, when the whole is completed, the largest, most imposing and most elegant newspaper establishment in the United States. We have also ordered from HOE & Co. a supply of his new and magnificent TEN-CYLINDER PRESSES, which will be ready very soon after the completion of our new building and which will enable us to work off our Morning Edition in time to serve our City subscribers at an earlier hour than we have hitherto been able to do. These improvements and extensions of our business will involve an outlay of not far from $200,000. We are enabled to make them in consequence of the rapid and constantly increasing prosperity of the TIMES. Although it has not yet been published six years, it has attained a circulation, a degree of pecuniary prosperity and of legitimate influence decidedly superior,—it is safe to say,—to those ever attained within the same time of any other journal ever established in the United States.

It is superfluous to add any expression of our gratitude to the public of this City and of the Country at large, for the favor with which the TIMES has been received. No labor or expense will be spared to merit an increase of that favor in the future. We shall endeavor to make the TIMES equal in all respects and in some decidedly superior to any other newspaper in the City. In every department we shall seek to increase its interest and attractiveness. It will be hereafter in its political conduct, entirely independent of all Political Parties—judging all events and all men upon their merits, and giving praise and censure, support and opposition, where either may be deserved, by a strict and impartial regard to the public welfare. It will not be reckless or independent of principle in its political discussions,—but will aim to conduct them always with dignity, discretion, and a due sense of responsibility. But it will not receive its guidance or inspiration from the dictates of any political party, nor consult the fortunes of any political aspirants in preference to the requirements of the public good. It will appeal always to the great body of the people against mere party projects and factious schemes, and will seek constantly to represent and to advocate the welfare of the masses rather than promote the designs of those who seek to use them for their own aggrandizement. While we know that it is by this course alone that success is to be deserved, we believe that it is only thus also that it can be attained

The Bay Islands and the Treaty.

We have never had any doubt as to the crux of the difficulty between the British Government and our own in regard to the Dallas-Clarendon treaty and its modifications. When the amended treaty was sent back to England, we spoke our mind very plainly on the propriety and policy of such a vexatious and unjustifiable measure as we believed the Senate to have adopted in so altering the phraseology of the original draft of the treaty as to exclude the notion of any assent by the United States to the Anti-Slavery proviso of the Convention between Great Britain and Honduras for the cession of the Bay Islands. Of course we regarded this interference of our own Government between two foreign States as a somewhat with the terms of a mutual arrangement with extraordinary departure from the plain proposition and necessary limitations of the negotiations between Great Britain and ourselves. But we assumed that the modification in question was nothing more than a factious maneuver of the Southern fanatics, and that, as it could not interfere with the operation of the Convention between England and Honduras, it would not be suffered to delay the ratification of the Treaty between England and ourselves.

It now appears that the Senatorial manipulation of this imbroglio has been received more seriously in Great Britain than was expected by the august manipulators themselves, or by anybody else on this side of the Atlantic. It has been regarded not only by the pugnacious PALMERSTON, but by the pacific Cl[illegible] also, as a deliberate and dangerous attempt to keep open a Southern gateway for the expansion of Slavery, and for the convenience of impecunious gentlemen addicted to giving "surprise parties" on the territory of their neighbors. And as it is professedly an interference with the right of Great Britain to form such treaties with other independent States on this continent as she and they may please to draw up, it has been repelled at the shortest notice and in the most decisive style.

If the British Ministers are right in their estimate of the bearing of this modification (the text of which, be it remembered, has never been fully published to the world)—if it be indeed so intended and devised as really to put in doubt the right of England to offer, and of Honduras to accept, an arrangement for the cession of the Bay Islands, by which Slavery shall be forever excluded from these islands, then we may be sure that the action of Lord PALMERSTON'S Government will be sustained by the people of Great Britain, as it ought to be, heartily, at all risks and to any end.

If, however, the Ministers of Queen VICTORIA have attached a greater weight to this provision than it will bear, then it is certainly possible that their objections to it may be withdrawn on a proper explanation being made to them of the nature and force of the terms to which they now refuse to accede.

But in either case it must be owned that the attitude of our Government is not one with which the country ought to be satisfied.

What have we to do with the Bay Islands? We have never advanced any claim to the possession of them. We have never professed any intention of appropriating them.

We objected to the occupation of Ruatan by Great Britain because we held that occupation by her to be inconsistent with the terms of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. We required of her that she should put a stop to the dissensions between us by a cession to Honduras, a third and neutral party, of possessions to which Honduras had always advanced a claim. To this requisition from us, Great Britain finally assented. There our concern with the matter ended. How Great Britain should cede the Bay Islands, and how Honduras should receive them, were matters for the consideration of the two contracting parties. If it is an infringement upon the independence of Honduras for that State to consent to a provision excluding Slavery from the Islands which she receives from Great Britain, surely we are not called upon to assent for Honduras what Honduras does not choose to assert for herself. If our Government has seriously undertaken to interfere with the efficiency of the Anti-Slavery clause in the Anglo-Honduras Convention, then our Government has been guilty of an act as foolish as it was unwarrantable. If on the other hand our Government has only attempted to adulate the native Buncombe by a semblance of opposition to that clause, which was expected to vanish away in the course of public negotiation, what language would be too strong to describe a piece of diplomacy so silly and so disgraceful?

Mr. BUCHANAN has promised the country an era of common sense, decency and patriotism. Abundant opportunities for the display of these qualities was assured to him by his thoughtful predecessor, and it was really quite superfluous in the Senate to afford him this fresh occasion for their manifestation.

The mischief, however, has been done, and we do sincerely trust that the President will make haste to redeem his pledges and to gratify public expectation by undoing it. It surely cannot be too late for him to learn that the actual position of affairs in Central America is not such as to justify an American Executive in throwing away the fairest possible chances of securing our legitimate influence in that quarter of the world, on an insane attempt to manufacture illegitimate relations for the benefit of the Pro Slavery extremists of the South.

It is flatly impossible for us to prevent Great Britain from filling the position in Central America to which she is fairly entitled as the first commercial nation of the Globe, and the second in rank of American Powers. This every statesman knows, as every schoolboy might know it, and the only matter open to consideration by ourselves is whether we shall take up a policy of cordial cooperation with England in affairs of importance to both Powers, or whether we shall take up an attitude of absurd and unprofitable isolation. If Lord NAPIER has really made a proposition for a new treaty, let that proposition be met by the Administration fairly and upon its merits, with no arriere-pensées of anxiety for the possible future of a possible slaveholding Southern Republic—but with a frank, business-like and honorable regard to the permanent interests of the existing Union, the honor of the American character, and the legitimate expansion of the American power.

Trial by Jury.

There is a controversy raging in the columns of the French Press regarding English and American law, arising out of the famous exploit of BUSTEED, in which there is, to be sure, a large amount of ignorance displayed, particularly by that great light of imperial journalism, M. GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC,—but from which there are, nevertheless, some few things to be learnt. Very few French writers, we admit, have ever said anything touching the institutions of foreign nations very well worth the trouble of remembering, because probably no people in the world possesses in a less degree the art of penetrating beyond the surface of national life, living in the spirit and seeing through the eyes of the men whose manners they study: and we know of nothing harder for a Frenchman to understand than the English Common Law and system of procedure. DE TOCQUEVILLE, who has written so wisely and so well of all else that concerns us, stumbles and stammers whenever he touches upon our laws, and, as a general rule, is content to limit his comments upon them to an expression of astonishment at their apparent disorder and bizarrerie.

It is not necessary, however, that a foreigner should understand us thoroughly, in order to direct our attention to many things in our arrangements that need mending. He may see much that is amiss to which we ourselves are blinded by habit or prejudice, and his detection of the evil is none the less valuable because he may find himself unable to indicate its real source. For instance, when M. GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC comments upon the disorders which mark the administration of justice in this country, the impunity which attends the commission of crimes, and the rude license of speech and behavior by which the bar has in [illegible] recently made itself notorious, though we may safely laugh when he ascribes them to our barbarous laws, which, according to him, wise, happy and well-governed France repudiated two centuries ago in disgust, we must not, nevertheless, altogether disregard fault-finding which emanates from a country in which America has long been taunted with traditional partiality. His remedies are doubtless good for nothing, but he sees the disease probably more clearly than we ourselves.

Besides the deterioration of the Bench under the operation of popular election, and of the bar under the operations of farcical admissions—the plague spot on our criminal procedure is the yearly increasing inefficiency and clumsiness of the jury system. To discuss the advantages of trial by Jury with a rabid Bonapartist, is an absurdity of which no American could be guilty. The Jury, in the abstract, is something a good deal dearer to most people in this country than their lives, but we begin to entertain grave doubts as to how long it will retain its hold upon the affections of the people, after the men who "pass upon our lives," and dispose of our property, especially in our large cities, cease to represent any portion of the honesty, education, and intelligence of the country, and invariably represent its coarseness, ignorance, neediness and greed. We must not forget that the growth of commerce and manufactures, the increase of emigration, the spread of railways, is doing away with that state of pastoral purity and simplicity, that austere though rude virtue, by which our rural population, particularly in New-England, were, in former times, distinguished. The country is beginning every day to partake more and more of the characteristics of the City. Along with a larger amount of culture, wealth and comfort, it is acquiring a larger amount of lawlessness and immorality. This is a fact there is no denying. One of its natural results is the general relaxation of restraints founded on public opinion, and the clogging of many of those portions of our legal machinery, which owe all their efficiency to the general good sense and integrity of the community. The most important of these is the Jury. If it be, as a general rule, a fair representation of the best elements of society, it is our greatest blessing. If, as its tendency is in in crowded and busy communities, like our own, it degenerates into an expression of the passions and prejudices, for the time being, of the least reputable portion of the populace, it can only work unmixed evil.

Jury service is one of the many public duties which the more enterprising and energetic and best educated portion of our citizens, will not attend to. Their private affairs occupy their time far too fully and too profitably for us to hope that if conscience will do nothing in the matter, the fear of a $25 fine will have any influence. The natural result is, that since the intelligent will not do the work, it falls into the hands of people of less character, less education, less scruple, and less to do, or, in other words, into the hands of "loafers." Our juries, especially in criminal cases, do not, we can safely say, in the vast majority of cases, afford anything like a fair specimen of the discriminating power, the acumen, the clearheadedness, honesty, the judicial-mindedness—if we may be allowed the phrase—of the mass of Americans. The men who try our criminals in cities like New-York—and we make this remark with no reference to any recent case—besides possessing a sort of sympathy with lawlessness of demeanor, and with outbursts of unbridled passion, are fitted neither by education nor by habits of life, to weigh evidence and strike a balance between conflicting appeals. We all know the consequences of this state of affairs. Street brawls, numerous cases of murder and manslaughter, scandals in court, demoralization of the police in the presence of the impunity which waits on crime, are all fruits of the repudiation by the best of our people of any share in the work of government. We hardly know what remedy to propose. It is vain to hope that men will become less selfish and more public-spirited while selfishness is so enormously profitable. One way of enlisting the national honesty and intelligence in the service of justice, would be to make exemption more expensive than work, but we confess we do not see much prospect of a change of this sort. In the meantime, we must only bear as we can the slurs which our disorders bring upon us.

War with the Mormons.

The victims of Mormon outrage and illegal violence, such as related in our columns on Monday last, are not found exclusively in the ranks of the church. We learn by conversation with a gentleman recently arrived from Great Salt Lake City, that BRIGHAM YOUNG no longer makes even a feint of recognizing any authority save his own,—any law save his will. No usurping despot ever waved his sceptre more imperiously over the head of his subject vassals, than does the Mormon High Priest over his superstitious followers and all who come within the reach of his power. When our informant left Salt Lake City he was threatening to drive all Gentiles out of his "kingdom," and his minions were burning or leveling the houses and destroying the property even of those of his followers who dared allow Gentiles to board with them, or who would not fully subscribe to and indorse the outrages committed by the more violent and abandoned of the Community "in the name of the Lord."

Thus it will be seen that Mormon theocracy has usurped unlimited dominion over a portion of United States Territory something like a thousand square miles in extent! Within this region the rights of American citizenship and the protection of Republican Government and law have been annihilated. This is no theory, but absolute fact. The Constitution is not merely decried in stump speeches or pulpit harangues, but is practically abrogated and displaced by the code Mormon. The principle and essence of law were long since subverted through the agency of Mormon juries, spies and assassins; but now even the form of law is discarded, and its ministers are insulted, abused and defied.

In this condition of affairs the Government at Washington cannot hesitate as to the proper course to be pursued. The alternatives are simple;—they are either acquiescence in the Mormon interpretation of "Popular Sovereignty," and submission to this blasting libel upon the American name, or the assertion of the Federal authority by whatever instrumentalities are most certain to secure and maintain its supremacy. The case is an unfortunate one beyond doubt; but it is before us, and must be dealt with as it is. To evade it, [illegible] the issue because of the trouble in[illegible] like hesitating about remedial [illegible] time of pestilence, because of the [illegible] necessity for such measures. We do not [illegible] that the remedy in the present case must be reached through scenes of blood; but even that must be met. It is no crusade against a religious faith that we are called to enter upon—but a war against treason, murder, arson, and rapine, perpetrated against the lives and peace of American citizens, under the cloak of religious bigotry and superstition. We are called upon to vindicate the freedom of religious opinion in the face of a theocracy which practically denies it, and prescribes degrading submission to its own behests and professed teachings as the price of life itself in a large district nominally covered by the American flag. It is not even proposed to suppress the "domestic institution" of Polygamy,—but only to maintain the supremacy of law, so as to protect American women from forcible debauch or other penalty for rejecting the disgusting advances of the hoary-headed wretches who uphold BRIGHAM'S throne.

It behooves Mr. BUCHANAN to make no miscalculation as to the means requisite for the subjection of the Salt Lake rebels. Half way measures will not accomplish it. They number over one hundred thousand, are well supplied with arms and ammunition, and commanded by a leader of uncommon energy, great cunning, and extraordinary power over his followers. All history teaches that religious fanaticism is as inconsiderate and as bravely reckless of danger as it is intolerant and exacting. Under YOUNG'S tuition the Mormons have successfully emulated the followers of MAHOMET, and receive every word which falls from his lips as the breath of inspiration. Implicit obedience to him is their first article of religious faith. Even the foulest crime committed at his bidding is a work of grace and title to everlasting blessedness; while non-compliance as surely dooms the trembling votary to an eternity of misery. There is no half-way. YOUNG has declared over and over again in the very presence of Federal authority, that full, entire, unquestioning acceptance of "the Gospel," as he blasphemously denominates the edicts of his impious will, is the only rule of faith. There must be no doubt, no discussion,—nothing but instant and absolute surrender of every power of mind, every prompting of conscience, virtuous instinct and self-respect, to the "law of the Lord" as declared through his lips, and made to minister to the most debasing passions and to ambition for slavish rule.

To all this his wretched followers tamely submit. To suppose they yield without secret struggles at times, is to doubt their humanity; but the power of religious fanaticism is paramount, and their superstitious dread of an eternity of woe through BRIGHAM'S agency, decides them to suffer anything in life which he may impose, looking forward to death for relief and the happiness which they no longer expect to find this side the grave. Thus we see exemplified here, upon Christian soil, though in still more degrading form, the tortures of Pagan idolaters, self-imposed in the hope of eternal salvation. It is with such a people that we have now to deal—a people steeped in fanaticism, enchained by superstition, and carefully schooled into bitter hate of the Government of the United States. It is idle to expect a peaceful solution of the problem before us, with these facts staring us in the face. Unless the lights of the past are delusive, and the effect of motives upon the mind of men differ at Great Salt Lake from similar influences elsewhere throughout the world's history, the new Governor of Utah will need at his back an armed force large enough to strike terror at once to the heart of Mormondom. With this auxiliary, and with judicious efforts to assure the seceders from Mormon treason of protection, the leaders may be awed into submission; but if they raise the banner of rebellion and choose the sword, the work before the troops will be found no child's play.

The Surplus Revenues of the Sinking Fund.

It will have been seen from the communication which was made on the 6th inst. by the Comptroller to the Common Council, that the Sinking Fund for the payment of the City debt "is in a highly prosperous condition." At the time of this statement there was a balance of nearly $800,000 to the credit of the Sinking Fund Commissioners, in the Shoe and Leather Bank. Of this surplus $500,000 has since been transferred by Mr. FLAGG to the City Treasury, and we consider this somewhat surprising in view of his distinct promise in the document referred to, that "although the revenues of the Sinking Fund have heretofore been used indiscriminately for all demands on the Treasury, this will no longer be done." That fund will be called on in January next to pay a debt of $3,000,000 which then falls due, and it is absolutely necessary, as the Comptroller remarks, "to keep all its resources in a condition to be applied to the payment of the debt from time to time, as opportunities may be presented for purchasing the stock, or be available for its ultimate reimbursement." We cannot help regarding the transfer of half a million of dollars, in the manner we have mentioned, as an inexplicable oversight on the part of the head of the Finance Department.

With respect to the advantageous investment of surplus revenues in the Sinking Fund, Mr. FLAGG suggests as follows:

"When the surplus cannot be readily invested in the Stock debt for which it is pledged, it may temporarily be loaned to the Treasury on six per cent. revenue bonds, payable at such times from the next levy as may secure the prompt application of the money to the redemption of the pledge of the Sinking Fund. This will secure to the Sinking Fund the interest, at all times, on its surplus funds. This matter has been too much neglected heretofore, owing in some manner to the agitation of the question in regard to obtaining interest on Treasury deposits. It will not be any longer delayed in the hope of accomplishing any object of this kind for the advancement of the interests of the funds of the City.

The course of investment suggested will secure interest on the surplus of the Sinking Fund, and with the prospect of a surplus in the account payable from taxation, the surplus will exist only for a short period."

The plan laid down in this paragraph is not a novel one; nor is it the first time that the Comptroller has urged its acceptance. At his instance a proposition was made in May, 1856, by Mr. VOORHIS, in the Board of Aldermen, that the surplus revenues of the City should be deposited, on interest, in one of the following banks, viz.: the Mechanics', Merchants', Manhattan, Union, Phœnix, Bank of America, of New-York, of Commerce, Metropolitan, American Exchange, and of the Republic. Competition among such institutions for the care of the public funds seemed so desirable that the resolution passed, with [illegible] ing several other Banks. FLAGG prepared a circular to the Banking Institutions of the City, requesting them to offer such rate of interest as they could afford to pay for the use of the surplus moneys accruing from the current [illegible] counts. Every one of the banks [illegible] and most of the others, sent [illegible] the Comptroller, in which they declared having anything to do with the City Balances, if required to pay interest. They represented the inconvenience of keeping the accounts as abundant compensation for any benefit that might be derived from them. The matter was, therefore, suffered to rest until last October, when the Comptroller, himself, called a meeting of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, for the purpose of placing $800,000 in the New-York and United States Trust Companies, until the money should be wanted. The experience, however, of five months previous, and a growing conviction of the illegality of such loans, caused the majority of the Commissioners to vote adversely to the proposition. The Comptroller and Mr. VOORHIS were the only persons present on the occasion who voted in the affirmative. Six months have again elapsed, and there is no reason to believe that there is any greater readiness now than there was formerly to consent to an illegal and novel method of putting out the public money, which, under the auspices of a head of the Finance Department less honest than Mr. FLAGG, might result in the loss of millions of dollars to the City.

If it were legal for the Common Council, or for the Comptroller to loan City moneys, it is evident that ALL of the moneyed institutions of the City have an equal claim to be invited to compete for them. If such an invitation were extended the transparent result would be that the weakest bank would be the highest bidder, and there would always be found an abundant number of advocates to contend that those institutions which had made the most eligible offers should receive the public funds. The principal would thus be exposed to loss, in the effort to obtain interest for the short time the moneys are on deposit. The fact that the sterling banks of New-York, one and all, refused to be enticed by the offer which was made by Mr. FLAGG in his circular of May, 1856, was of itself a proof that it could not have been advantageously accepted, excepting by irresponsible parties. The reason is, that the banking depository of public funds can never use them honestly and securely, for discounting or such loaning purposes, on account of the impossibility of calculating how long they may remain in its vaults. Thus, although the Shoe-Leather Bank, as we stated yesterday, held nearly a million and a quarter of the moneys of the Treasury on the 11th of March last, the account of the City was overdrawn $236,800 on the very next day! When Mr. STOUT announced to the Board of Directors of that Bank that he had received the appointment of Chamberlain, he wisely made it a condition of the most inviolable character, that, under no circumstances whatsoever, should the City funds be regarded as a basis for discounts, and in no single case has this rule been infringed upon. Moreover, if the Common Council were to resolve to put out the moneys in the Treasury to interest, a purely political Bank would at once be started for the sole and only purpose of swindling the City, and its chances of success would be better and greater than those of any other institution.

The duties of the Chamberlain of the City are prescribed by the old charter to be "the reception of all moneys paid into the Treasury," which cannot be drawn out excepting to pay some debt of the City by a "warrant drawn by the Comptroller, and countersigned by the Mayor and Clerk of the Common Council!" The new Charter provides, also, that the Chamberlain's bureau shall be "for the reception of ALL moneys paid into the Treasury of the City," and the abuse of distributing moneys illegally, or transferring them from one hand to another, as was lately done in the instance of the Croton Loan, and of the Sinking Fund, is foreseen and averted in the following manner:

"The Chamberlain shall keep books showing the amounts paid on account of the several appropriations; and no warrants shall be paid on account of any appropriations after the amount authorized to be raised by tax for that specific purpose shall have been expended."

Before entering upon his duties the Chamberlain gave bonds to the amount of two hundred thousand dollars for the faithful fulfilment of the requirements of the law. His salary is five hundred dollars only, and the salary allotted to him for a clerk is but four hundred dollars. It costs the Bank with which he may be connected (in the time of the lamented ROBERT KELLY this was the Mechanics' Bank, and under Mr. STOUT is the Shoe and Leather Bank) six thousand dollars a year for clerk hire and other expenses, in order that the books of the City may be properly kept. The advantage which is derived by the Bank from the custody of the moneys of the Treasury, is so small that the responsible institutions in the City refused, as we have seen, to pay interest upon them. The only benefit which can possibly accrue to it, must therefore flow from the increased business and credit which is given to a banking institution, by the mere fact, name and reputation it possesses, of being the depository of the public funds. It was not the intention of the charter, on the one hand, that the money of the City should be used for discounting purposes; nor was it presumed, on the other, that the care and responsibility of eight millions annually, the necessity of providing for overdrafts, of sometimes assuming pecuniary burdens of the most enormous magnitude, of bestowing the whole time, thought, activity and industry of several individuals, and of resting under bonds for nearly a quarter of a million of dollars, should be undertaken for the compensation of five hundred dollars a year!

The New-York and United States Trust Companies are doubtless excellent institutions. Unless they were so, the Comptroller would never have recommended them; but we would submit that his successor may be a person of inferior integrity to himself, and we would ask him to reflect how the millions of public property which might, at some future unguarded moment, be left in irresponsible hands, and lost, can ever be recovered? The interest plan will never do. It is inexpedient; it would lead to the inevitable result of putting the Treasury within the influence of dishonest persons; it would create a change from comparatively good to decidedly bad; and last of all, it would be illegal and in violation of the language and spirit of the Charter.

Why the Mayor Cannot Offer a Reward for the Detection of the Murderer of Dr. Burdell.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The new City Charter repeals the former Charter which gave to the Mayor authority to offer rewards for murderers. Under existing laws he has no power to offer a reward for the apprehension of the murderers of Dr. BURDELL. If he were to do so Mr. FLAGG would refuse to draw his warrant, and the Mayor would have, as usual, to foot the bill out of his own pocket. F.

If this is so, we trust the Mayor will not fail to call the attention of the Common Council to the subject in such a way as to lead that body to take prompt and efficient action. And in the meantime it seems to us highly proper that Governor KING should offer a reward which will serve as a stimulus to our Police and other City authorities to prosecute the inquiry into this terrible and audacious crime.

The late Thomas J. Oakley.

This very Lord Chancellor of our municipal bench and bar, yesterday morning closed a long professional and political career on the bed of death. The announcement of his decease profoundly impressed all classes of our citizens, who, as jurors, witnesses and lawyers, had become acquainted with his judicial career in the Superior Court for the past twenty-nine years.

Chief-Justice OAKLEY was a native of Dutchess County, and when a young lawyer of high promise, in 1808, married a daughter of Hon. ROBERT WILLIAMS, then a prominent politician of the middle Senatorial District, (as it was then called,) in which Mr. OAKLEY resided. Through the influence of his father-in-law, who was a member of the Council of Appointments in 1810 and a State Senator, Mr. OAKLEY was made Surrogate of Dutchess County, and at that early age displayed those fine powers of judicial analysis that have since made him so distinguished on the bench. In 1813 he became a member of Congress from the Poughkeepsie District. It was during the progress of the war, and he was an anti-War Federalist, and a strong and vigorous foe to the then Administration. The powerful speeches then made in debate by Mr. OAKLEY—more remarkable for matter than manner—are still remembered by the survivors of that era. He continued in Congress until 1815, when he was sent to the Assembly. In 1819 he became Attorney-General of the State, in place of MARTIN VAN BUREN. In 1820 he was again in the Assembly In 1827 he was a second time elected to Congress Of his character at the time of his career above alluded to, Hon. JABEZ D. HAMMOND, in his political history of New-York, thus speaks:

"For my part, I consider THOMAS J. OAKLEY one of the most talented men which the State of New-York has produced. His intellectual powers were strong and vigorous, and he was capable of immense mental labor. Always cool and calculating, in the highest heat of debate he possessed a most perfect self-control, and never permitted his feelings to get the better of his judgment. As a clear, ingenious, and logical, though sometimes sophistical reasoner, he has appeared to me unrivaled in our legislative halls at Albany. He is not an orator. He falls of being so from his want of ardor of feeling and his utter lack of imaginative powers His coolness, his caution, his foresight, and his perfect self-command, peculiarly fit him for a party leader in a legislative assembly. In Congress he differed from the over-zealous Eastern Federalists. He wished, at least, to manifest an apparent disposition to furnish supplies to Government, in carrying on the war, and to confine his opposition to the manner in which the war was carried on. Mr. CLAYTON, an old and sagacious Virginian politician, told me, in 1816, that, had the Federal members of Congress, during the war, put themselves exclusively under the management of OAKLEY, and implicitly followed his lead, in his judgment the Administration would have been prostrated."

In 1828, the Superior Court of the City of New-York being organized by act of the Legislature, Mr. OAKLEY resigned as member of Congress to accept an associate Judgeship of the new Court with Hon. JOSIAH OGDEN HOFFMAN (father of the late OGDEN HOFFMAN) and the late SAMUEL JONES as Chief Justice. He continued with the latter until the reorganization of the Superior Court, under the Constitution of 1846, when he was elected to the Chief Justiceship, and has since held it to the great satisfaction of the community and the Bar. His term would have expired with this year.

Chief Justice OAKLEY in early life was a Federalist, and then by easy gradation enlisted into the ranks of St. Tammany. And his retirement from political life in 1828 was a source of great disappointment to his associates, who predicted from his then career the most extravagant hopes for his future preferment. No doubt those predictions would have been fulfilled, for he was a man of great penetration, of keen insight into human nature, of large mental perception, an acute reasoner, a profound thinker, a subtle tactician, and of enlarged practical sagacity.

His knowledge of the philosophy and reason of the law was more profound than his acquaintance with mere cases of the new régime in jurisprudence. He was a man of high honor on the Bench, of distinguished social position, and as a zealous Churchman exercised commanding influence in Diocesan Conventions.

His decease leaves a temporary vacancy, and which it will devolve upon Gov. KING to fill.

The Panama Road.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

There are several cardinal errors in the editorial leader of Monday, 11th inst., in the DAILY TIMES, on the Panama question, which I am quite sure you will correct, on proper information.

1. The capital of the road is about five, not three millions.

2. The debt is but little over two, not five millions.

3. The dividends are 12, not 8 per cent. a year.

4. The dividends are made without straining the profits, for there are nearer 18 than 12 per cent., and the surplus undivided last year equal to 5 per cent. on the capital. N.

Musical.

The pupils of the Blind Asylum give their annual entertainment this afternoon, at the Academy of Music, commencing at 4 o'clock. The instrumental exercises are under the able direction of Mr. REIFF, who has been the teacher of the Institution for many years. The vocal department is under the direction of Mr. LASAR. A musical treat of a peculiarly interesting character may be expected.

From Bahia.

By the arrival of the schooner Josephine we have received dates from Bahia to April 1. During the month of March the yellow fever raged among the shipping in port; many vessels lost nearly their whole crew. When the Josephine left the fever began to abate.

March 6, JOHN TRACY, seaman, of England, of yellow fever.

OUTRAGEOUS FRAUD UPON AN OLD LADY.—We learn from the Morning (Old) Telegraph that a villainous fraud was practiced upon an old woman, living on Ridge Road in that town, a few days since. A wealthy farmer, her relative, and living near her—purchased of her an acre of land, for which he promised to draw a deed. Without suspicion of rascality, the old lady went to the deed, which pleased her execution, and delivered the same to the purchaser. A few days afterwards one of the neighbors had occasion to "search the records" at the County Clerk's office, when the discovery was made, that the old lady, instead of deeding one acre, had given a warrantee deed for the whole farm of one hundred and fifty acres, worth $60 per acre! She was feeble in health, at the time said was given, and it was thought she would live but a few weeks. Had she died before the discovery of the fraud, her heirs would have been robbed of [illegible] $9,000. The Telegraph [illegible] villainy are all [illegible] Medina. [illegible]

Sunday Cars in Brooklyn—Experiments to be Made.

The Board of Directors of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company held a meeting last evening, when the subject of running cars on the Sabbath day was again brought up for consideration. After weighing the matter in all its bearings, the preamble and resolutions annexed were adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Amos P Stanton, Seymour L. Husted, William H. Cary, Henry C Murphy, Thomas Brooks, Alexander Studwell, Purcell Cooke, Charles C Betts—8.

Nays—Messrs George S. Holland, Fisher Howe, Lowell Holbrook, John Kellum—4.

Absent—Mr. John Schenck.

Whereas, This Board, since its decision against the running of cars on Sunday, has been importuned by many respectable citizens in Brooklyn to afford some accommodation on that day, therefore,

Resolved, That this Board (though a majority of its members are opposed to running cars on that day, both as citizens and stockholders,) deeming it proper to regard the wishes of the public and yield their individual preferences, will afford such accommodation only as shall appear to be absolutely necessary for the convenience of the public.

Resolved, That the Superintendent be directed to place on the lines a sufficient number of cars, so that the first in each line shall leave the Ferry at 9 A. M., and continue running at intervals of not less than 30 minutes until 9½ P. M., at which hour the last car on each line shall leave the Ferry—provided that, during the hours when the citizens are going to, or returning from church, additional trips may be made if found necessary. And further provided, that this direction shall continue in force three months only as an experiment, and that there shall be no transfers running.

BRINGING WATER TO BROOKLYN.—The query of our correspondent concerning the rumored proposition of the Nassau Water Company to lead the water from the reservoir through the Evergreen Cemetery, has lead to a good deal of discussion. On inquiry we learn that the Water Commissioners have not yet determined upon the route of the water after leaving the reservoir, though they probably will do so at their meeting to-morrow. Of course no intelligent person will suppose that the water would be damaged in the least by passing through iron pipes over a hill on which the Evergreen Cemetery is laid out, any more than it would to come from a reservoir that is only separated by a valley from the Cypress Hill Cemetery. The opponents of the Evergreen route for the pipes profess, however, to have discovered a real and honest objection to it. They say that it is a part of the project to buy a right of way through the Evergreen grounds by the pledge of water for fountains, lakes and so forth, to irrigate and beautify the Cemetery for all time to come—thus tapping the main before it has reached the City or distributed any portion of the supply to citizens whose taxes have purchased the improvement. If this is really a part of the project, the city has an interest in the matter; for, though the engineers agree that the supply for all purposes of utility or ornament will be abundant, still every gallon that is distributed must be pumped up to the reservoir. It is but fair that none shall be distributed until citizens themselves are satisfied. Moreover, if we remember rightly, the right of way and all the expenses of introducing the water were to be met by the contractor—not by the city. Citizens, however, have all confidence in the gentlemen who have the matter in hand. They are disposed to be contented, but certainly they have none the less right on that account to be kept informed.

COMMISSIONERS OF EXCISE.—Hon. S. D. MORRIS, County Judge, and Justices SCHOONMAKER and EMMONS, assembled in the County Judges' Chamber, Brooklyn, at 12 o'clock yesterday.

Justice SCHOONMAKER insisted that the Commissioners should be nominated without regard to politics, and that they should be men possessing the confidence of the community. He nominated Judge HAMMOND, of Flatbush; WM. H. HICKOX, of the Eastern District of Brooklyn, and WARREN RICHMOND, of the Western District.

Justice EMMONS nominated JOHN WYCKOFF, of Flatlands. Judge MORRIS nominated THOMAS MURPHY, of the Eastern District, and WILLET J. JARVIS, of the Western District.

Upon taking a ballot, the vote stood as follows:

Mr. Murphy received....2 Mr. Richmond.....1
Mr. Jarvis.....2 Mr. Hammond.....1
Mr Wyckoff.....2 Mr. Hickox.....1

The first three named having received a majority of the votes cast, were declared elected.

CLASSIFICATION.

The name of each Commissioner was then placed in a hat, and the first drawn was the 1st class, second 2d, 2class, &c., resulting as follows:

1. WILLET J. JARVIS, 6 years.
2. JOHN WYCKOFF 4 years.
3. THOMAS MURPHY, 2 years.

Mr. JARVIS is the proprietor of a livery stable on Hicks-street, Brooklyn.

Mr. WYCKOFF is a farmer, and resides in Flatlands.

Mr. MURPHY resides in the Eastern District of Brooklyn, and was a Deputy Sheriff under the late Sheriff RYERSON.

The Commissioners will meet for business on Tuesday next.

BROOKLAN FIRE DEPARTMENT COMMISSIONERS.—Under the act passed at the last session of the Legislature, to place the Brooklyn Fire Department under the control of a Board of Commissioners, a meeting was held last evening at Firemen's Hall, to elect five candidates for the Western District, to be submitted for approval to the Common Council. The contest was spirited, but the following ticket was elected by a handsome majority: Joseph Ketchum, Jr., M. N. Smith, Cornelius H. Van Brunt, Oliver G. Carter, Peter Wyckoff.

BROOKLYN COURTS.—The County Court met yesterday, but there being no business ready it was adjourned sine die. The Circuit Court and Special Term have adjourned to the 22d inst., when the Circuit and Oyer and Terminer, General and Special Term will be in session.

NEW-JERSEY.

Horrible Outrage—A Negro Killed by White Men.

A most singular and brutal outrage was perpetrated on the person of an inoffensive negro named JOHN THOMPSON, well known as "Jack" in the neighborhood where he lived. The outrage resulted in his death. It occurred on Monday, at a porter house kept by a man named TUCKER, about three miles from Jersey City, on the plank road leading to Newark. It was not, however, at the public house, on that road, known as Glen Dale, kept by another man named TUCKER.

This negro has been much addicted to drinking liquor, and was believed to be near his grave from that cause. It appears that on Monday several persons, of whom one DANIEL KEENAN acted as ringleader, gave "Jack" liquor to drink until he was able to drink no more. They then poured some down his throat. After this they saturated his hair with camphene and set fire to it. Another man, who came in at the time, extinguished the flames. The negro was afterwards roughly handled by them, probably for the purpose of removing him of the effects of the liquor. He died, however, that night. Coroner SPEAR held an inquest upon the body yesterday, and the jury rendered a verdict that the deceased came to his death by the excessive use of liquor, which was administered to him by DANIEL KEENAN and others. The Grand Jury being in session yesterday, the case was laid before them, and KEENAN was indicted.

The Boston Failures.

From the Boston Journal, 5th.

We regret to learn that three houses engaged in the dry goods jobbing trade in this city were unable to meet their business engagements yesterday, and were obliged to suspend payment. They were Messrs. WHITNEY, FENNO & Co.; Messrs. CHAPMAN, LORD & HALE; and Messrs SHAW, SAMPSON & BRAMHALL. The amount of the liabilities of these several firms we do not hear. Hitherto our merchants have nobly withstood the general depression in business and the pressure in the money market. We hope they will still be able to ride out the storm.

The failure of Messrs. WHITNEY, FENNO & Co. is attributable to large defalcations on the part of their chief clerk. The amount appropriated is extremely uncertain, and must remain so till the books of the concern are thoroughly examined. It is, however, variously estimated from $50,000 to $100,000. Some of the particulars of this defalcation, as we learn them from various authentic sources, are as follows:

About two months ago, suspicions were aroused in the minds of the firm that their head clerk, JONATHAN N. HASSARD, had been appropriating the funds of the concern. The origin of this suspicion was in the fact that frequent remittances of money from customers of the firm were never received, denoting an unmistakable intercept in on the part of some one acquainted with the business of the concern. To the end of ferreting out the rogue, a trap was set at the Post-Office, into which HASSARD was incontinently lured, made fast, and obliged to confess his guilt. We understand that he has confessed to having appropriated a large amount, and under a promise of release, disgorged a part of his ill-gotten gains, a considerable portion of which is said to be invested in very doubtful securities, and regarded to be of small value.

HASSARD is about 30 years of age, and has been in the employment of the firm five years The discovery of his dishonesty was a matter of extreme surprise to his employers. Under the arrangement above referred to, he left this section of the country about three weeks ago

The collections in aid of the Inebriate Asylum in [illegible] amount to $32,000 Buffalo has given $2,[illegible] Albany, Rochester and Syracuse $1,000 each. [illegible] Boston is $50,000.

[illegible] of rare old autographs is in possession of Mr. CHAS. B. NORTON, of this City. We noon took a leisure half-hour yesterday in turning over the many curious of the specimens. There is among them a letter written by BENEDICT ARNOLD, in 1771, at the time ARNOLD was neither a patriot nor a traitor, but simply a druggist in New-Haven. One by JOHN ADAMS, written from Paris in 1785 laments over his departure from a quiet life at Antecil. Another is from JOHN RANDOLPH, making affectionate inquiries concerning the welfare of a favorite dog. Others are from WASHINGTON, PATRICK HENRY, JOHN HANCOCK, Gov. DINWIDDIE, LOUIS XIV., Lord STERLING, TOM MOORE, &c., &c.

There are two letters from WASHINGTON, bearing date at the "Camp at Cambridge," August 25, 1775, and October 28 1775. The first is addressed to ANTHONY WHITE, Brunswick, and pays a tribute to the character of his son, a young gentleman whom the General recommends for a place in the new battalions then raising in the Jerseys. The second letter is also personal in its character; naming two persons, one of whom is a Mr. DURHAM, for whom the General was unable to find employment in his profession. This letter is without address; it had one, but the party into whose hands it fell, appears to have been unduly anxious to preserve it, so that the stiff pasteboard back it now possesses utterly obliterates the superscription. Towards the close the General says: "I am almost always in a hurry;" and ends with the customary compliments.

JOHN HANCOCK writes to the Convention of New-Jersey, (Philadelphia, June 11, 1776,) to give information of the receipt of important war news in Congress. Howe's designs upon the City of New-York had been discovered, and authentic tidings fixed the period of his attack at a date ten days from the time when this letter was written. HANCOCK says:

"The important day is at hand, that will decide, not only the Fate of the City of New-York, but in all Probability of the whole Province. On such an occasion, there is no necessity to use Argument with Americans. Their Feelings, I well know, will prompt them to their Duty, and the Sacredness of the Cause urge them to the field. The greatest Exertions of Vigour and Expedition are requisite to prevent our Enemies from getting Possession of that Town. I must therefore again most earnestly request you, in the Name and by the Authority of Congress, to employ any Mode in your Power, to send forward the Militia agreeably to the Requisition of Congress, and that you will do it with all the Dispatch which the Infinite Importance of the Cause demands."

Under date of May 27, 1775, HANCOCK apprises the President of "the Provincial Convention of New-Jersey" that Congress will convey to that Colony the earliest intelligence of any action which might be taken in reference to its affairs.

PATRICK HENRY writes in reference to military matters, urging the reenlistment of the Virginia troops into the Continental service. The letter is dated at Williamsburg, Va., March 21, 1777.

JOHN ADAMS addresses a long epistle to Mr. DUMAS, from Auteuil, near Paris, May 11, 1785. He announces the receipt of the orders of Congress to go to London, and adds, in his pleasant style:

"Whether this mission to London is a subject of Felicitation or not, I know not. One Thing I know, I quit the situation in Europe most to my Taste, and the most for my Health, for one which will probably be agreeable to neither. I exchange a quiet, cheerful Mind for an anxious one, and a Life of Ease for a Scene of Perplexity, Confusion and Fatigue. If the Public, however, should derive any Benefit from it, I shall not regretit.

Dr. FRANKLIN has leave to return, and talks of embarking next Month. Mr. JEFFERSON is Minister Plenipotentiary, at Versailles, in his stead. Our Commissioners to negotiate Commercial Treaties remain in Force, and we shall continue that business, Mr. JEFFERSON and I, as usual. We shall concert all affairs by Letter, and meet together to sign in London or Paris, as may be convenient.

A letter from BENEDICT ARNOLD is addressed "Mr. George Henderson." It is dated at New Haven, January, 1771. ARNOLD at that time was a druggist in New-Haven. He wrote this letter to clear up certain scandalous reports—the poor man was always in hot water about something—which had been spread by one FORBES, once master of a sloop belonging to ARNOLD. ARNOLD says that FORBES had told all the lies "that malice could invent," and he prays his correspondent to aid him in collecting testimony to convict the rascally skipper.

JOHN RANDOLPH writes at "half-past 2, Tuesday," that the Bank Bill is in a fair way; it will certainly pass, or there is no placing any faith in present appearances." RANDOLPH had a dog. To it he begs to be remembered,—"let me hear (he says) of you and your movements, and if possible of my dog. Yours in haste. J. R"

Letters of AARON BURR show suspicious indications that he was hatching treason when he penned them In one, he complains that he cannot safely meet his correspondent in every place, and fixes a rendezvous at Princeton, the meeting being "anticipated with impatience."

Several letters in this collection are from RICHARD HENRY LEE. Others from Lord STIRLING, Gov. FAUQUIER, ABRAHAM CLARK, of Philadelphia, HANCOCK, WILLIAM LIVINGSTON, and Gov. DINWIDDIE, have reference exclusively to military affairs.

The letter from MOORE is a humorous invitation in rhyme to a friend, asking him to come to dinner. The poet dates his epistle "from my bedroom—midnight," and is not choice in his language. In fact, the letter wouldn't look well in print, but it is very TOM MOORE-ish.

The collection has a host of rare and unpublished documents.

The Cooly and Slave Trade—How they are Carried on.

To the Editor of the Washington Union:

SIR: My attention has been called to a paragraph in your paper this morning, containing some information received by the State Department in relation to the Slave and Cooly trade, which, though undoubtedly true in its statements as far as they go, is calculated to leave a wrong impression upon the public mind, as it gives only individual facts instead of a general view of those two branches in human labor. I would, therefore, intrude upon your space for a word of explanation.

The trade in coolies and African slaves is carried on from Cuba at the present time with so active a that has not been surpassed in any former period The fact that numbers of inferior and dissonant races of men are being poured into that island is looked upon with great alarm by the native statesmen of Cuba, and their voices have been raised against it in every possible way, for they believe that this increase in the numerical preponderance there of the inferior and mixed races over the white race is pregnant with danger to the future well being and social security of the island. But this very reason lies at the foundation of the policy of Spain in stimulating the illegal trade with Africa on one hand, and the unwise traffic with China on the other, because she believes it strengthens her hold upon the future destinies of the island. I must do the higher Spanish officers in Cuba the justice to acknowledge that I do not believe they are animated solely by a mercenary love of gain in their connivance at the slave trade, and their efforts to increase the importations of coolies.

I do not wish, however, that a seemingly well-founded charge of principal connivance in these transactions should be laid upon my own countrymen when I have reason to believe they do not merit it.

In addition to the cooly trade, I learn from sources of a very high character in Cuba that the agitation in the last Congress of the question of their legal conveyance in American ships has alarmed the parties in Havana principally concerned in the matter, and that, although arrangements for large importations have been made, the orders for the charter of ships for their conveyance have been withdrawn from New-York and transferred exclusively to the ports of England. I may add that I have reason to believe these parties are determined to avoid, as far as possible, the employment of American ships in the carrying of coolies from China to Cuba, and to use, as far as possible, English ships for that purpose

As regards the slave trade with Africa, Cuba is the only country that carries it on since the Emperor of Brazil has stopped it in his dominions. All the efforts of England to stop, or even diminish, the traffic were useless until the Government of Brazil determined that it should cease; and it did then cease so far as that country is concerned. This is fully acknowledged by English authorities.

The importation of Africans into Cuba being still connived at by the Spanish Government there, the trade is carried on in the following manner: Goods for the purchase of the slaves are sent to the coast of Africa in licit traders from England. The parties in Cuba, having made all their preparations for the procuring of the negroes, then come to this country and purchase a vessel, with the agreement that delivery of her shall be made on the coast of Africa. Nothing to inculpate the vessel in the Slave trade need be put on board of her here; and as the seller of any article does not hold himself responsible, nor does the law, for any use it may be put to after he has delivered it, the slave-trader finds no difficulty in purchasing the vessel, though generally he has to pay pretty well for her.

She departs for the coast with one or two passengers only, and if, on arrival there, the opportunity is favorable for her escape, the transfer is at once made, and a few hours suffice to put on board the negroes with rice and water, and she is off for Cuba. If there is a cruiser about, the purchaser finds abundant reasons to delay the delivery of the vessel He has not the money at hand to make the final payment, and the American captain naturally refuses to give her no until he has got his money. When he gets this he leaves her with his papers and his crew, and she soon departs with slaves, but without papers of any kind for the run across the Atlantic. It is not seldom that some of the crew, tempted by high wages, will remain for the homeward voyage. The American captain, with his ship's register and his money in his pocket, seeks another conveyance back.

It will be seen, therefore, that the cooly trade is now principally in English hands, and the slave-trade apparently in those of Americans. I do not well see how legislation can prevent the delivery of our vessels abroad and it is my belief that only such action as will remove the political reasons which sustain the cooly and slave-trade in Cuba will effectually stop it. Our legal trade with the Coast of Africa is already large and profitable, and any impediments thrown in the way of our ships there will give our competitors an advantage The evil can only be reached by stopping the countenance of the Spanish Government at the landing of slaves in Cuba. The Captain General there is as despotic as an officer can be, and, should his orders from home direct him to do so, he can stop the importation of slaves there.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WASHINGTON, April 25, 1857. J. S. THRASHER.

EXCITEMENT AT THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.—On the night of the 18 inst., at Charlottesville, two of the students of the University of Virginia—one named BAXTER, from Georgia, and the other MARTIN, of Virginia—having knocked at the door of a grocery-store kept by an Italian named MANONI, were fired upon by one of the inmates from the second story, and both wounded,—BAXTER slightly and MARTIN severely, though not dangerously. What subsequently ensued is thus narrated in a letter to the Alexandria Gazette, dated the 19th:

"This morning a large crowd of students collected at MANONI's store, and searched it throughout, but found no one except the clerk, from whom nothing concerning the shooting could be got. About an hour after that another search was made, and MANONI and his brother—the latter of whom fired the gun—were found under a bed in the back part of the house. They were immediately bound, and though many were for hanging, and some for tar-and-feathering, it was decided to flog them both severely and drive them from the county. As soon as it was determined to flog them, they were dragged to an adjoining field, and due preparations were made for carrying it into effect; but just at this moment the Chairman of the Faculty appeared, and, by a forcible and gentlemanly appeal, he prevailed upon the students to give the culprits over to the proper authorities, and they are now lodged in the jail at Charlottesville."

The machinery of the Montreal water-works, the reservoirs, and the distribution, have already cost 10 round numbers £175 000 more, and £100,000 is yet required to complete the works, making a total expenditure of £400,000.

HOUSES AND LOTS FOR SALE

LLEWELLYN PARK IS A TRACT OF 50 ACRES of land beautifully situated on the eastern slope of Eagle Ridge, (Orange Mountain) with a surface finely diversified, embracing deep ravines, bold, rocky cliffs, a brook of the purest spring water, picturesque old oaks, beaches and thickets and a noble forest of the various native evergreen and deciduous trees.

It is being laid out and embellished with drives, walks, &c., in the modern natural style of landscape gardening, and has been deeded in trust for the exclusive use and enjoyment of the purchasers of the land lying contiguous to the Park.

This tract of land, containing about 300 acres, has been divided into villa sites of from 5 to 10 acres each. It was selected with special reference to the wants of citizens doing business in the City, and yet wishing accessible, retired, and healthful homes in the country, by the proprietor, who adopted this method to secure a select and good neighborhood. Sloping to the southeast, the best exposure for health and cultivation is secured, as well as perfect protection in Winter from the northeasterly winds, while it is favorably situated to catch the sea breezes which prevail in Summer.

The whole tract abounds in pure, soft, spring water.

It is believed that there is no spot within twenty miles of New-York which is in all respects so healthy as the side of this mountain. It is almost the only location so near the City where there is really no fever and ague.

Purchasers of sites, desiring to build of stone, can obtain the material on the premises, free of charge.

The privacy of the Park and all the sites will be secured by a lodge and gate-keeper at the entrance on Valley road, one mile from North Orange Railroad station. Ascending the ridge by the Park drives, (three miles of which are already completed,) a charming view of the Valley is obtained for many miles around, with New-York in the distance; and finally reaching the top of the mountain, 700 feet above the level of the sea, a magnificent scene breaks upon the view sixty miles in extent, composed of forests, cultivated fields, and country seats, villages, towns and cities, rivers, ponds and bays in the valley beneath, with the Newesink hills at the south; Nyack Mountain, Haverstraw peak, and the highlands towards the north; with Long Island, Staten Island, and the Ocean in the east. This natural panorama is acknowledged by all to be one of the finest in America.

Llewellyn Park is distant from New-York City less than one hour, via Morris and Essex Railroad, from the foot of Cortlandt-st.

For ease of access, beauty and variety of scenery, for healthfulness of climate, for the intelligence and moral order of its population in short, from all those considerations which combine to render a region attractive and agreeable as a family residence, it is believed that the vicinity of Orange, especially the mountain side, possesses advantages not surpassed, if equaled, by any other place in the vicinity of New-York.

ANNIVERSARIES.

American Anti-Slavery Society.

The proceedings during the morning session of this Society will be found on the second page.

EVENING SESSION.

The meeting again assembled at 7½ o'clock P M. The room was more crowded than during the morning session. Mr. Garrison took the Chair and called the assembly to order. He then introduced Rev. J. R. W. Gibson, Pastor of the Third Reformed Presbyterian Church, City.

Mr. Gibson said that in other religious denominations besides his own, there were men who were battling nobly in opposition to human Slavery—that stupendous conspiracy against God and man—by excluding slaveholders from their fellowship; but the Reformed Presbyterians had, he contended, alone done their utmost duty in this respect, not only by open opposition to the slave power, but by refusing to vote under a Constitution which sanctioned an evil so enormous. They had refused to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, not because they were enemies to their country, or because they were in favor of any other form of Government, but simply because they could not lift up their hands to Heaven and swear, in the name of God, to obey a Constitution which robs millions of unoffending men of their just and inalienable rights.

There had been much to discourage the Anti-Slavery Party, but they were cheered by the reflection that the truths, which a few years ago were only heard from a few pulpits, as it were, in the wilderness, were now advocated by men who were fearless for the right in all places, and who were working to effect the entire overthrow of Slavery on the American Continent. Their motto was; "No union with Slaveholders, political or ecclesiastical." It was a good old righteous motto. The Old Covenanters of Scotland, and the Puritans of England, and the friends of God and the Saviour, and man, everywhere in the whole world, had hallowed it. Living or dying he (the speaker) hoped to abide by it. He would not stop to prove that Slavery was a sin. It was felt to be so by the universal moral sense of the world, and by the whole voice of the Church, except in the interpretations of Pro-Slavery Churches and Pro Slavery divines. As for attempting to prove Slavery a sin, he would not insult the sense of his auditors—he would not insult the sense of the nation by doing so. Argument was wasted in the attempt. All that was to be done with it was to cast it, with a millstone about its neck, into the sea. What was there about American Slavery that we should be in anywise tender about it? It has trampled half of our continent into a waste, howling wilderness. It had spread a spiritual darkness over the vast domain it claimed as its own territory, and had blighted and millewed its neighbors' fields. It had corrupted the Christian church North and South, and hung its pulpits with dumb dogs that could not bark. I had paralyzed the press, and held it, as rarely writhing, in its grasp. How was it with our best journals, religious or secular? Those which dared advocate the final overthrow of Slavery were few and far between. I had shorn the locks and put out the eyes of politicians, and left them to grind in its dark prison-house.

How did it treat politicians? They dared not be true in their own consciences, if they were inclined to be so. There was a higher law than the Constitution; but the man who was in place dared not obey it, and the man who was seeking place still less dared to. Neither of them, if they recognized that higher law, would adhere to it. A man had two things before him: either to obey conscience and the Constitution, or the higher law, and resign his seat in the Government or his hopes and chances of preferment. Slavery stood at the door of the Constitution guarding it like a cerberus, and nobody could pass by till he had thrown a sop to it. It was the radiating centre of Government influence. Its foul stain was on every fold of the star-spangled banner. The tree of Liberty drooped, withered and died under its poisonous shadow. We were accustomed to speak of it as an excrescence on the body politic, but it had grown to shade the entire heavens. There remained for it no remedy but one,—a bold, determined, united effort to eradicate it from the American soil. Some men talk of keeping back its encroachments by reason and argument. That was worse than folly; it was madness. While they were talking, Slavery was acting. It was working while they were contemplating. Long ago it had turned the North into a hunting ground, and the last step had advanced to what might almost be thought the line of demarcation to the demoralization of the country, by the late infamous decision in the Supreme Court of the United States. Nothing was left to us but war, and it must be carried to the heart of the enemy's camp, to the throne of the grim, ghastly tyrant. But let there be no trust in politicians. There was nothing to hope from them. Poor Test Oaths were entangled in the net of the Constitution. The best of them might confront the monster, but none dared strike him on the face. There was as little hope in the Church, for the devil in the State was not likely to be an angel of light in the Church. With regard to Slavery in the Church, the commandment of God was written in letters of light on the brow of the firmament: "Come not of her, and be not a partaker of her uncleanness." He would not bring a railing accusation against the Churches, for the salvation of the world was committed to them, and he would admit that in the Church were many great and good men, of whom he could only regret that they did not see that no half ground was to be taken in the matter of Slavery, and that there could be no compromise with the Slave the Church was inconsistent with its profession. Nothing was inconsistent with the precepts of Power. As an Abolitionist, as a Reformed Presbyterian Abolitionist, he would only say that the position of Christianity, but total separation from the slave oligarchy, or from any party that tolerated, though even an slightly, any communion with Slavery. What he came of present Church organizations he cared not, and he was sure God didn't. [Applause.] They would go down to perdition, but the Church of Christ would survive.

And what, they were often asked, would become of the Government? Why, it would fall as an old decayed tree, when its props were taken away, and we should afterwards, under any circumstances, have a better Government, for a worse we could not have. America was regarded by Americans, and by multitudes in the old countries, as the hope of the world. Hope of the world indeed! It was cruel irony. He did not believe that there was any true Republican in the whole world who turned his eyes towards this country with the idea that there was anything to hope from it. The Constitution, and all the political parties that flourished under it, were rotten at heart. They had been weighed in the scales of Justice and found wanting. The dissolution of the Union was a matter that was becoming familiar to the Northern mind. Toe fact was, if we did not dissolve the Union, it would dissolve itself. It was a mixture of iron and miry clay. The handwriting was on the wall, and only those were the saviors of the nations who preached deliverance to the captive, and let the oppressed go free.

In that, and that alone, could the Union be preserved. It was proclaimed to them, as its safety, as with the voice of the Eternal God, from a thousand cities that were once powerful and prosperous, but which had been trodden into dust by the footsteps of an avenging Deity. As a minister of Christ, he would say to our ecclesiastical organizations in the words of the Most High: "If ye will not hearken unto me, I will make your sanctuary a desolation—curse ye Merab,—curse ye the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of God—to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Let not churches beware of the doom of the Church of Laodicea, which was neither hot nor cold, and because she was not hot nor cold, "I will," said the Saviour, "spue thee out of my mouth."

As Christians, as those who held in abhorrence every theory of men's origin, or destiny that was not in accordance with the word of God, let us use those weapons that are forged in his armory, and are of heavenly mould, and we shall yet see the day when Slavery shall fall and Liberty be proclaimed throughout this glorious land to all the inhabitants.

The reverend gentleman resumed his seat amidst loud applause.

Mr. Garrison then introduced Rev. Dr. William H. Furness, of Philadelphia.

Dr. Furness began by saying that he used to think one of the simplest things in the world was the golden rule—the principle of equal rights. But even the simple parable of the good Samaritan is yet a mystery to the nation, for its people are yet in ignorance of its meaning. And this is the ignorance not of the ignorant, but of the wise. Some of the best of men and some of the strongest champions of Freedom (in the extent to which they went) have betrayed our ignorance of the true philosophy of the Anti Slavery movement, when an occasion came to apply it to the extreme. They are like Kossuth, the great and the good man, but who, after all, was found to be the champion, not of humanity, but Hungary. How few there are who are willing to take up with nothing less than the whole truth! But they whose eyes are opened, and who see and serve the truth, find it precious to them evermore.

We can never, said he, put the truth under obligation to us. We cannot do a thousandth part as much for truth as truth does for us. Even if we should shed our blood for its sake, it would be found that to die for it is gain. He said that he uttered these things from only an humble and limited experience of the truth. He had only touched the hem of its garment, yet he had felt the thrill of the touch on his very soul. He knew that the men around him on the platform are not engaged in any political or selfish manoeuvre, but only in the cause of humanity, striving for the freedom of a race cotterallled. He referred briefly to the decline of gradual emancipation, which had been a stumbling block in the way of abolition. He also spoke of what he called the prevailing pharisaism at the present day on the subject of Slavery. The reverence existing in our day for the Constitution and the Union is like that of the ancient Jews for the temple. The Pharisees watched Jesus to see whether he would do a work of mercy on the Sabbath day. In forty thousand churches of this land it is thought a sacrilege to whisper on the Seventh day a word against the system of bondage. How does our modern Phariseeism compare with the ancient? There are three millions of men held in oppression, and the Abolitionists are crying out, "Let the oppressed go free." But the Church and the State are both crying out, "He shall not go free!" It is in vain to say that the slaves, if they were set free, would abuse their freedom. How are we using our liberty, be asked, that we should dare to set in authority over other men, and say that they are abusing theirs? How are we abusing the sacred gift of Freedom, when we say that any man has no rights which another is bound to respect? Abolitionists do not rely upon political power. We want, said he, every slave to be free by the voluntary act of the slaveholder himself, and to this end all that we ask is a free and fair field for the utterance of the truth, and the whole truth.

The next speaker, C. L. Remond, of Massachusetts, said that for the few observations which he designed to offer he would take as a text the recent decision of the Supreme Court. The Chief Justice, said he, had announced that the black has no rights which the white man is bound to respect. He (the speaker) stood there, as a colored man, to say that between himself and Judge Taney, with his whole train of sympathizers and supporters, there is "no love lost." [Laughter] It is a novel idea that a man, be he Judge or Juryman, in the United States, in this nineteenth century, within a few miles distant from Bunker Hill and Concord, and Lexington, can make a declaration that a man, simply on the ground of complexion, has no rights which other men are bound to respect. Such a man is not to be compared with a barbarian of the Barbary States, or with the most ignorant African in the jungles of Africa. He declared further, in the language of a white man, that "living or dying, sinking or swimming, surviving or perishing" he trampled the decision and the declaration of Judge Taney under his feet. (Applause.) He did not do this in view of his birth and education in New-England. He did not do it in the name of the orthodoxy of the United States. He did not not do it in the name of the Constitution (for he spurned it)—not in the name of the American Union, for he hated it—not in the name of the American Government, because it is spurious;—but he did it in the the name of a common humanity, and of a common manhood, which allowed to him every right which it allows to Judge Taney himself. [Applause.] He could not discuss the question in the light of a denial to him of his right by such a man. Nor would he appeal merely to the sympathies of the audience for his vindication. He would demand for himself his every right as a man and a citizen.

In Washington, D. C., he said, a colored man is not allowed to touch the reins that led the horses that convey the mails. But he had lately heard that Newfoundland dogs are being trained there to assist in conveying the mails! So that the American Government gives to a dog a privilege which it denies to a man!

He dwelt in severe terms upon the decision, and denounced the Chief Justice as a violator of the dearest right of men and citizens.

Wendell Phillips was then introduced by the Chairman, and was received with long continued applause.

He began by commenting on the fact mentioned by Mr. Remond, and upon another which he had heard in the morning. The latter was the fact that a gentleman in Pennsylvania who pays the second highest tax in the county, cannot receive from it the benefit of the education of his children.

He spoke of the superstitions regard which some men have for the Union. To try call it beneficial, but be called it ruinous, and them a victim of words. He denied that law is a protection, when it protects only the majority.

Mr. Phillips' speech, which was an hour long and was marked with all the humor, pathos and dramatic power of the man. It concluded with an appeal for the dissolution of the Union, on the ground that it is an unreligious compact, holding men in bondage, and sat down amid vociferous applause.

Infirmary for Women and Children.

The New-York Infirmary for Women and Children opened their rooms, No. 64 Bleecker street, yesterday, at 2 o'clock. The parlors were well filled by the friends of the Institution. The report of the Executive Committee was read by Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, Secretary. The Infirmary had a threefold design—to furnish women with physicians of their own sex, to give students an opportunity for hospital practice, and to train up a body of efficient nurses. It was first opened in Avenue B, in 1854, with a capital of $150. They now had $3,000 in the treasury for current expenses, promises of continued support, and the confidence of the community.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was then introduced. He could indorse this movement genealogically, for his great ancestress was a woman-physician in New Haven. This was not a new thing, only a custom fallen into disuse. As to Woman's Rights, a woman had a right to do whatever good thing she could do well. Talleyrand had said that the most successful thing in the world was success. There were few undertakings comprising three more useful designs than this which was now inaugurated in so quiet a manner; but he believed that he should yet see it among the giant institutions of the land. He welcomed everything that tended to enlarge the sphere of woman's employments. He thought women peculiarly fitted for the study of medicine.

Dr. William Elder, of Philadelphia, was the next speaker. He had watched the movement from its beginning—had seen its struggles, and had foreseen its success. He had the fullest confidence that the work was in the right hands, and thought the proposed plan of uniting practice with theory, an improvement on the method usually practiced by the schools. The medical profession was not exclusively designed either for man or woman. A good physician must combine the qualities of both; must be, according to Dr. Kane's description of a friend—a man, a woman, and two little boys.

Rev. Dr. Tyng, of Philadelphia, made a few remarks relative to the importance of rendering spiritual as well as physical aid to the patients, and closed the exercises by a prayer.

The house is large and commodious, and is well adapted to the purposes designed, and the friends of the undertaking are very sanguine of its ultimate success.

New-York Sunday School Union.

The Sabbath Schools of the City turned out yesterday in great force. The Anniversary of the New York Union was held in the evening, but the various schools met at 3 P. M. at some ten different places to hear addresses from popular speakers, to sing and so forth. The streets were all alive with the processions of the children, bearing banners, every child being badged according to his school.

The largest gathering was at the Academy of Music. That building was crowded full from orchestra to ceiling,—not full only, but overflowing. There were not less, probably, than 7,000 in all. For each two seats there were three children, and the aisles and lobbies were full. Mr. A. Herbert presided. Mr. Lucius Hart—by the aid of a piano, steered the music, which was very hearty, and, considering the thousands of throats it came from, marvelously in time. Speeches were delivered by Mr. J. C. Benedict and Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler—or rather those gentlemen shrewdly availed themselves of their opportunities to turn the children's uncontrollable splits and voices to good account, by such questions as they would be sure to answer, by suggesting cheers in the cheering places and for proper objects, and, when there was a little lull, by telling such stories as preached unwittingly, and left a moral snug in the little one's memory, and inextricable unless you rip him of some of his happiest reminiscences. Of course it was a prodigiously good time for every one of the children of the forty schools that convened at the Academy.

Schools Nos. 19, 20, 22, 36, 41, 69, 85, and 190, assembled in the Market-street Dutch Reformed Church, which was crowded to its full capacity. Each school as it marched to the church was preceded by its banner. George Copway (the Indian Chief) delivered a suitable address to the little ones, and singing and praying were part of the exercises.

In the Allen-street Presbyterian Church, Schools Nos. 6, 12, 13, 25, 38, 50, 56, 97, 130 and 150, held their anniversary. There were about 800 children present. In the absence of the speakers appointed to address the children, Mr. D. Mcarny was called upon and extemporized an appropriate address.

In the First Baptist Church in Broome-street. Nos. 10, 26, 54, 57, 66 and 73 were presided over by Rev. Mr. Wood. Rev. Dr. Hutton and Rev. Mr. Rosetter spoke happily to the children, who numbered about a thousand.

Of the eleven schools assigned by the programme to meet at the Stanton street Baptist Church, only four were present, viz: Nos 51, 96, 46 and 95—the rest, through some misunderstanding, having gone to the Academy of Music. The children listened to addresses from Messrs C. W. Sanders, E. P Hisgox, Mr. Van Metre, and Ex-Captain Hart, of the Seventeenth Ward Police.

The meeting in Carmine-street Church, was under the direction of William Oland Bourne, and was attended by Nos. 27, 48, 49, 63, 70 and 81, the Half Orphan Asylum. Rev. Dr. McLeod, Pastor of the Twelfth street Church; Rev. J. Q. Adams, of the Christopher street Baptist Church; Rev. F. R Hastings, of the Carmine street Church; and L. E. Jackson and Wm. Oland Bourne, Esqs., addressed the meeting. Brief and animated addresses, alternated with several well known school hymns and songs, beside those on the programme, made an hour and a half pass quickly with interest and profit. Mr. Bourne's exhibition of idols, &c., will not soon be forgotten.

Seven schools met in the Baptist Church in Twenty-fifth-street, with an aggregate of some 1,200 children. After a chapter of scripture was read by Rev. Dr. Timmes and a prayer made by Rev. Mr. Bolingham, addresses were listened to from Rev. Mr. Gantz and Rev. Dr. Burchard.

Addresses were made at the Spring street Presbyterian Church by David B. Scott, Esq., Rev. Dr. Campbell, the Pastor, and by Rev. Mr. Reed, of the Laight street Baptist Church. Some 1,200 children were present from six schools.

The exercises were commenced in Forty second-street Presbyterian Church by the reading of a chapter from the Bible by Rev. Dr. E. T. Winter; a prayer was offered by Rev. Michael Welch. Addresses followed from Rev. E. E Rankin, and from Rev. P. F. Jones, of the Central Park Baptist Church. Ten schools were present, numbering some 1,500 pupils.

Every seat of the Twenty-third-street Presbyterian Church was crowded, and many were compelled to stand. Ten schools were present, having from 1,200 to 1,500 pupils. Addresses were made by Rev. F. G. Clark, the Pastor of the Church; Rev. Dr. A. D. Gillette, Rev. Dr. Van Zandt, of the Ninth-street Dutch Reformed Church, and by Rev. Mr. Gantz.

General Meeting of the Sunday School Union.

The Anniversary of the New York Sunday School Union was held on Tuesday evening, at the Central Presbyterian Church in Broome-street. The attendance was full, and composed chiefly of ladies. The exercises commenced by the choir singing an anthem; then Rev. Dr. Riddle, of Jersey City, offered prayer.

Rev. Chancellor Ferris briefly alluded to the decease, during the past year, of Mr. Monais, one of the Directors of the Union. Among other incentives to continued exertion, he alluded to the fact that more than 60,000 children remain untaught in this City, and for whom as yet there was no provision. He called upon the Secretary to read the report, which, after appropriate music, was given.

From this document it appears that the operations of the Society during the year have been highly successful. A plan of systematic visitation has been put in operation, whereby every destitute child in the City may be sought out and if possible brought under the influence of the Sabbath School:

Whole number of Scholars on register during the year	60,000
Whole number of Scholars now on register	43 000
Largest attendance in March	26,000
Number of Superintendents	250
Number of Teachers	4,200
Largest attendance of Teachers	3 700
Number of Teachers professing Religion	3,000
Whole number of Scholars admitted during the year	25,000
Whole number of Scholars discharged during the year	14,000
Whole number of Scholars connected with Christian Congregations	11,000
Whole number not so connected	25,000
Whole number of volumes in the libraries	34,000
Whole number of conversions reported	450
Whole number of contributions to the cause	10 500

Rev. Dr. Thornton Mills, of the Presbyterian Church, was the next speaker. He spoke of the bearings of the Sunday School upon the history, the mission, and the destiny of our country. It was the province and the duty of the Church of Christ to bring this immense extent of territory within the pale of his truth, and the responsibilities of the Church are proportionate to the rich temporal and spiritual advantages that have been extended to us as one of the foremost among the nations of the earth in extent of resources. We are a highly civilized people. But our boasted civilization is the civilization of Avarice; it lacks the purity, the Christ-like character of that transformation which is permanent, valuable and saving. If society is to be saved on so as to annul the intensity of worldly struggles, it is hopeless to commence with those whose hearts are already benumbed and deadened by disastrous influences. We must commence with the young—we must supply the growing population with something that will supplant party strife, or the love of wealth and distinction, and all the iniquities that effect the greedy and giddy in their pursuit of the things of this world. Men are born,—not republicans, but despots. Under the influence of self-will, where will that depravity we inherit from Adam, where will it end? What was real estate worth in Sodom? when the yells of incarnate fiends, or of men worse than they, might at any moment measure out the doom of the innocent. The reverend speaker spoke strongly of the horrible profanity and blasphemy assailing the ears of decency on every hand; the curses and oaths that are prompted, not by republican, but by a terrific and despotic self willed defiance of all authority, human or divine. Sunday schools presented to the young mind a barrier against such inbreeded insensibility to all that is even manly.

To a late hour other lively speakers were addressing the assembly.

The following is the list of officers for the ensuing year:

President—Rev. Isaac Ferris, D D.
Vice Presidents—Wm. Forrest, M C. Morgan, J. R Hurd, A. Woodruff, W Winturton, G. S Conover.
Treasurer—Wm. Libby
Corresponding Secretary—J N McElligott.
Recording Secretary—S. Holmes
And twenty-four gentlemen as managers.

TUESDAY, May 12—P. M.

The Foreign Banking houses have increased their remittances of Gold for the Africa to-morrow, and the sum total engaged this afternoon we find to be about $1,400,000. The corresponding direct Cunarder this week last May, took out $1,431,165, and the course of the demand this season is so nearly identical as to cause the several shipments of the month to foot up very much the same in every instance. The demand for Bills from the Import trade was not heavy, and as so many of the Bankers employ Gold by the present packet, the business in Sterling was comparatively moderate, the rate leaving off tame, 109¼@109½. The sales of the day, for ready money, were generally 109¼@109⅝, and where a few days grace were allowed to the buyer, 109⅝ per cent was paid. Francs steady at 5.18¾@5.17½. There was some activity in demand loans to-day, caused by the preparations for the steamer, but generally the market is comfortable, and discounts on first-class paper readily had at from 7½ to 9 per cent. The Sub-Treasury received $105,400, disbursed $184,927, and held at the close a balance of $14,115,649. The Bank Statement of this morning is very favorably construed in money circles. The receipts of Gold from the interior are continued in moderate sums this week.

The Stock Market, without a large appearance of actual business, ruled pretty steady through the forenoon, and, as on Monday, gained some strength at and after the Second Board. The demand for Southern Michigan continues active, and the orders at the Board, this afternoon, put the price up to 67@67¼ per cent.—an advance of 2¼ per cent. on the closing sales of yesterday. The subscriptions to the Guaranteed Stock have gone on rapidly, viz.:

Thursday, May 7	$719,600
Friday, May 8	1,042,0 0
Saturday, May 9	1,678,000
Monday, May 11	2,032 000
Tuesday, May 12	2,341,800

As only $2,800,000 can be awarded before hearing from the Foreign interest, on behalf of which $200,000 will be reserved, the full subscription is now virtually secured, with the prospect of a large excess before the closing of the list on the 20th instant, which will have then to be apportioned. The cash stock of the Illinois Central continues scarce and in demand, and 137 per cent. was paid for 500 shares after the official list of sales was [illegible] The other Railroads about the same as yesterday. The earnings of the Chicago and Burlington line for April were $145,726, against $132,519 same month last year.

The decease of three prominent merchant bankers of this City, which, in quick succession, has recently been announced, will distribute, it is estimated, about $3,000,000 to their respective heirs. Mr. Samuel Nicholson left about $800,000, which goes by his will in nearly equal proportions to the family relatives of his deceased wife and to his own sisters in Ireland. He left no children. His nephew, resident in this City, is made the executor, with a legacy of $50,000. Mr. John F. A. Sandford, and Mr. Jasper Grosvenor leave each an estate valued at over a million of dollars. The legatees of the first are, Mrs. Sandford and three children, including a son by a previous marriage. Mr. Grosvenor we hear leaves only one child.

The Metropolitan Bank has resolved upon a further increase of capital to the am ount of a million of dollars, thus raising the total to $4,000,000. The Bank of Commerce has now been in operation seventeen years. It was one of the earliest of the large City institutions under the liberal and enlightened Free Banking Law of New York. The charter dates from 1840, and the capital was nearly uniform for sixteen of the seventeen years, at $5,000,000. This sum and such of the deposits as were not actively employed in banking, amounting together to an average not far from seven millions of dollars, were turned, in discounting paper something like eight times a year, the maturing paper averaging little over 40 days. The Discount books since the beginning of the bank will probably show an aggregate of eight hundred and fifty millions of dollars, or an average for the 17 years of $50,000,000. The total loss by bad debts in all this period is only $84,000, with no debt in suspense at the present time. The loss, therefore, has not been quite one tenth of a mill to the dollar, or one dollar in bad paper out of every $10,000 discounted!

There has been a good deal said of late about the growing extravagance of our people in consuming foreign luxuries. Let us now test this by the single though important item of Silk fabrics, this year with last. The increased price, owing to the reported failures, partial and serious, of the silkworm crop in France and the South of Europe, is equal, we understand, to an average advance of at least 15 per cent. The increase of consumers, measured by enhanced wealth and population, should be 10 per cent. more. Say 25 per cent. to be added since 1856, in order to fairly equalize the question, of the quantity of Silks, on the assumption that enhanced prices are not permitted to interfere with the luxurious habits of our people. Now, the value of Silks imported into New-York, (being fully two-thirds the importation of the whole country,) for the first four months of 1856, was $12,892,052
Same months 1857 12,744,462
Decrease this season $147,590

There figures incontestibly show that there has been no growth of extravagance, at least in this leading item of luxury, notwithstanding the largely increased wealth of the people to indulge it. On the contrary, it is quite evident that the quantity consumed has been diminished in more than the proportion of the enhanced price; in further proof of which we can state, that during the four months of 1856, the Silk importation at New-York amounted to 19,456 packages, whereas, in the same months this season, the importation amounts to only 17,239 packages. Our people are extravagant enough in consuming foreign-grown luxuries, but it is best we should not judge them over severely.

The following paragraph, from the Journal of Commerce, on the probable movement of money after the 1st July, takes a just view of the croaking spirit evinced in regard to this as well as other bugbears employed in Wall-street:

"No one need charge Americans with want of forethought, since it is the "ills which never happen that chiefly make us wretched." The "first of July" has grown into a kind of bugbear, and if the comet were actually to come "forninst" us on that day, we could have but little more trouble than some are now predicting. The difficulty may be looked fairly in the face, and will be less terrible when its vagueness is lost by actual scrutiny. The ground of apprehension is, that the imports thrown into bond will accumulate, awaiting the change in the Tariff on the 1st of July, when the funds required for duties will draw so much specie from the banks as to create a panic, and lead to commercial embarrassment. Let us look at the probabilities of the case. The value of goods in bond on the 1st of July, 1856, was $12,612,631 and this ran up to fifteen millions on the 1st of September. We showed the total on the 1st of May, instant, to be $20,665 493. Suppose that this should increase so that on the 1st of July it should amount to thirty millions. It would not be fair to expect a reduction during the first two weeks of July of over five millions of dollars, upon which the duties would be a little less than one million of dollars. The goods having been once bonded are not likely to be withdrawn faster than wanted for consumption, and we think that a reduction of ten millions from the value in bond during all the month of July, in large estimate. This will take two millions only for duties; and this is not as much as will be saved between this date and the 1st of July by the entry of goods for warehousing instead of consumption."

The credit of the Great West, as an exporter, has recently been unpeached, and that section charged not only with being deficient in the material wherewith to pay her debts, but with "outgrowing the notion of debt paying." This charge is more directly applied, by one of our contemporaries, the New-York Tribune, to the Northwest. The best answer to this is a brief reference, by practical figures, to the export movement of Breadstuffs, chiefly the product of the Northwest, out of the port of New-York, during the present, as compared with the last fiscal year, ten months of which have now elapsed. It will be borne in mind that the result of the last year's movement was the heaviest in bulk, as well as value, ever before known.

Without reference to the relative prices of Breadstuffs, which in the early part of the fiscal year 1856 were stimulated by the War demand from England and France, we may add to the foregoing table this remarkable comparison and recapitulation of the quantities sent forward from this port, mainly the produce of the Great West:

EUROPEAN DEMAND ON NEW-YORK FOR BREAD.

	1857	vs.	1856.
Wheat	9,200,531 bushels	against	3,941,610 bushels
Flour	1,478,459 barrels	against	1,254,874 barrels
Corn	8,191,930 bushels	against	3,104,542 bushels.

Of the ten months in the table, only the single month of February compares unfavorably with the previous year. In the last two months, March and April, the Export of Wheat doubled the export of the same months in 1856.

The exports of the leading articles of domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods, for the week, were $1,458,715 against $1,196,759, the corresponding week last year.

The deficit in the Cotton crop of 1856–57, as compared with the previous crop, is now 465,000. Most of the authorities now concede that the crop total must fall below 3,000,000 bales, and the latest estimates are varied from 2,900,000 to 2,950,000 bales. We have the following views on the general subject of this important staple from a neighboring city, which, without [illegible] we present as embodying [illegible] statistical argument:

Cotton—The Supply and the Prospect.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The last steamer from England brought advices of a movement now being made for the purpose of insuring a more ample supply of this article. It is now plainly perceived that the consumption has overtaken the production, and something must be done to remedy it. If the English spinners would quietly let the matter take its regular course, it would regulate itself. As the scarcity became more apparent, the article would rise, and then would follow the usual sequence of a check in the consumption, which would make the short supply sufficient. But this would entail the closing of nearly one-third of the cotton factories in the Kingdom, and cause upwards of one hundred thousand hands to be thrown out of employment. They have gone on increasing their manufacturing interests in Great Britain, until they have now in operation nearly 35,000,000 of spindles, requiring about 1,000,000,000 pounds of cotton to supply them. It is evident that the crop of 1856, the delivery of which is just being closed, will result in a deficiency of nearly 550,000,000 bales below that of the preceding year. Nearly the whole of this deficiency will be taken off of the export from this country to Great Britain. The deficit in the export to this date is already upwards of 300,000 bales, and must rapidly increase from now until about July 1, when it will show nearly 500,000 bales. This fact becomes more important when we examine and find that the stock of cotton on hand in Great Britain on Dec. 31, 1855, was 486,000 bales; and, after the delivery of the largest American crop on record, 3 530,000 bales, the stock on Dec. 31, 1856, had diminished to 332,000 bales. The present American crop will barely reach 3 000,000 bales; many estimate it even now as low as 2,900,000; but, deducting for the unusually large amount that has been destroyed by fire and losses at sea, probably the net amount of crop might be taken at 2,950,000 bales.

The weekly circulars from Liverpool would indicate that the advance in price which has been from 6¾d. for Orleans Middlings in September last, to 7¾d. at the commencement of this year, and at which the market has since been pretty stationary, has already considerably checked the consumption. But the statistics of the export of Cotton Goods from the Kingdom contradict this statement, as, so far as received they show a large excess over the corresponding months of preceding year. Many parties have taken it for granted that the advance already established in price would necessarily check the consumption, and thus make the supply equal to the demand. It is doubtful, however, whether prices have yet reached that point. In 1834 the average price of Upland Middlings was 8 1 16d, and the consumption was 303,000,000 lbs. In 1855 prices advanced to 10¾d., and the consumption was 819,000,000 lbs. In 1848, average price of Cotton was 4¾d.; the consumption was 582,203,000 lbs. In 1849 Cotton advanced to 5d, and the consumption was 616 770 000; and in 1850, Cotton having advanced to 7¾d., the consumption was 574,738,000 lbs. So, also, in 1855, the average price of Cotton was 5¾d., and the consumption was 844,812,000 lbs.; whilst in 1856, Cotton at 6¾d, the consumption reached 905,410,000 lbs. We have already passed through nearly twenty weeks of the present year, and prices have not averaged over 7¾d. It does appear to us in the present prosperous condition of trade, and with the yearly increasing demand for cotton fabrics, both from the general increase of population and the new fields of commerce that are being opened, that prices must advance in a greater ratio than either in 1855 or in 1850 to cause any considerable stoppage in the use of manufactured goods. From present indications, however, prices of Cotton will be almost entirely under the control of importers in Liverpool after July 1. The amount that can be received for the last six months of the year will be so trifling that they can, probably, regulate prices in any way they desire.

The subject to which universal attention will be attracted during the Summer will be the prospects of the growing crop. The season has commenced under the most inauspicious circumstances. They have never had so backward a Spring. In many places where ice is never seen even in mid-Winter, it has shown itself during last month. In Marengo Co., Ala., in which is situated the rich canebrake region, famous as the best cotton producing land in the world, there was a fall of snow of two inches. Usually at this time cotton is so far advanced as to be "chopped out" to a stand. Now, we doubt if there is scarcely a field that shows the first sign of vegetation. Taking for granted it requires a certain number of weeks to perfect the boll from the first appearance of the plant, until it is ready for picking, we can easily perceive how in this respect the season is shortened, while it must multiply the contingencies for the casualties to which it is subject. We do not wonder at the sensitive

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM NICARAGUA.

Reported Evacuation of Rivas by the Fillibusters.

WALKER ON BOARD A BRITISH FRIGATE.

The following dispatch was received yesterday:

NEW ORLEANS, Wednesday, May 13.

The Steamship Prometheus, from New-York, 2d inst., via Havana, has arrived at this port.

She connected at Havana with the Steamship Granada, from Aspinwall, and brings the California mails of April 20.

The news from Nicaragua, is highly important, conveying, as it does, intelligence of the retreat from the country of Gen. WALKER.

The Havana correspondent of the True Delta, says that a private letter has been received in that City, stating that General WALKER has evacuated Rivas, and was on board a British man of-war at San Juan del Sur.

It is proper to add that we have not received confirmation of this newe by the George Law, which arrived at this port last evening from Aspinwall. It may, however, be correct, as the Granada left Aspinwall after the George Law.

Our advices from Rivas by the last steamsr, it will be remembered, xtended to the 13th of April, and at that date WALKER with a reduced force of 150 men, and without provisions, occupied only two houses and was closely surrounded by the Allies. The report, therefore, of his evacuation of the country bears upon its face a strong probability.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PANAMA, Monday, May 4, 1857.

Our news from the United States of the 6th ult., seemed to indicate that the President would take no immediate steps to enforce the claim made by Mr. MORSE, at Bogota, but would try further negotiation, and in case of another failure, submit the whole subject to Congress next year for its action. This idea has, at any rate, obtained to so great a degree among the Cundmenoe, that, in view of this long postponement, very little feeling has been manifested on the question of our difficulties the past fortnight. Besides, it has become perfectly apparent to everybody, that the fiscal condition of this State is such, that the wheels of Government cannot revolve much longer without assistance from the General Government; or at least, without the benefit of the taxes upon the income of the railroad, which naturally belong to the State, but which now go to pay the interest on British bonds. It is also admitted that New-Granada has not the means to defend the Isthmus against the United States, either in men or money. So that the number of those who contemplate with complacency "foreign tutelage," as Señor POMBO says the propositions of Mr. MORSE amounted to, is becomnig every day greater.

I wrote you that OSPINA, the new President, would be glad to settle the question at issue with the United States, and get it off his hands, if he could do so with safety to himself and his Administration, even if it were neccsary to accept the propositions and conditions of our Commissioner in their fullest extent. And I also quoted from El Tiempo, at Bogota, the intimation that OSPINA was dissatisfied with the course things had taken in the prompt rejection of our demands, as "he is said to look forward to the time when the Isthmus of Panama shall be alienated completely from New Granada." The newe from Bogota, with dates up to the 9th of April, brings ample corroboration that President OSPINA is not the only public man who believes that the interests of the Isthmus of Panama so widely diverge from those of other portions of the Republic, that it had better be left to the governance of its own people, and to the foreigners who are so rapidly progressing in the go-ahead ideas of the time, that they find the slow coach at Bogota a very inconvenient vehicle on which to ride on to prosperity.

The bill giving the President unlimited power for the defence of the Isthmus, in case of invasion by the United States, which passed a second reading in the House of Representatives having come before the SENATE, Don JUSTO AROSEMENA, of Panama, with several other Senators, refused to give it their support. He stated, that to preserve the Transit free, it was only necessary to render effective the obligations imposed on the Railroad Company to pay a police force for that service. He spoke at length on Isthmus matters, and the peculiar position of the State of Panama as regards commerce, and the interoceanic Transit, and concluded by recommending for the consideration of Congress the following project, declaring the State entirely independent, and placing it under the protection of France, Great Britain, the United States and Sardinia.

LAW RELATIVE TO THE NEUTRALITY OF THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

ARTICLE 1. The Executive Power shall negotiate with the governments of Great Britain, France, the United States and Sardinia the celebration of a treaty on the following bases:

1. The Isthmus of Panama, at present an integral part of New-Granada, shall be hereafter a Sovereign and Independent State, free for the commerce of all nations, under the guarantee and protection of the contracting powers.

2. Limits the boundary lines to that lately made with Costa Rica, and that which, according to the law of 1847, divides the province of Choco from the territory of Darien.

3. The islands on both oceans, at present belonging to the State shall be included, as also those of San Andres, New-Providence and others, forming the present Canton of San Andres in the province of Carthagena.

4. The contracting powers shall have liberty to transport their mails over the railroad or any other interoceanic route as follows: New Granada, without paying anything either to the State or to the Railroad Company, England and the United States to pay $50,000 a year each to the State, and France and Sardinia $25,000 each, besides paying to the Railroad Company ten cents a pound for letters, and one cent a pound for newspapers. The Railroad Company to pay also $50,000 a year to the State of Panama.

5. The State of Panama shall not tax mails, &c. The Railroad Company may charge for mails of nations not parties to this treaty.

6. The State of Panama shall acquire the rights and obligations of New Granada in regard to the Railroad Company, except those reserved by this law.

7. The Railroad Company shall make a new treaty with the State of Panama, not only setting out the new privileges, but explaining disputed clauses in the present contract.

8. New Granada only reserves the right to redeem the road according to the contract and the free passage of her mails, troops, munitions of war, officials, &c.

9. In the new contract the contracting powers shall guarantee its fulfillment.

10. If the Company refuses to make a new contract, it shall be bound to the State of Panama as it now is to the Republic of New Granada, except the clause in paragraph 8.

11. The State of Panama shall levy no tax on ships or merchandise coming to its ports, nor shall ships and merchandise belonging to the State of Panama be taxed in the ports of the contracting powers.

12. The State of Panama to be exempted from the New Granadian National Debt.

13. The State of Panama shall charge no postage on Granadian Mails, and vice versa.

14. Steamers shall carry New-Granada and Panama correspondence free, and are exempt from port charges.

15. The treaties now in force between New-Granada and the contracting nations shall not be binding on the State of Panama.

16. The contracting nations may maintain vessels of war in the ports of the State of Panama, to protect the transit and trade, and may keep troops on board, but they shall only be disembarked in case of actual necessity.

17. In case of war between the contracting parties themselves, or between them or any one of them and other nations, the State of Panama shall be neutral.

18. In case of dispute between one of the contracting parties and the State of Panama, it shall be settled by the arbitration of the others, who have power to call in an umpire.

19. Disputes with nations not parties to this treaty, to be settled, if possible, by the arbitration of the contracting parties.

20. The contracting nations shall bind themselves that none of them shall seize the State or any part of it, and they shall protect it against pirates and lawless adventurers.

21. The contracting nations or their armies shall not interfere in the internal affairs of the State, except in case of absolute necessity, to protect the transit, and with the consent of three of the contracting powers.

22. The citizens and subjects of the contracting nations shall enjoy the same civil and political rights as the natives of the State, and in the Territory of the contracting parties the citizens of the State of Panama shall enjoy like privileges.

23. The contracting powers shall guarantee reciprocally the fulfillment of this treaty.

24. Said treaty shall remain in force for ten years, as far as regards the provisions of clauses 1, 16 and 20, after which the State of Panama shall dispose of her own fate as she thinks best, but at no time can Slavery be introduced.

ART. 2. If any of the nations named herein refuse to become parties to the treaty, the others can do so independently of them.

ART. 3. The treaty made in conformity with this law shall be considered in force from the day it is signed, &c., &c.

The bill for the settlement of the Mackintosh claim is far from being satisfactory to the British Minister, Mr. GRIFFITH. In a correspondence which has just been published, dated March 19, Mr. GRIFFITH says that, on the 5th, foreseeing that the Executive and Congress were not disposed to adjust the claim on a basis that would be acceptable to his Government, he wrote the commander of the fleet that he should no longer advise against his enforcing the payment, and should repeat that intimation on the morrow. Mr. MARK, the British Vice-Consul, also appears in print, with the following hint at the veracity or judgment of Señor POMBO, Secretary of Foreign Affairs: "Mr. GRIFFITH has never in any way, directly or indirectly, done anything to warrant Señor POMBO's deliberate declaration that he could be led to accept, as a final settlement of the question, the project he introduced into Congress." Mr. GRIFFITH's letter to Baron GOUEY, French Minister, who undertook to mediate between the parties, is also a rather cross-grained document. He says: "I do not hesitate to declare that Señor POMBO always appeared to me to have had his mind so excessively preoccupied against the claim, that he could scarcely hear with patience the name of MACKINTOSH mentioned." Again: "From the first moment in which the law in question was introduced, I used every effort to convince the Executive and the Chambers, as well verbally as in writing, that it was impossible for this Legation to accept the project as the base of a negotiation; so that I have no cause to charge myself with being a party to the loss of precious time in useless discussion, under the erroneous conviction derived from the assurances of Señor POMBO that the law would satisfy my Government. If he gave those assurances with the object to gain time, and throw the responsibility of regulating the matter, which had become so embroiled under the Administration, upon the new one, I must confess that the proceeding appeers to me to be one of questionable propriety. You will do me the favor to communicate this letter, and the documente inclosed, to the Secretary of State for Foreign Relations of New-Granada, to the end that the illusion under which he is suffering may be dissipated, once for all." One of the documents inclosed is a letter from MACKINTOSH, in which he very modestly regrets that he did not claim $600,000 or $700,000 damages, for the breaking of the original contract. He styles the tone of Señor POMBO on the matter of the claim, as "indecent and pretentious." Diplomacy, you will perceive, if it progresses downwards at this rate, will soon be in search of adjectives other than those in family dictionaries, with which to enforce its demands.

On the 21st March, Señor POMBO responde to Baron GOUEY, that in his action he has been the faithful interpreter of the sentiments of the President, and has proceeded with his full knowledge and consent. He returns to Baron GOUEY the letter of Mr. GRIFFITH, and also that of Mr. MACKINTOSH, with the remark that "their language is of such a nature that he does not consider it decorous to make any comment upon them."

I wrote you before that the amount still claimed in settlement for a hundred thousand dollars worth or so of old Tower muskets, and other refuse military trash, upon which a very large sum has already been paid, reaches $580,000, and that the bill referred to deducted $300,000 from the sum total.

Some accounts say that the matter is likely yet to be amicably settled through the good offices of the French Minister. But nevertheless, a large fleet has gone to Carthagena; and unless the whole amount is at once conceded, the ports of Carthagena, Santa Martha, &c., will be blockaded. The Orion, 90 guns, the Basilisk and Intrepid, were already at Carthagena. The Indus, Termagant and Cossack, are there or thereabouts; and the Tartar, when she gets rid of her cargo of fillibusters, is ordered to join the fleet. It will be commanded by Sir HOUSTON STEWART, expected from Jamaica in the Indus. No doubt, however, that OSPINA and his Congress will shell out the needful, when they find they must.

President OSPINA was installed and took the oaths of office on the 1st day of April, in the Church of San Domingo. His address affords no indication of the course he will pursue on any of the great questions at issue with his Government. It is a mere dissertation on Republican constitutional government. Unlike all other Spanish-American inaugurals, he only mentions WALKER as he might have mentioned MORGAN, (not Charley,) or any other bandit, to illustrate a principle. On the 2d of April the diplomatic corps paid their respects to the President, and the French Minister acted as spokesman in the congratulations usual on such occasions.

The new Cabinet is made up as follows: JUAN ANTONIO PARDO, Secretary of Foreign Affairs; MANUEL A. SANCLEMENTE, Secretary of the Government, and charged with the business of the War Bureau; JOAQUIN VALENCIA, Secretary of the Treasury. FLORENTINO GONZALEZ retains his position of Attorney-General, I believe. PARDO is one who believes this country and all Spanish America would have been better off to have remained colonies of Spain. SANCLEMENTE is said to have been implicated in the revolution of 1851. He formerly resided in Panama, where he was Commercial Judge for a short time. He had the reputation of being a good, easy, quiet, very lazy man, and nothing more. VALENCIA is conceded to be an honest, upright man, but little inclined to progressive ideas.

The bill, changing the constitution so as to adopt the federal system, dividing New-Granada into eight States, has been defeated in the House of Representatives by a small majority.

The French claim for $81,000 for spoliations on the French fleet by the Columbian cruisers has become a law.

The Panama Railroad Company are endeavoring to get the decree of Gov. JUSTO AROSEMENA, declaring the Railroad to have been completed on the 20th January, 1855, annulled. Señor GONZALEZ, Attorney-General of the nation, however, advises the Governement not to sanction the revoke of this decree.

The Company claim that the road is not yet finished, and wish their 20 years' privilege, before they must sell it out for $5,000,000, to date from 30th September, 1853, that date making up the eight years they were allowed for its completion, thus extending the time of the charter three years and eight months. They say that since the time the Government declared the road open, they have expended a million of dollars on it, $200,000 of which is for a single bridge over the Chagres River; that they are now changing all the wooden bridges on the whole route for iron ones; that they have not yet got all their furniture on the road; that they have passenger depots and freight houses yet to build; that the road has yet to be brought into the city of Panama; and that, lastly, the official examination which their contract stipulates shall be made before the road is opened, which is to follow the notice of the Company that the road is completed, has not yet been made. The Government contends that the road was completed when the trains first commenced to pass regularly over the whole route, which they have continued to do since January, 1855, with freight and passengers; and that the fact that the Company did not notify its completion when it was notorious to all that it was completed, is no fault of the Government; and consequently, that no exemption can be claimed on account of the examination not being officially made. It does not follow, they say, because eight years were granted to the Company within which to complete the road, that they can gain seven years by completing it in one. There seems to be room for argument on both sides.

The flag-ship Independence and the sloop-of-war Decatur still remain at Panama, and the Cyane at Colon. The latter ship ought to be relieved immediately by a larger ship. For the next six months it will rain about all the time at Colon, the atmosphere at the same time being extremely close and hot. To keep men and officers stowed away under deck is such a climate on a small ship, is rather a hard case. The same remarks will apply to the Decatur. The St. Marys is at San Juan del Sur. If WALKER and the remnant of his force should be so lucky as to get on board of her, they must come to Panama, as she has not sufficient provisions to go North. The sloop of-war John Adams is at Callao and the Chinchas. The British 84 gun-ship Monarch, the Pearl, 22, and the Cockatrice, 4, and the French war steamer Lancelot, were at Callao and the Chinchas. French war-ship Alcibiades, and British corvette Satellite, was at Valparaiso.

"Judge" JENKINS who, together with his remarkable long waits heard, was sent from San Francisco as Consul to Arica some eight months since, to supersede VAN CAMP, arrived here last week viâ Australia and Valparaiso. He says his object in returning is to show that VAN CAMP robbed American merchants of all he was charged with robbing from them. It seems to me that the Judge could not have had much time for investigation, considering the many thousands of miles he has made on sailing ships the last eight months. It would also seem that the Government should have much more need that a Consul should remain at his post where so much stealing and rascality is carried on as at Apia, than to have him show that his predecessor was a knave.

The Governor of Panama issued a Proclamation a week since, forbidding the landing of fillibusters in Panama, unless they can give security that they will proceed immediately from the wharf to the Railroad, and thence to Colon, to embark at once for the United States. Captains of ships must pay a fine of $10 on each fillibuster they bring into this or other ports of the State, without this guarantee. Steamship agents are to be fined $25 for any attempt to evade the law. The following is the

DECREE

Prohibiting the entry into the State of Panama of the Adventurers who have taken, or have intended to take part in the Central American War.

THE GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF PANAMA, CONSIDERING: 1. That in the territory of Central America, a war of Vandalism is carried on by successive parties of adventurers, who set out from various ports in the United States for said region.

2. That many of these adventurers frequently arrive at the ports of the State of Panama, either in consequence of the recourse which they meet with at the scene of their depredations, or from the difficulties which they encountered in attempting to arrive there.

3. That New Granada, in its capacity as a Republic allied with and adjoining Central America, should consider said adventurers as a common enemy.

4. That it is moreover necessary to adopt, against them, some means of precaution, in case the project of invading the Territory of the State of Panama should be true as the periodicals of the United States assert.

DECREES:

ART 1. The entry into the Territory of the State of Panama, of every individual who comes from the Territory of Central America, or who has intended or intends to go there, after having taken part, or with the intention of taking part in the war at present waging against that country, is prohibited.

2. Immediately on the arrival at any ports of the State of Panama from any ports of the United States or of Central America, of any ships belonging to the Navigation Company, having agents in the said port, the said agents shall give orders to the captain of the ship not to disembark or permit to be disembarked (in case they bring them) any of the individuals comprehended in the preceding article.

3. The Agents of the Navigation Companies shall prove that they have complied with the duties imposed by the preceding article, presenting to the chief political authority of the place of their residence, within twelve hours after the arrival of the ship, a declaration signed by the said captain, in which he shall declare, on his word of honor, that he has on board no individual comprehended in the present decree. If he does bring them, the declaration shall state their number, together with a promise that he will not disembark them or permit them to be disembarked.

4. The captains of ships who disembark, or permit to be disembarked, any individual of which the present decree treats, shall be obliged to reembark them; and moreover, shall pay a fine of $10 for each one he has disembarked or has permitted to be disembarked. The said fines shall be recovered from the agents of said Navigation Companies, when the captain proves that the agents have not given him the necessary notice.

5. The Agents of the Navigation Companies shall incur a fine of twenty five dollars every time they omit to present the document within the time specified, of which Article 3 treats.

6. Notwithstanding the disposition of the previous articles, the Government shall permit the disembarkation of persons prohibited by this decree, who arrive at the port of Panama, when respectable persons guarantee that said individuals shall pass immediately from the wharf to the railroad cars, and from thence to the ship which is to receive them in Colon (Aspinwall) to take them to a port which is neither Granadian nor Central American.

7. The present decree shall be published by "bando" in the districts on both coasts, as soon as it is received in them, observing the forms established by the (sic) of 21st of February last, relative to the promulgation of the laws and of certain executive acts.

Given in Panama, April 27, 1857.

BARTOLOME CALVO, Gov.

JOAQUIN ASPRILLA, Sec. of State.

Advices from Washington received since the commencement of this letter, seem to indicate that the Administration of Mr. BUCHANAN, unlike its two predecessors, is disposed, by enforcing the settlement of the Panama question, to protect American interests abroad. There is a condition, however, to the dispatch from Washington about the New-Grenadian Government inviting a renewal of negotiations, that may throw the matter back a year or two more. A settlement would be arrived at much quicker if a couple of thousand men be debarked on the Isthmus, and then commence negotiations. People hereabouts would feel more safe in future, also; if one of the conditions exacted should be punishment of the principal murderers of the 15th April.

Our next news from Rivas will probably be by the British steamer at Colon to-morrow, viâ the river and Greytown. Private letters confirm the information that there were 2,000 Guatemalians and Salvadorans at Granada on the 13th of April. They could reach Rivas in six hours, if necessary, by the Lake steamers.

A short time since Dr. CALDWELL, of the frigate Independence, at this port, obtained three weeks' leave of absence, intending in the meantime to cross the Isthmus and examine the same route from the Gulf of San Miguel, in which Lieut. STRAIN came near perishing. Dr C. ascended the Chucunaque River about 60 miles, to Chipagans, in company with his Indian guides and one man from the Independence, when his guides deserted him. However, he made his way along by land from the head of this river, sometimes being obliged to cut away the dense vegetation to within five miles of Caledonia Bay, when he was obliged to return, his provisions having become exhausted, and he and his companion having been without water for forty-eight hours, while cutting their way the last two miles they made. Before they turned about they had a clear view of the Atlantic. Dr. CALDWELL was only ten days from Chipagan back to it, and estimates the distance from the head of navigation at that point to the Atlantic at only 24 miles. He found the country much more depressed than he expected to find it, and speaks favorably of it for a canal route. I would have been glad to have made further inquiries in regard to his expedition, but being unwell, I could not write out the information he would undoubtedly impart to me. F. W. R.

IMPORTANT FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

Departure of the President of Peru from the Capital to Engage Vivanco—Lima and Callao in Danger of Falling into the Hands of the Revolutionists—News from Bolivia, Chile and Australia.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

PANAMA, Monday, May 4, 1857.

The British mail steamship New-Granada brings dates from Valparaiso to April 1, Lima and Callao to the 12th, and Paita to the 16th.

PERU.

The news from Peru is unusually important and exciting. I wrote you in my last that H. B. M. corvette Pearl, of 22 guns, was soon on her way to Callao, with the revolutionary steamers Loa and Tumbes in charge—these two latter vessels having boarded the British mail steamship New Granada, and taken from her by force 1,000 stand of arms and $32,000 in coin. The capture of the Loa and Tumbes was effected at Lombeyeque, two days south of Paita, on the 28th March, without resistance. All these vessels reached Callao on the 31st. Previous to taking them out of the Pearl addressed a note to Gen. VIVANCO, the revolutionary leader, who was then at the head of 600 men; but that officer having returned a tart and unsatisfactory reply, twenty five men were placed on board each vessel, the officers confined to their quarters, and the steamers headed for Callao. President CASTILLA, knowing that the Apurimac, the only effective steam-vessel left to VIVANCO, must stay at the Chinchas, in order to protect the Chilian vessels in taking away the guano they had bought from the latter, and that consequently there was no armed vessel to prevent him from entering any of the other ports with a force, resolved to strike a final blow at VIVANCO, who was known to be at Lambeyeque, at the head of his small force. With this view, he embarked six battallons, consisting of about 1,500 men, on board the Huaras, late British steamer Santiago, which he had just purchased for $150,000, and started for Lambeyeque.

As soon as he had got out of the harbor of Callao, Admiral BRUCE released the Loa, and that vessel went at once to the Chinchas to relieve the Apurimac. The latter vessel returned to Callao, and after a little preparation, and due consultation with the friends of VIVANCO, steered away to the north. When she had reached Lambeyequs, her commander learned that CASTILLA had safely landed there, and that VIVANCO had retreated before him—the former having dispatched the Huaras to Paita in order to take him back to Callao, after he should have overtaken and beaten the revolutionary chief. The Apurimac thereupon steame towards Paita, and off that port captures the Huaras, and just as her commander drops anchor, he perceives VIVANCO and his whole force marching into the town, having reached Paita across the desert in nine days. This was a big stroke of fortune for VIVANCO. So he immediately embarks his whole force (900 men) on the two vessels, and they both, under a full head of steam, quit the port; and the last that was seen of them they were heading southward.

In the meantime, CASTILLA is doubtlessly pushing towards Paita, and when he gets there he will have the consolation of knowing that he is without a vessel, and that he cannot get back to Callao in less than a month's hard march. If VIVANCO shall have acted with the unaccustomed energy he displayed on his retreat (Peruvians are good at a retreat) from Lambeyeque, and embarcation at Paita, the chances are decidedly favorable to his now having possession of both Callao and Lima. Of course it cannot be known at Callao what has become of CASTILLA; and VIVANCO, entering that port with all his troops safe and sound, in the President's own vessel, may report there whatever story may best suit his own purpose in regard to his enemy. Lima has only about 600 regular troops in it, and Callao hse none, save a small garrison in the Castle. The latter, to be sure, has an excellent national guard of about 1,200 men. But no one who is acquainted with the Peruvian character, supposes that these citizens are going to take up arms to decide between two competitors, especially when they don't care a copper which rules, and robs the national exchequer. Of course, if VIVANCO shall have possession of Callao, CASTILLA cannot land there, even if he should decide to return on the next British steamer, which would not reach Paita until the 21st April, five days after VIVANCO left it. You will thus see that VIVANCO will have five days to work in, before CASTILLA's friends can know what has become of him, if the revolutionists can keep their secret. Besides the President much weakened by being obliged to leave 1,500 of choicest and most reliable troops behind him. The Limeños have a proverb, that "when the President quits Lima, the people shut the gate behind him," and their faith in it will he as good as a thousand men to VIVANCO.

The Santiago had a very large amount of provisions on board when she was taken, besides 400 tons of coal.

In all this business the conduct of the British Chargé and Admiral is inexplicable. I see in several communications in the Comercio at Lima, the same ground taken that I took in the TIMES, in supposing the "outrage" on the British mail steamer to have been merely a trap to excuse the British fleet in interfering to break up VIVANCO's naval force. But Admiral BRUCE confined his operations to seizing the two vessels directly implicated, and the minute he finds his detention of these vessels is acting so favorably to the Government of Peru, he releases the Loa, the other being, it is reported, unserviceable. It follows then, to all present appearances, that the seizure of money and arms on the New-Granada was connived at by the Chargé and Admiral with an ulterior view to cripple CASTILLA; and that the seizure of the two vessels by the Pearl was only a feint, as the Loa had just as much to do with the robbery as the Tumbes had. Mr. CLAY, our Minister, is said also to be violently opposed to CASTILLA, but why, I have not heard. When I was at Lima eighteen months since he was his most intimate friend.

Several reasons are assigned why the British Government favor VIVANCO. In the first place, CASTILLA has shown a great disposition to repudiate a portion of the debt of Peru, many of the bonds of which are held by British subjects. In the second place, CASTILLA is known to be concerned in the scheme to declare the guano contract of GIANE & Co. null, and to sell outright or the Islands, in future, instead of consigning, in accordance with the propositions of a company in Lima, which I forwarded you some two months since. VIVANCO, on the contrary, has expressed, in a public proclamation, a determination to abide by all the bonds and contracts in favor of foreign Governments and citizens, with the single exception of BARRENA, the guano agent at New-York, who, he declares, has taken an active part against his cause in the present revolution. The head of this house at Lima lately sent 1,834 gold ounces to COVA & Co., at Panama, to pay for a consignment of Sharpe's Rifles for CASTILLA; and is said to negotiate loans for the President whenever the Treasury is hard up, which at present occurs quite often.

There was a good deal of dissatisfaction expressed in Lima and Callao, at the capture of the Loa and Tumbes by the British. The New Granada, it is contended, had waived her neutrality by carrying arms for CASTILLA, and laid herself liable to be treated as a belligerent. Besides, Peruvian pride is touched at seeing a national vessel come into port as a prize to a foreign flag.

Eschenique came to Coquimbo on the last British steamer. He has a strong party among the priests and wealthy men of Lima, and he might help VIVANCO in this crisis of his fate, if he would.

VIVANCO continues to sell guano at $25 per ton register, which is at the rate of say $18 the actual ton.

The officers of VIVANCO's fleet are represented as very enthusiastic in his cause, but the men are rather discontented. A revolt was attempted on board the Apurimac the night before she left Callao to chase CASTILLA, but was suppressed, and the carpenter and four men were shot.

BOLIVIA

Is enjoying a season of peace. The decree of the President, General CORDOVA, granting complete amnesty to all political offenders, had given great satisfaction. It is disputed that any alliance exists between Bolivia and CASTILLA against VIVANCO. The yellow fever is still causing great ravages in La Paz.

CHILI.

The trials by Court Martial of the persons charged with conspiracy against the Government, were still progressing in secret session at Santiago. On the 26th, the Fiscal demanded sentence of death to be pronounced on them. The Conservative Committee of the Senate had met to suspend the privileges of Don FEDERICO ERRAZURIZ, an Opposition member, that he might be brought to trial on the same charge, but he absconded. The public had not much faith that the Court would make out a case against these men. If it did, it was supposed they would be absolved by the Civil Courts of Justice.

Government continues to establish and endow new schools for both sexes, in various sections of the Republic. It is also appropriating money for new roads, hospitals and churches. Government has also resolved to assume the completion of the Valparaiso and Santiago Railroad, from its present terminus at Quillota. Estimated cost—$4,000,000.

Mining was becoming every day more profitable, on account of the increase on the price of copper. The silver mines promised better than last year.

Don PEDRO ALEXANDRI, Chargé d'Affaires of the King of Sardinia, died at Santiago, on the 30th March.

Business was not brisk, but some important sales had been effected for the home market and for Bolivia. The money market is in a depressed condition, the shipments of specie to Brazil, Coquimbo, Copiopo and other places, having affected business seriously, so that the most reliable firms were not able to pay regularly. Carolina Rice brought $7 50 to $8; Flour sold at from $9 to $10, 6 months credit, for 200 pounds; Saltpetre in Iquique is sold at $2 50 to $2 56, cash. Freights—Guano from Valparaiso (brought there under contract with VIVANCO) to Great Britain, £3 15s.; Guano from Chinchas to Great Britain, £4 10s.; Ores from Caldera to Liverpool £3 15s.

The dates by way of Chili from Sidney are to Feb. 21. Importation of most kinds of goods exceeded the sales. Some vessels, loaded with corn, had sailed from Adelaide, for England.

In New-Caledonia, the French, since the murder of M. BRANAAN, and his ten companions, were in much fear of the natives. There were only 400 soldiers and sailors on the Island, and this force is insufficient to protect the settlers. F. W. R.

MINING INTELLIGENCE—THE IMPEACHMENTS AGAINST STATE OFFICERS—CONFIRMATION OF THE BOLTON AND BARRON CLAIM—GREAT DEMOCRATIC VICTORY IN SACRAMENTO.

The California news for the fortnight ending the 20th ult. is even more devoid of interest to the Eastern reader than usual. No political action or legislative movement, worthy of note, has taken place during this time; we have no example of popular tumult or excitement, scarcely a casualty of magnitude, or a startling crime to record. Except in the southern portion of the State, where they have suffered from want of rain, the weather has been highly favorable to the business of mining, as well as to the growth of the incoming crop, which now promises to be extensive and prolific beyond precedent.

In regard to mining operations the Alta says that "more gold will be taken out of the placers during the four or five months ending with April, than has ever been gathered during the like period before. Not only will a larger aggregate amount be extracted, but there will be better wages realized to the hand, taking the mining community as a whole, than ever before. The business of mining in California is as yet only in its infancy. As a permanent branch of industry, systematically entered into and scientifically pursued, it has hardly yet been commenced. It has but just emerged from that perilous and ruinous period of experiment and trial incident to every new enterprise. This passed, its operations will be attended with more certain and satisfactory results."

The California State Treasurer, who, by previous advices, was in custody, having been surrendered by one of his original bondsmen, shortly after procured other securities, and was again suffered to go at large.

A resolution providing for the adjournment of the Legislature on the 27th ult., having passed the Senate, by an almost unanimous vote, the probabilities were that the session would then be brought to a close.

The law allowing married women to carry on business in their own names is likely to be repealed—a resolution to that effect having passed one branch of the Legislature.

The Legislative Committee have not agreed with the Governor in thinking the plan of gathering the Indian population into reservations should be abandoned, and the tribes be removed beyond the Sierras.

The Bolton-and-Barron claim has been confirmed by the United States District Court.

The bill introduced into the Assembly, for admitting the testimony of Indians, Negroes, and Asiatics, in Judicial proceedings where whites are concerned, has been defeated by a strong negative vote.

The Sacramento Bee gives full returns of the Municipal Election in Sacramento. There were three tickets in the field—the Democratic, People's and Republican. The following was the vote for Mayor, which may be taken as a fair criterion of the strength of the respective parties:

Mayor.	1st Ward.	2d Ward.	3d Ward.	Total.
Dyer, (Dem.)	687	506	763	1955
Ellis, (People's)	194	190	375	758
Rowland, (Rep.)	189	127	223	479

The whole Democratic ticket was elected. In fact, this election may be regarded as a perfect Democratic tornado. Both Boards of the Common Council, and also the School Commissioners, are all Democrats.

There are about twenty-five offices to be filled by the new Common Council of Sacramento, and over 300 expectants.

A bill providing for the peyment of the California State debt has passed the Senate by a vote of 23 to 2. It requires to be submitted to a vote of the people.

The testimony in the impeachment case of Comptroller WHITMAN has been closed, and the case submitted for decision. A conviction is hardly looked for, since the attendance of WILLIS, his former clerk, has not been secured.

JOHN HYDE, the ex Mormon Elder, has been lecturing against that delusion, to large crowds, in the various parts of the State.

No later intelligence is received from the Sandwich Islands.

News from Oregon.

HEAVY RAINS—RECEPTION FOR GEN. LANE—THE INDIANS—MINING—TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.

Our advices from Portland, O. T., are to the 4th of April:

The roads leading from Portland are reported as almost impassable, owing to the heavy rains during the Winter.

The people of Portland will give Gen. LANE a public reception upon his arrival.

The Oregonian learns that the Indians in the region of Fort Colville, are peaceably disposed, allowing the whites to pass through their country in comparative safety, yet they do not desire the presence of the whites to strengthen among them till amicable treaties are made; they look upon the whites as intruders, and may at any moment commit serious outrage upon those who venture into their country in small parties.

KAMIAKIN has sent to Col. WRIGHT, at the Dalles, a proposition for a treaty of peace.

Favorable news has been received from the mines in the interior. A Mr. HERMON has returned from Salmon River, and brought with him rich specimens of coarse gold which was picked out of the rocks on the side of the river.

The Territorial Convention of the Democracy, says the Times, would meet at Salem on the 13th April. Gen. LANE will probably be nominated as Delegate in Congress, as he seems to have but little opposition.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

American Anti-Slavery Society

The American Anti-Slavery Society held its third session yesterday morning in the City Assembly Rooms, WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, presiding. When the proceedings commenced the attendance was not as large as on the previous day.

After an announcement of the organization,

Rev. ANDREW T. FOSS, of Manchester, N. H., was introduced. He commenced by referring to the statements of speakers, to the effect that we are in the midst of a revolution. Mr. HIGGINSON had expressed the opinion that we were somewhat advanced in the said revolution. We were often in the midst of revolution. HENRY CLAY once declared that we were in the midst of a revolution, but that was one of dollars and cents. This, however, was a revolution of immensely greater importance. It was a revolution of right against wrong: of Freedom against Slavery. He knew that it was dangerous to speak disrespectfully of the acts of the fathers; and yet if his father wished his respect, he must act in such a manner as to entitle him to respect. He believed the fathers did a very wicked thing when they made a compromise with Slavery, and he meant to blame them. If their spirits were hovering around the room, and he thought they might as well be there as to be singing psalms in a seven-by-nine heaven—if, he said, they were there, he was sure they would acquiesce in the remarks of those who blamed them for what they had done. He felt as if he could look GEORGE WASHINGTON in the face and tell him he was wrong when he consented to the existence of Slavery in the United States, and to a continuance of the Slave-Trade for twenty years. He knew, and our other fathers knew, that that was wrong when they did it. Their acts had brought all the evils of Slavery upon us. The Republicans said they were anxious to govern the country, because they could take the machine and run it with much more desirable results. What right had they to suppose they could do any better, now that Slavery had been declared not sectional but national? But God would have his way, and Nature would obey God. If a man were going to put a wheel into his mill, he would put it down where the water would fall upon it; if he did not his wheel would not turn. Suppose he should put it up above the water, and then get Congress to pass an act, directing the water to run up over the wheel; then the Court should declare it constitutional, and the clergy should say there was no higher law. Then let him raise his gate; and not withstanding the acts of Congress, and the declarations of the courts and the clergy, the water would run under the wheel. It would obey God's laws. So with the progress of the subject they were discussing. If the Union were continued as at present, Slavery would continue to progress; and slaves would increase, until the whites would not be able to hold them longer in Slavery. They would rebel. If he were a slave he would twist off the head of any man who should attempt to hold him in Slavery. They would rebel. The day must come when the lurid light of burning dwellings would announce the revolt of the slave. If all support were drawn from the South now, there would be a speedy end to Slavery there. He did not recommend that we should go South and attack them with arms in our hands. He would not dissolve the Union in that way. What he did recommend was that we do not regard the enactments that bind the slave and require us to return him, if he attempts to run away to freedom. He would not regard such announcements, and if that did not dissolve the Union he would let it hang.

After that announcement he passed to say a word to the Republicans. They had been a party for some time, and what had they done? They put him in mind of the story of the boy who used to bring a number of dead wolves to the select men of his town every year and get his reward. One of the select men asked him how it was that he brought a certain number at about the same period in each year. He answered that he knew where there was a den. He was asked why he did not kill the she wolf, and answered that if he did then he would get no more whelps, and, consequently, no more head-money. So it was with the Republicans. They would hunt the whelps, (without catching them,) but never attack the old she wolf. With a declaration that Jesus Christ was a traitor; that Paul was a traitor; that WASHINGTON and the other fathers were traitors; and that he delighted in being called a traitor to our Government, he denounced the American Tract Society, and closed with an invective against Dr. GARDINER SPRING.

Mrs. ABBY KELLY FOSTER, now arose, and informed the meeting that the time for attending to financial business was near at hand. She said a resolution had been passed in an informal meeting, that the Society raise $30,000 during the coming year. They had raised $20,000 during the darkest of the past four years, and she thought that during this prosperity the brightest year of all, $30,000 was but a small sum to raise. There was a great work to be done, and they would require all they could raise. Before she took her seat, she wished to state that she was rejoiced because Kansas had not been secured to Freedom. She was sometimes she did not wish God to be made a liar. She would rather have seen Abolitionized Kansas been watered free while the debris were on the feet of slaves in the Carolinas. In conclusion, she hoped they would contribute liberally. They must depend upon their own free will as the Society had not the terrors of an orthodox hell to hold over them.

The President, Mr. GARRISON, had a word to say on the financial question. That society had a work to perform that could not be done by any mere political party, and he hoped that those who gave, would give, feeling that they were giving to a good cause, and to give liberally. Of the $20,000 raised during the last year, more than $15,000 were received from Americans. Its support was derived, in a large degree, from foreigners interested in the work; $30,000 in a year was a very small sum. The receipts of the Bible Society were $1,000 per day, and there were 4,000,000 of perishing souls to whom that Society dare not send a single Bible.

Rev. OLIVER B. FROTHINGHAM, of Jersey City, was the next speaker. He said there was no sadder fable in mythology than that of Cassandra, the daughter of old Priam, who had the gift of prophecy, but who could not obtain believers. She had the grief of knowing the danger that awaited Troy, without the power of averting it. Her prophetic declarations caused her father to deem her mad and dangerous to the State. So it was with those who told of the dangers attending a continuance of the institution of Slavery. A review of the events of the past few years did not, to his mind, warrant the conclusion that Freedom was making any progress in this nation. What had been the result of the late Presidential campaign? There was but one issue, and that was Freedom for Kansas. On that issue an aggregate of treason and ignorance was enlisted such as never before appeared in a campaign; the attack upon Senator SUMNER did much; the destruction of property and the massacre of those in Kansas who favored Freedom was widely known; all these were brought to bear, with what result? That party favoring Freedom had a candidate of exalted character. A man from the people, with a home and foreign reputation, not gathered on the doubtful field of politics, but on the field of science. Altogether, there was an aggregate of influences in favor of Freedom never before brought to bear politically, and that we could hardly hope to see brought to bear again; and yet, what was the result? Why, the election of Mr. BUCHANAN. In the former campaign FRANKLIN PIERCE received 1,601,335 votes, while General SCOTT received 1,3?8,678 to the last campaign Mr. BUCHANAN received 1,834 337 votes, and Mr. FREMONT only 1,342,812. Did not that show that the Anti-Slavery sentiment was not growing at the North? But the Republican Party disowned any sympathy with the Abolitionists from the beginning, and was consequently repudiated by them. Nevertheless, what had been done in the last campaign might be done again; and still again might the candidate of the Pro-Slavery Party be able to do without one fourth of his Southern support, and be successful. It was a time now when sentiments were easily changed into cents, and principles into dimes. Politics had become a trade, and there was little hope of succor from the Church. There were obstacles constantly in the way of the exercise of an enlarged liberal sentiment. When he heard of South-side views and Bible arguments in favor of aggression, he was reminded of the days when Christianity had not received a commercial translation; when Poor Richard's sayings had not taken the place of Christ's sermon on the Mount; when anxiety to save the Union had not taken the place of anxiety of saving men; of the time when priests thought it well to sell even the golden goblets used in serving the communion, to purchase the freedom of a slave. This was the old-fashioned Christianity; and when they turned from that to the Christianity that now obtains, it was like turning from Christianity to the darkest Paganism. After such a view, was it not clear that those who thought the most hoped the least for freedom in the future? Suppose Kansas and Nebraska should come in as Free States, there was still a larger area for the development of Slavery than all those regions North, for freedom. Some unlooked-for solution of the question might take place, but there was no prospect of a cheerful nature. What they must do, then, was to stand by their fundamental principles, until the little leaven should leaven the whole lump. They must continue to demand justice to the colored race. They must plead for the black race: a race purposely and designedly beastialized—they must plead for them, and labor to elevate them, and restore them their natural rights. It was not to him a pleasing thought that Slavery should cease simply because it became unprofitable. He did not derive pleasure from the thought that the slave should be set free when his labor became unprofitable, and be considered a nuisance, to be legislated out of the country. He wished justice for the colored man, and that immediately, even at the sacrifice of the white man's pocket. It was his conviction, arrived at after long and serious consideration, that so long as the Union continued, they could not be in a position to aid the colored bondman. The Union could not be broken up mechanically; it must take place through a change of sentiment—of spirit. Not a breaking up of external relations, but an internal growth of liberal sentiments. Southern men were beginning to see that Northern men were becoming more and more estranged, because of the difference in their connections, in their ideas of labor, of morality, and of Christianity; they were beginning to see that in that way was the Union to be severed. There was a king spoken of in VIRGIL'S Æneid, who used to punish men by lashing them face to face to a corpse. That was a specimen of an indissoluble union, but he hoped God would keep us from such a union.

Mr. PILLSBURY, when Mr. FROTHINGHAM had concluded, arose and offered the following:

Whereas, That in JOHN P. HALE, of New-Hampshire, NATHANIEL P. BANKS and HENRY WILSON, of Massachusetts, and the New-York Tribune, we recognize a full and fair REPUBLICAN representation of the acknowledged leaders of the Republican party; and

Whereas, One of these boasts of having supported a slaveholder for the Presidency, and that he would do the same again; another boldly asserts that he would to day intrust the institutions and liberties of the country to a Palmetto man, (meaning a South Carolinian,) and then added: "I would, in God's name, say, give us a Palmetto man always and forever, because where there is a Palmetto man, there is always a will;" and another assured the United States Senate and the South that the Republican Party is preëminently the party of State rights, and that Slavery would be more secure under JOHN C. FREMONT there than JAMES BUCHANAN; and the other declared also to the Senate and the South that the Republican Party is emphatically the party of the Union, and that were it in power every disunionist, North as well as South, should die a traitor's death, and leave a traitor's name to the history of the Republic; therefore,

Resolved, That until these men repudiate and recant of these doctrines and declarations, or the party repudiate these members, and openly and every where brand them as they deserve, we shall hold the party and its leaders together, however honest and true may be many of its supporters, as really more dangerous to the cause of liberty and humanity than any other party ever formed since the foundation of the Government.

The President, Mr. GARRISON, arose and remarked, that the picture of the condition of the Slavery question drawn by Rev. Mr. FROTHINGHAM, was sorrowful—and the more so because it was true. He would tell them when he would hope something for the Anti-Slavery cause. It would be when he could see a Northern audience look a contribution box fully and unflinchingly in the face. He had noticed that when the contribution box was visible a general stampede towards the door was the result. Before sitting down he wished to say a word with reference to the late Presidential election. Mr. FROTHINGHAM had remarked that Mr. BUCHANAN had been elected by a large majority. That was true, and he had no doubt that even if we had had a conscientious election, Mr. BUCHANAN, the embodiment of Border-Ruffianism, would still have been elected—but we had no constitutional election. In fifteen States there had been no constitutional election, and therefore JAMES BUCHANAN was not constitutionally President of the United States. He was not there to speak despondingly, but he must say that if they could not make New-York, Massachusetts and the rest of New-England hate Slavery and love Freedom, they need not hope to have any effect upon South Carolina, and Virginia and Georgia. When he had concluded the Society took a recess until 3 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Soon after 3 o'clock, the Anti-Slavery Society met again in the Assembly Rooms, when Mr. EDMUND QUINCY, of Dedham, Mass., was introduced. He remarked generally that there was a large class of citizens, to say nothing of the slaves, who derived no advantage nor protection from the Union. He instanced the case of Mr. GARRISON, when the State Government of Virginia offered a reward of $5,000 to any person who would secure him on Virginian Soil. Had he been kidnapped, the General Government would not have interfered to protect him, although the extent of his offending was, that about 25 years ago he published a paper in Boston, in which he expressed the opinion that the colored man had a right to himself. He then referred to the cases of Mr. UNDERWOOD, Judge HOAR, and of the College officials, who derived no protection from the Union, when inclined to express their opinions on the subject of Slavery. Again he desired to complain of the Union because it prevented his own State, Massachusetts, from righting her own wrongs and from protecting herself. With the Union she could not do that. She would not have required the aid of the United States Army to settle the matter with South Carolina. She could have whipped her with one hand tied behind her. In fact, there was scarcely a county in Massachusetts that would not contract to whip South Carolina for a very small sum. And while such was the fact, the slave interest, through the machinery of the Union, controlled the entire country. In reality, 75,000 slaveholders governed the country; and they did it because any one desiring to hold office must take an oath to support the Constitution. Such a condition of things could not last. It was as sure to fall to pieces as water and oil to separate. The Union was mechanical—there was even now no Union of opinion or of sentiment—no real Union now. And what was it at any time? Why, in his State, when the Constitution was voted for, there was but 19 majority, and that was only secured by the influence of JOHN HANCOCK, who was brought down with his limbs swathed in flannel, to give his voice in its behalf. It was not so unanimously favored as was generally supposed. There were but nine States, just the number necessary to secure its adoption. It was opposed then as they opposed it now. The people of the North were again calculating its value, and as soon as the South should find the fire circling around and scorching the scorpion Slavery, they would hurry up their emancipation. And although he was neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, he would say that when it became known that the North would not submit longer, South Carolina would be the first Slave State to move in the work of emancipation.

Miss FRANCES ELLEN WATKINS, (a colored lady,) late of Baltimore, was the next speaker introduced. She said she was the sister of an outcast race, come to seek protection and a home here. She was rejoiced because there was a portion of the earth where the exile and the outcast could find protection and a home. KOSSUTH had found it, so had the Hibernians, and so had many who had fled from tyranny and oppression. It was a glorious country—a giant Republic—and yet it was like a beautiful woman in whose heart was a deep cancer. It was a beautiful country with a deep, dark spot upon its bosom, and that was Slavery. We were a free people and yet we dare not speak, in portions of our land, in favor of Freedom. Our common schools were excellent, and yet in portions of the country it was a crime to teach a free colored child to read, although one of the first martyrs of the Revolution was a colored man. They had proscribed the colored race and then claimed that they were not their equals. Why not give them a chance to learn before they had charged with them incapacity? After speaking fluently in relation to our institutions and their effect upon her race, she drew a touching picture of her mother's grave in Maryland; spoke of her longing to visit it, and then, with much effect upon the audience, upon the dangers that would surround her were she to attempt to visit her mother's humble grave.

Mr. EDMUND QUINCY stated that there was a Mexican girl present who had some statements to make, but when called on she had not sufficient nerve to rise and speak. He then stated that her sufferings had been great while in the South, because she was a colored girl; and that if any one wished to render her pecuniary assistance, she would be at the door to receive it when the meeting adjourned.

The President now arose and offered the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, Evidently pressed and alarmed by the growing Anti-Slavery spirit of the times, threatening the withdrawal from it of public confidence and support, the American Tract Society, at its annual meeting last year, reluctantly appointed a Special Committee to inquire into and review the proceedings of the Society's Executive Committee, a complaint having been made against them for refusing to issue a single tract or a single page against American Chattel Slavery, and also for having expurgated of all condemnatory allusions to that "sum of all villanies" several foreign works republished by them; and

Whereas, That Special Committee (composed largely of eminent Doctors of Divinity) have just made their Report, which has been accepted by the Society, and which is characterized by all that is cowardly in spirit, deceptive in statement, and jesuitical in phraseology, neither criminating the Executive Committee for their past inexcusable conduct, nor admitting that they have done wrong in any instance, nor denouncing Slavery as a crime, but only vaguely alluding to "those moral evils and vices which it is known to promote;" and,

Whereas, It is manifestly designed, by this Report, to give neither offence to the slaveholders of the South, nor countenance to the Anti-Slavery movement of the North, but to quiet agitation in the ranks of the friends and patrons of the Tract Society, by administering an opiate prepared with all possible priestly cunning and skill; therefore

Resolved, That we renewedly bear our testimony against the American Tract Society, as inherently Pro-Slavery and thoroughly time-serving, and, therefore, destitute of Christian integrity and common humanity; so that to contribute to its funds, or to give it any countenance whatever, is to be guilty of a moral offence of the first magnitude.

Resolved, That, in continuing on its Publishing Committee Rev. NEHEMIAH ADAMS, of Boston, the author of that surprisingly audacious and wicked work entitled A South-Side View of Slavery, the American Tract Society has deepened its guilt, and revealed its moral deformity so plainly, that they will henceforth be utterly without excuse who shall continue to bestow their patronage upon it.

Mr. GARRISON stated that, as the report of the Society referred to in the resolutions had not been printed for a sufficient length of time to have enabled gentlemen to examine it, he would not call for their adoption at present.

Mr. WILLIAM WELLS BROWN, of Massachusetts, a fugitive slave, was the next speaker. He was loth to speak to an audience at so late an hour in the afternoon, and yet, when he saw on his right a lady who had known what Slavery was, and on his left another lady who was doing all she could to obtain the means whereby to purchase a dearly beloved husband from Slavery, his interest in the general subject would not let him hold his peace. Something of what Slavery is as it exists in the Southern States the audience ought to know, for they had been told again and again by those who had suffered under its galling chains. He was glad to see in the papers so much about the discontent of the slaves in the South. He did not believe that Godwould ever free the slave until he was ready to free himself by his own right hand. He had rather they would free themselves than be made free by anybody else; and he believed that the time had come when the slave should raise his hand in defence of his rights—to use the hoe or the axe, or anything else that circumstances might throw in his way, to aid him in gaining his freedom. He wished there could be a general insurrection next week, and he had rather a million lives were lost in an unsuccessful insurrection than that there should be no insurrection at all. He was sick of being told that his race was a subsissive one, born to be slaves. He would have them fight. To him San Domingo was one of the brightest spots on the face of the globe, for there the slaves were ready to sacrifice their lives to gain their liberties. It was because the Southern slave was thought to be submissive that Judge TANEY had declared the colored man had no rights which the white man was bound to respect. He would have the slave assert his rights and force them to respect him. He knew that his friend, C. C. BURLEIGH would not agree with him, and saw that he was eager to pounce upon his views.

Mr. BURLEIGH arose and proceeded to oppose what had been said with all his might. If he favored an appeal to physical force in the liberation of the slave, he would feel it necessary to take his name from the list of the Society, for in its constitution was a clause binding its members not to encourage an appeal to physical force. He was opposed to a resort to physical force, and he believed if the slaves were to resort to it their utter annihilation would be the result. He was proceeding to discuss the subject at some length, when

The President arose and stated that the discussion was entirely incidental. He did not know that there was any proposition to change the constitution, and therefore, he did not consider the discussion in order at that particular time. He would say, however, that the Society recognized the right of the slave to resort to physical force, as being equal with that of our fathers to resist the aggression under which they suffered for a time. He thought if Bunker Hill was good for our fathers, a Bunker Hill, somewhere down in South Carolina, would be just as good for the slave.

A motion adopting the series of resolutions preceding those last read by the President, was put and carried.

Mr. C. C. BURLEIGH wished, if the resolutions presented by Mr. PILLSBURY had been adopted, the vote might be reconsidered. He was opposed to their adoption and wished an opportunity to express his views before they should be adopted.

It was claimed that the resolutions had been adopted.

Mr. BURLEIGH called for a reconsideration.

The President called for an expression of opinion.

The resolutions were read again.

A member suggested that it might be well to quote Senator WILSON'S exact words, if they were to be used at all. He believed they were, that whoever should lay violent hands on the Constitution, on the Union, he would hang, &c.

The motion to reconsider was put and carried.

Mr. BURLEIGH moved to lay them on the table.

Mr. BURR suggested that that would carry the entire series.

The former were adopted, and Mr. BURLEIGH moved that the Pillsbury resolutions be indefinitely postponed. If they were not to be, he wished to express his sentiments.

An elderly gentleman moved that speakers be confined to three minutes each.

The President remarked that a determination to push the passage of the resolutions now, might appear like pertinacity or a desire to push to the wall.

Messrs. FOSS and PILLSBURY thought the pushing to the wall was on the other side.

Mr. BURLEIGH opposed their adoption. He believed them false in logic and false in fact.

After some further debate,

WENDELL PHILLIPS moved to lay them on the table. Carried by a vote of 17 to 6. A large majority of the audience had retired.

Mr. FOSS thanked God for the six.

Mr. PILLSBURY was anxious that they should not separate with the idea that there had been any crowding to the wall.

Some conversation ensued in a less exciting tone, and then they seperated.

American Tract Society.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF INVESTIGATION.

The American Tract Society celebrated its 32d anniversary yesterday morning at Dr. HUTTON'S Church. The audience was very large as early as 9 o'clock, the hour fixed for the opening of the preliminary business meeting, at which it was expected that the report of the Investigating Committee of last year would be presented.

The business meeting was opened by prayer, Chief Justice WILLIAMS, of Connecticut, presiding.

The report of the Committee of Investigation was presented by Judge JESUP prefaced by a few remarks from Hon. THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN, who bore testimony to the willingness with which the officers of the Society had offered facilities to the Committee in the prosecution of its labors. We give the Committee's report in full.

REPORT.

The Committee appointed, at the last annual meeting of the American Tract Society, to examine and review the proceedings of its Executive Committee, respectfully report:

That they have attended to that service, and held several meetings in the months of March, April, and May, at the Tract-house in this City.

The Committee entered upon this duty with a deeply felt sense of their need of Divine aid.

They sought the light of God's Spirit; and He who never said to "the seed of Jacob: Seek ye me in vain," granted, as we trust, a gracious answer.

It is to be remembered that the Tract Society was founded, not to discuss disputed questions in theology, or morals, or politics, but to spread the truth in its simplicity and purity, as it is held and loved by all evangelical Christians.

It is due to this interesting occasion, to record with devout thankfulness to God, the harmony and Christian confidence that prevailed in the discussion and adoption of the resolutions on the subject of Slavery, forming a part of the report.

And the Committee cherish the hope, that by the divine blessing, their views of the subject will meet the approbation of their Christian friends in all parts of our country.

It should be constantly borne in mind, that the work of faith is not complete without the labor of love and the patience of hope. And who can doubt, that with such influences as faith, hope and charity, in alliance with that chastened patience that loves to wait for the fruit until the harvest-season, this and all other moral evil shall yield to the promised triumphs of the everlasting gospel.

The Committee first met on the 17th day of March. They were most cordially welcomed by the Executive Committee and Secretaries of the Society, who proffered all the aid in their power to the Committee in the investigations and examinations which it might be deemed proper to make, and stated that the whole proceedings of the Society in their varied departments, and all the records and doings of the several Committees, would be open to inspection. They also proffered their own personal aid at any and all times when the Committee might desire it.

This Committee had several meetings, and having placed the investigation into the business and financial affairs of the Society in the hands of a sub-committee, are now enabled to give to the Society the results of their deliberations and examinations.

In their conclusions, the Committee were unanimous, and, although deprived of the personal presence of three of its members, yet their concurrence in the important parts of the Report was procured.

During all the sittings of the Committee, they were most cheerfully served by the officers of the Society, with all the facilities for their investigations which were desired.

The Committee had most full and free discussions of the various topics embraced in the Report, and for themselves cannot sufficiently express their gratitude to the Father of lights for leading them to harmonious results.

In relation to publishing upon the subject of Slavery, the Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, as marking out the line of discrimination between what the American Tract Society, according to its Constitution, may and may not publish:

Resolved, 1. That the American Tract Society was established for a definite purpose, namely: "To diffuse a knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of sinners, and to promote the interests of vital godliness and sound morality, by the circulation of religious tracts calculated to receive the approbation of all evangelical Christians."

2. That this Society cannot, therefore, with propriety allow itself to be made a special organ of any one system of religious or moral reform, such as temperance, peace, Anti-Popery, Anti-Slavery, &c.; while within its proper sphere, its influence should sustain the cause of truth and righteousness in all their departments.

3. That in endeavoring to accomplish its high and holy mission, the Society should deal even-handedly, and bear impartial testimony against all forms of fundamental doctrinal error and practical immorality, prevailing in any and every part of our country.

4. That in the judgment of your Committee, the political aspects of slavery lie entirely without the proper sphere of this Society, and cannot be discussed in its publications; but that those moral duties which grow out of the existence of Slavery, as well as those moral evils and vices which it is known to promote, and which are condemned in Scripture, and so much deplored by evangelical Christians, undoubtedly do fall within the province of this Society, and can, and ought to be discussed in a fraternal and Christian spirit.

5. That whatever considerations in the past may have seemed to recommend to the Publishing Committee the course pursued in its revision of certain works, yet, in the future publication of books and tracts, no alteration or omission of the sentiments of any author should be made; but works not adapted to the design of the Society in their original form, or by a regular impartial abridgment, should be wholly omitted.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Resolved, 6. That it be recommended to the Society to adopt the following alteration in the eleventh article of the Constitution, instead of the one proposed at the last annual meeting, namely, to add the words, "notice of the proposed alteration having been given at the previous annual meeting." The article will then read:

ARTICLE XI. This Constitution shall not be altered except at an annual meeting, and by a vote of two-thirds of the members present; notice of the proposed alteration having been given at the previous annual meeting.

FINANCIAL AND BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

In reference to the general management and financial affairs of the Society, the Committee made such examinations and investigations as seemed to be required by the general nature of the powers conferred by the Society in their appointment.

These necessarily were of a comprehensive character, and were divided into several distinct parts, which are essentially embraced in the statement of a Special Committee which is hereto attached, the substance of which was elicited in answers to questions proposed to the officers and committees of the Society.

The questions submitted, and the answers given by the committees, are also appended to this report, and will be found to contain several interesting and important facts not embraced in the preceding statement.

There is also appended to this report a statement of the salaries paid to the Secretaries and others employed at the Society's house, and also a statement of the principal agencies of colportage operations. These all show that the Society pays no extravagant salaries, allows no perquisites, and that economy and good management extend through these branches of the Society's operations.

There were upon the Committee no practical bookmen, and it was deemed proper to ask the aid of some eminent book publishers in an examination of the mode of conducting the business. These gentlemen gave their cheerful attention, and their examination and inquiries resulted in a report highly creditable to the management of this extensive business. That report is as follows:

NEW-YORK, April 14, 1857.

Having examined with considerable care, by a personal visitation to, and inspection of, the different departments of manufacture, the operations of the American Tract Society in regard to the cost of paper, printing, engraving, and binding of the books issued by said Society, we are of opinion that great care and economy are exercised in each department.

We have also considered the subject of prices at which their books are sold by the Society, and are satisfied that those prices are barely sufficient to meet the cost of manufacture and circulation.

JOHN HARPER,
ROBERT CARTER,
JOHN WILEY.

THE MODE OF KEEPING THE ACCOUNTS.

The Committee, among other subjects of inquiry, have examined the mode of keeping the accounts by the Treasurer.

This is simple in its form, but well adapted to the business of which it is the record. All moneys received from all sources and by all the agents of the Society are entered in the journal when received, or if not paid to the Treasurer, when reported by the agents. These sums are duly posted to their proper heads in the ledger, and at the same time in their daily amounts are carried into the bank-book. Every month these sums in detail are carefully footed up and published in the Messenger. A regular entry of these monthly amounts is made in the proper book, which compares with the amounts in the Messenger.

The whole amount received passes through the bank, except the petty cash account, which has its proper place in the business. The system of checks in the different accounts is such as to detect the slightest error at once.

All payments are accompanied by the proper vouchers, and an examination of an ordinary character given by an examining Committee, is sufficient to test the accuracy of the whole. A more complicated system of keeping the accounts, by double entry, would in the opinion of the Committee add nothing to their correctness and give no greater safeguard.

The proper auditing of the accounts by the Committee gives the highest assurance that everything is rightly done. The system of accounting is well adapted to the business transacted, and needs no change to insure the most entire accuracy.

The publication of all receipts in the Messenger from month to month insures against all suppression of payments made to the treasurer. The vouchers monthly examined, with the balances in bank and on hand, insures against misapplication. The annual report gives all the receipts and disbursements, and any person having access to the Messenger can test the accuracy of the yearly accounts. A reference to those reports will show clear and explicit statements of everything connected with the property, the business affairs, the receipts and expenditures, and transactions of the society, in which the public can have any interest.

The Committee believe that the whole financial business of the Society at the Tract House is managed and conducted with an economy and fidelity worthy of all praise.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE SOCIETY'S OPERATIONS.

As a whole, the business of the Society, in point of fidelity and economy, is well managed, and no part of their present operations can with propriety be curtailed. The wants of the destitute will continue to demand expansion. The field for effort is daily opening, and the channels of usefulness becoming deeper and broader, and the Society is called upon to enter and occupy all these approaches to the perishing. They cannot stop any branch of their business without seriously interfering with others which need enlargement. Their system of book and tract publication and distribution has grown up under the influence of causes which have controlled them. It has thus far produced only good fruits to the glory of God, and should not be disturbed.

The Committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions;

Resolved, 7. That we gratefully acknowledge the favor of divine Providence in the blessing which has rested upon the American Tract Society, in its onward progress of success and prosperity, and the beneficent influence it has exerted upon our country and the world.

8. That we cordially recognize the fidelity and devotedness with which the interests of the Society have been superintended and attended by the officers and Executive Committee, five of the present members having been among its original founders.

9. That with great confidence in the wisdom of the Executive Committee, we anticipate that their action in carrying out the principles contained in the previous resolutions, will be such as will tend to promote the widest and best usefulness of this Society throughout our whole country.

New-York State Colonization Society.

The State Colonization Society held its Anniversary at Rev. Dr. HUTTON's Church, on Tuesday evening; ANSON G. PHELPS, Esq., presiding. An abstract of the annual report was read by Rev. J. B. PINNEY. The receipts of the Society last year were $34,685; balance in the treasury, $566. The operations of the year were singularly successful. Since the last annual meeting, two large companies of emigrants have been sent to Liberia by the American Colonization Society, the first in the ship Elvira Owens, conveying 361, and the second, the Liberia packet, Mary Caroline Stevens, carrying 217.

The Society prepared two large buildings, called receptacles, partly Burnatized, nearly 100 feet by 80, and two stories high, capable of giving comfortable accommodations to 100 persons each, which were forwarded by the Elvira Owens, and erected one at Cape Meneurado and one at Cape Mount.

An agent, the Rev. JOHN SEYS, was appointed to select an interior site upon high ground, with a view to an experiment as to the comparative healthfulness of the interior and sea coast. By the latest reports he had selected a location 30 miles East of Monrovia, and a company of some 20 persons, who embarked in the packet last Autumn, are now there acclimating.

Of 638 colored people sent to Liberia in 1856, 465 were emancipated slaves. The report speaks in high terms of the results of the Administration of President BENSON. Revivals of religion are reported in the Liberian churches, and the affairs of the republic generally are prosperous. The report, however, laments the revival of the slave trade, and alludes to the subject as follows:

"The African slave-trade—pronounced piracy—and therefore infamous by our laws—the opprobrium of this enlightened age—has been renewed with increased power, and, we regret to add, with very great success. Cuba is supposed to have received, during the last year, 15,000 slaves from Africa, and not less than 10,000 since January."

A series of resolutions, offered by Mr. PINNEY and adopted, declares: 1, that the Society acknowledges with gratitude the blessings that have been showered upon the cause of Colonization; 2, that in the present agitated condition of the public mind in this country, the existence of a successful Christian Republic on the coast of Africa is calculated to elevate the African race and prepare the way for their deliverance; 3 that the Society looks with undiminished hope upon the African slave-trade, and that the only effectual remedy is the establishment of Christian colonies on the African coast.

The first speaker was a colored clergyman, Rev. FRANCIS BURNS, who has been a resident of Liberia for twenty-three years, and is laboring in the missionary department of the Methodist Church. Mr. BURNS is an undeniable negro, black as black can be, but his style and manner were peculiarly pleasing. His enunciation is clear and emphatic, his sentences well rounded, his voice under excellent control, and his subject matter tersely and vigorously set forth. He is an excellent specimen of the colored clergyman. He was dressed in black, with white cravat and spectacles, and gave a pleasant account of his experiences in Africa. Enlarging upon the need of educated men in Liberia, he advanced the idea of the utility of affording young colored men in Liberia opportunities to complete their courses of instruction by residence in the United States for a year or two. In reply to questions from the President, he stated that the native children are more or less in all the schools established in the colony, and added that they frequently marry into the families of the colonists, and settle down into respectable and industrious citizens of the Republic. He found cause for great encouragement in the present condition of the country.

Rev. Dr. BETHUNE followed, in one of his spicy, anecdotical and humorous speeches, which kept the audience in a delicious humor for nearly an hour and a half. He congratulated the Society upon the fact, that while the world has been surging back and forth, the Colonizationists had remained true to their first principles, and that the world, of which they had been in advance, was coming up to their standard, from which they had never seceded. Colonizationists had been content to bide their time, preferring waiting for the progress of events to denouncing those who opposed them. They might have established presses, and started newspapers, and held meetings and cheered each other, and denounced everybody who differed from them, as murderers and hypocrites and fools, (laughter,) but they preferred to do something else. They believed that religion should be the pioneer of morals, and that where the spirit of God had touched the heart of a Southern man, he might be persuaded, if no counteracting influence intervened, to free his people; and the way to do it easily and pleasantly was afforded by the efforts of the Colonization Society. He traced the origin and progress of these Societies, and dilated upon their usefulness, and then passed to a running review of the operation of Colonization in Africa; looking upon the successes of Liberia within a year past as being equal, relatively considered, to that of this country, and, in fact, a great deal better. He was very earnest in his commendation of Colonization enterprises generally, and those in which this Society is engaged in particular, and then apologised for taking up so much time; but the audience did not appear to require any apology, listening to him with profound respect.

Mr. PINNEY called attention to two colored men, father and son, whose family were brought to the notice of the Society by Governor HUNT, of this State, and who were about to leave their home, in Lockport, to seek a better and more permanent residence in Liberia. They leave, to-day, for Baltimore, to take passage for Africa in the Stevens, and a collection taken up in their behalf closed the proceedings of this anniversary.

The New-York State Inebriate Asylum.

The first meeting of the Board of Trustees of this Asylum was held at No. 27 Clinton-place, Eighth-street, on Tuesday, at 2 o'clock P. M. Present: John W. Francis, M. D., Hon. Benjamin F. Butler, Jacob S. Miller, M. D., Noah Worrall, Esq., J. Edward Turner, M. D., and Franklin Johnson, Esq., of New-York; Hon. Edward A. Lambert and Rev. N. A. Prince, of Brooklyn; Hon. Wm. T. The meeting was organized by the choice of Hon. BENJ. F. BUTLER as Chairman, and Rev. N. A. PRINCE as Secretary. The charter was read and accepted. The Board chose as permanent officers of the institution, Hon. BENJ. F. BUTLER, President, WM. E. DODGE, Treasurer. Hon. E. A. LAMBERT, N. A. PRINCE and J. EDWARD TURNER were appointed to draft by-laws. Dr. TURNER presented a report of the affairs of the institution, which was accepted. It was voted that each member of tha Board ha authorized to solicit and forward subscriptions for thie object to the Treasurer, WM. E. DODGE, Esq., New-York. The Board adjourned to meet on the 17th of June next, at 11 o'clock A. M. at same place,

The Port Society.

The Thirty-ninth Anniversary of the Port Society was held at the Mariner's Church, corner of Catherine and Madison street, on Tuesday evening; the house was well filled by seamen and their friends, and was an occasion of much interest. The choir performed an introductory anthem, and Rev. Mr. BOURNE opened tha meeting with prayer. A hymn was then sung, and Mr. HARRIS, the Corresponding Secretary, read the report, the substance of which we published a short time since.

The Society is in a flourishing condition, and doing great good in their peculiar field of labor, but they are indebted in the sum of $14,000 upon their church edifice, lately purchased for the Society. There were six clergymen on the platform, all of whom had been seamen, and the meeting was addressed by Rev. Mr. CULBERTSON, Missionary to China, Rev. Mr. JONES, Pastor of the Church, and Rev. Capt. BARRATT, a sea captain and unordained minister. The choir performed some good music, and addad much to tha interest of the meeting.

The Congregational Pulpit.

A discourse was delivered in the Church of the Puritans, on Union-square, (Rev. Dr. CHEEVER's,) yesterday morning, on the subject of "The Congregational Pulpit," by Rev. D. SHEPARD, of Bangor, Maine. The discourse was preached before the American Congregational Union, being the annual sermon of that body.

Rev. Dr. STONE, Pastor of the Park Congregational Church, Boston, conducted the devotional exercises, offering prayer and reading a selection from the Scriptures.

Dr. SHEPARD's discourse contained numerous references to distinguished congregational clergymen of the earlier days of New-England, and abounded in passages of great eloquence and also of keen wit. A frequent smile ran over the face of the audience during its delivery. It contained strong allusions to preceding speeches, and especially the freedom of the pulpit; and when the preacher made an allusion to the recent discourses of Dr. CHEEVER, the pastor of the church in which he was speaking, a demonstration of applause burst from every part. This at first seemed a little heterodox, but its excuse was its spontaneity.

Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association —Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday evening, in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church. The annual report was read by the retiring President, Mr. JAMES MCGEE. This document is quite lengthy, and treats of a variety of topics. The Slavery question is passed over very lightly—rather condemning the agitation than otherwise. As a whole, the Society is in a very prosperous condition. The Lecture and Concert experiments resulted in a pecuniary loss, but this, through the exertions of the Managers, does not fall upon the treasury of the Society. The loss was made up by securing additional life memberships.

There are at the present time 491 members, an increase of 162 during the past year.

The library consists of 1,144 volumes, 200 of which have been added during the year.

The rooms at the corner of Court and Joralemon streets have been secured for another year, and, besides the library, there are 51 papers and periodicals on file.

The report recommends the erection of a suitable hall for the use of the Society, upon a similar plan to the Clinton Hall Association, in New-York, and also the establishing of a gymnasium and bowling-saloon for the members.

The total receipts for the year was $2,010 20; expenditures, $1,456 88.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—GEORGE A. BELL.
Vice-Presidents—John M. Doubleday, John F. Davie, E. H. Thorne, Samuel Carter, Cornelius Wilbur, C. D. Wood.
Corresponding Secretary—Wm. A. Gallatly.
Recording Secretary—James Y. Slack.
Treasurer—Wm. J. Giddings.
Managers—S. R. Stone, L. W. Terrell, Peter R. Hegeman James McGee, J. E. Williams, Henry H. Lloyd.

During the evening fifty-four new members were admitted and a large number of proposals for membership were made.

It was announced by the President that the anniversary of the Association would be held next Tuesday evening, in Dr. BETHUNE's church.

After passing a vote of thanks to the retiring officers, the meeting adjourned.

Letter of George N. Sanders, Esq., to the Park Anti-Police Meeting.

NEW-YORK, Monday, May 11, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: I thank you for your polite invitation to address the people in the Park to morrow evening,—but from the great number of speakers invited, I believe I shall best meet your objects by a few words in writing.

If a startling event had been necessary to exemplify the wisdom of that feature in our federative system which acknowledges the independent rights of the States, as expounded by the Democracy in their conventions, State and National, it occurs in that attempted usurpation of our municipal and individual rights by the State majority, which you meet to combat. It brings home to us the great national issue—constitutional rights of minorities, whether State, Territorial, municipal or individual. Destroy all constitutional protection to minorities and our model form of government sinks at once to a centralized despotism. It is fortunate, perhaps, in the present trials of our Republic, just while the people of Kansas are aroused to assert and maintain Territorial sovereignty, that this great representative City of the Union should be called upon to resist State aggression, or with ignominious damage yield its municipal independence.

But while we resist the State usurpers, we must not forget the Democratic watch-word "Reform," nor lose sight of the fact that the legislative majority, unscrupulously Black Republican as it was, would not have dared to so trespass on our rights if the best interests of the Democracy of the City had been cared for, in the nominating conventions last Fall.

Your fellow-citizen, GEO. N. SANDERS.

NEW-YORK, THURSDAY, MAY 14, 1857.

Five Thousand Dollars Reward!

The PROPRIETORS of the NEW-YORK TIMES hereby offer a reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS to any person or persons who will furnish them information which shall lead to the detection and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Dr. HARVEY BURDELL.

The Proprietors of the TIMES are prompted to this course by a profound conviction that the regular authorities of the City and State cannot be relied on for such action as the interests of the people demand at their hands, and that the PUBLIC PRESS will in this instance, as in many others, be found the truest representative and most faithful guardian of the Public welfare. The action thus far taken by the officers of the law has signally revealed their utter incompetency and inability to prosecute such an inquiry as it should be carried on. The parties indicted for the crime have been acquitted by a Jury, and all further efforts to trace it to its author seem to have been abandoned. The Mayor of the City alleges that he has no power to offer a reward for the discovery of the murderer. The Police and other municipal authorities seem to be too much engrossed in disgraceful struggles for power and patronage, to be able to give the requisite degree of attention to the protection of the lives of our citizens; and the Governor of the State has thus far given no indication of a purpose to exercise the power with which he is clothed to promote the ends of justice in this particular instance.

Under these circumstances, unless some action is taken by our citizens, this most horrible and atrocious crime is likely to pass unpunished;—our City must bear the reproach of permitting the most horrible atrocities to be perpetrated with entire impunity; the hundreds and thousands of abandoned ruffians who abound in all large cities are to learn, that any citizen may be assassinated in the most open manner in his own room, surrounded by the inmates of his own house, in a street every foot of which is occupied by dwellings, at an hour when the utmost silence prevails, and when any unusual noise would be the most likely to attract attention;—and that in spite of all these circumstances the assassin may continue to mingle with the mass of the community, and escape all suspicion of his atrocious guilt. It is the duty of all good citizens, who set a proper value upon the security of life and of property, and who feel any interest in the execution of justice and the prevention of crime, as well as any concern for the honor and reputation of the City, to do everything in their power to prevent such results.

The Proprietors of the TIMES are disposed, in the absence of proper efforts in other quarters, to take the lead in such a movement; and they accordingly offer the above reward of FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS for such information, to be communicated to them in writing, as shall lead to the development of this mystery, and the detection, conviction, and punishment of the parties guilty of this murder. If any doubt shall arise as to the rightful claimant, the money will be paid upon the written award of a majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District.

The Proprietors of the TIMES reserve the right of withdrawing this offer whenever the authorities of the City or State shall take proper action calculated to accomplish the same result; and upon so doing, they will, if requested by the parties, hand over to the said authorities whatever information may be elicited by this notice.

If any parties who may communicate information on this subject, desire that the fact of their having done so should be kept secret, their names will not be disclosed, without their consent. All communications in response to this offer, should be addressed, in sealed envelopes, marked "Private and Confidential," to the "EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK DAILY TIMES."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

We have a report, on the authority of the Havana correspondent of the New Orleans True Delta, that Gen. WALKER has retreated from Nicaragua, and was on board a British man-of-war at San Juan del Sur. No particulars are given. This intelligence was brought by the Granada from Aspinwall to Havana, but the George Law which left Aspinwall some hours previous on the same day does not confirm it. Inasmuch as WALKER, by last accounts, was greatly reduced at Rivas, the present report of his evacuation of that city, if it is not considered authentic, may be regarded as a very probable event.

The George Law arrived last evening with the California mail of April 20 and over $1,700,000 in specie on freight. The news from California is almost wholly devoid of general interest. In Sacramento the election for charter officers had resulted in the complete triumph of the Democratic over the Republican and American tickets. The BOLTON & BARRON claim, involving millions, had been confirmed by the U. S. District Court. Mining intelligence is excellent.

From New-Granada we have not much further intelligence respecting the pending dispute between that Republic and the United States. One fact, however, is significant. The New-Granadian Senate has refused to concur the Bill passed by the House for the defence of the Isthmus, and it is sufficiently obvious that neither the State of Panama, nor the General Government have sufficient means at their disposal to undertake the expense. One Senator introduced a rather curious measure, to declare the State of Panama entirely independent, and to place it under the protection of France, Great Britain, the United States, and Sardinia. The difficulty between Great Britain and New-Granada grows daily more serious, and a large British fleet had left for Carthagena, to blockade that and other ports. The Governor of Panama had issued a decree forbidding fillibusters to land, unless they give security that they will proceed at once to the United States. President OSPINA was installed and took the oaths of office on the 1st of April.

We receive by the George Law two weeks' later news from the South Pacific. The intelligence from Peru is important. President CASTILLA had left the capital at the head of 2,000 troops for the South, but, after he had landed, his vessel was captured by VIVANCO, who, it was expected, would immediately make a demonstration against Lima and Callao. These civil, it was believed, were in great danger of falling into the hands of the Revolutionists. The news from the other South-American Republics presents no features worthy of special reference.

By the arrival at this port of the Empire City, we receive later news from the Havana. From our correspondent's letter it appears that the traffic in both African and Coolies is greatly on the increase, and many vessels have been purchased and are being fitted out in the various ports of Cuba for the prosecution of this iniquitous trade. The Empire City brought in specie $25,000 from Havana and $48,000 from New-Orleans. We have advices from the River Plate Provinces to March 1. The long pending difficulty between Great Britain and Buenos Ayres has been settled by an apology from the latter for its dismissal of the British chargé, Hon. Captain GORE, in January 1853. The British flag was saluted with 21 guns as soon as the reconciliation was effected. Municipal elections in some of the parishes had been attended with bloodshed, and a fatal riot is reported to have taken place among the newly arrived Crimean immigrants. Commercial and financial prospects in Buenos Ayres were gloomy in the extreme.

Two days later news from Mexico is received by way of Havana. The people of the capital were much concerned about the rejection of the Forsyth treaties. A rumor prevailed on the 22d ult., that the Archbishop had given in his adhesion to the new Constitution. An important rumor, if true, for it proves that COMONFORT'S Government has pursued the correct course, and has sufficient strength to awe down even ecclesiastical rebels.

The Royal Mail steamship Asia is now due at this port, with later news from Europe. She had not been seen at Sandy Hook at 1 o'clock this morning.

An arrangement has been made by the Treasury Department, by which parties at any point on the Atlantic shore intending to purchase Kansas trust lands at the approaching June and July sales, may deposit money at Washington with the Treasurer, whose checks or transfer drafts may be transmitted to Kansas and received by the Agent as cash.

We have a new Superintendent of Metropolitan Police almost daily. Yesterday morning it was announced in all the City papers that Judge BEEBE had received the appointment, and by some of them it was added that he had accepted it and been sworn into office. Later in the day this was contradicted, and it was then stated that he had declined the post. We are now given to understand that the new Board of Commissioners met yesterday and proceeded to vote for a Superintendent, when FREDERICK A. TALLMADGE, Esq., was duly appointed, receiving three votes out of the five Commissioners present, the other two being cast for Mr. A. M. C. SMITH. It is further added, on the authority of a State Senator, that Mr. TALLMADGE accepted the appointment and took his oath of office yesterday afternoon. We make the statement with some misgivings, derived from past experience, as to how long it will remain true. We regret to be compelled to add that the appointment will be received with the least satisfaction by those who are most anxious for the success of the new experiment. Mr. TALLMADGE has had considerable experience in the courts of criminal law, and has all the ability essential to the proper discharge of the duties of the post. The popular estimate of his character attributes to him too large a degree of easy good nature, and too much indulgence for human infirmities, with too little vigor and energy for such an executive position as the one in question.

The American Tract Society yesterday received and adopted the long expected Report of the Committee of Investigation appointed at the anniversary of last year. The report is signed by all the members of the Committee except one, headed by Hon. THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN. The Committee report a series of resolutions which declare that the Society cannot be made a special organ of any one system of religious or moral reform; that it will deal impartially with all forms of error; that the political aspects of Slavery lie entirely outside the proper sphere of this Society, and cannot be discussed in its publications, yet that the moral duties which grow out of the existence of Slavery, and the evils and vices which Slavery promotes, may be discussed; and finally, that in future no alteration or omission of the sentiments of any author whose works may be published by the Society shall be made. The report proved acceptable to all parties, and was adopted without a single dissenting voice.

The third annual meeting of the Five Points House of Industry took place yesterday, at Dr. CHEEVER'S Church. There was a large attendance, and a good collection was taken up.

The American Anti-Slavery Society concluded their Anniversary meeting yesterday afternoon. During the day speeches were made by WM. LLOYD GARRISON, Revs. Messrs. FROTHINGHAM and FOSS; EDMUND QUINCY, W. WELLS BROWN, Miss. F. E. WATKINS and others, dilating upon the evils of Slavery, and the injuries to be apprehended from a longer preservation of the Union.

The New-York City Anti-Slavery Society held its meeting last night. The proceedings were a fitting addendum to those of the State Anti-Slavery Society of the two previous days.

A full report of the meeting of the New-York Bar in regard to the death of the late Chief-Justice OAKLEY will be found in another part of our issue.

The Home Missionary Society, last evening, adopted a report which declares the intention of the Society to deny aid to Churches containing slaveholding members, unless evidence is furnished that the relation is such as, in the judgment of the Executive Committee, is justifiable for the time being. The annual report enlarges upon the difficulty which clergymen in the service of this Society experience in laboring in Southern States.

The Cattle markets were fully supplied yesterday; the receipts of beeves for the week number 3,158, which is an abundance for this market during the height of the "Shad season," though some allowance must be made for the decidedly poor quality of most cattle recently offered. Prices declined yesterday about ½c on the averages of all sales as compared with the preceding market day; the closing rates were about ½c. decline. Mutton is very scarce, the receipts of Sheep and Lambs for the past week being only 3,302, against a weekly average last year of over 10,000. Prices are about 6c.@6½c. live weight for sheared Sheep, or 12c @14c ₩ lb. for good dressed carcases. Hogs are just now quite abundant and lower—a good time for farmers and others to lay in a stock for future feeding.

The Quarantine Commissioners are having built four large buoys and promise to have them anchored by the 1st of June, that are to designate the anchoring ground for infected vessels during the coming Quarantine season. The Health Officer is then to be provided with a steam-tug to facilitate the boarding of vessels at that point.

The Academicians of the National Academy of Design met last evening to elect officers for the ensuing year, and transact other business; but for want of a quorum nothing was done. The present Council will continue for another year.

The Board of Education failed again last evening to hold a meeting for want of a quorum. Quite a number of the more influential and active members were as usual punctually in their places.

In several cases that were set down for trial before the Richmond County Over and Terminer this month—cases growing out of the difficulty with the Castleton Board of Health last Summer, a motion was made to transfer the trial to other Counties, the defendants pleading that they could not get a fair trial on Staten Island.

In the Court of General Sessions yesterday, PETER ARNESON, the keeper of a lager-bier saloon in the Bowery, who shot a boy named JOHNSON some time since, while the latter was trying, with some companions, to effect an entrance into the saloon, pleaded guilty of manslaughter. Sentence was deferred to give time to his counsel to put in some affidavits, as to character and the bad conduct of the deceased. A man named BLUHM was convicted of shooting with a pistol at ANNA KRALL, the keeper of a lager-bier saloon in Greenwich-street. He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment only, the prosecutrix not being injured, and her house being one of very bad repute. JOHN DAVIS and CHAS. COLE, indicted for burglary, were convicted of petit larceny. Sentenced to six months' imprisonment, and fined $100 each.

The following gentlemen were elected as Fire Commissioners Tuesday night by the firemen of the E. D. of Brooklyn: R. H. HARDING, W. V. HANSON, GARRET B. LANE, WM. MEFKES, J. C. B. POOLE.

Gov. Walker's Kansas Policy

We published in the TIMES of yesterday morning a very important speech made by Hon. R. J. WALKER on the previous evening, in regard to the policy which he will pursue in administering the affairs of Kansas. It was, in fact, the substance of what will probably be his inaugural address. It embodied a distinct and emphatic expression of his purpose to insist upon the People of the Territory having an opportunity for a full, free and fair expression of their will in regard to the admission or exclusion of domestic Slavery. In speaking upon this point the Governor used the strongest and most unmistakable language, as the following extract from our report of his remarks will show:

"The people of that Territory had a clear and unquestionable right to decide for themselves upon the adoption of a State Constitution,—and any attempt on the part of any Convention, or any other body of men, however respectable and influential they might be, to impose upon the Territory a Constitution not sanctioned by the popular vote, would be a usurpation and a wrong which could not be tolerated for a moment. So far as the utmost exercise of his official powers and his personal influence would go to secure that result, Governor WALKER said he was determined the people of Kansas should have an opportunity for a full, free and solemn expression of their will upon the adoption of any Constitution that might be framed.—after a fair and satisfactory census of all the bona fide inhabitants who might be in the Territory at the time. He considered this due to them. It was part of their inherent and inalienable sovereignty. And he should consider it, not only a point of law and of official duty, as an officer of the Territory, but a point of honor as a man and a gentleman, to do everything in his power to secure to them the full, fair and undisputed exercise of this fundamental right. This he believed to be the great point essential to the peace and welfare of Kansas. If the people could have such a vote, all dissensions would be settled. And he regarded all the past differences—the contests about the Legislature, about the Topeka Constitution, about the census and register of voters—as preliminary questions; important, undoubtedly, but deriving most of their consequence from their relation to this great and paramount question,—the right of the people of Kansas to decide for themselves upon the Constitution which may be offered for their adoption. If this could be properly and satisfactorily adjusted, all the difficulties which now embarrass the settlement of the Territory would disappear."

It is due to Gov. WALKER to say that he has always expressed this opinion,—and that it is not espoused with any reference to the duties of the position upon which he is now about to enter. In a speech which he made in this City, upon the result of the last election, on the 10th of December, he thus alluded to this subject:

"Is it not the duty, then, of every patriot, and especially of every member of the Democratic Party, to yield to the in coming Administration a cordial support in settling the only question which threatens the safety of the American Union. To accomplish this great purpose it is necessary that all external violence and all interference of citizens of other States shall be removed from Kansas, and that the people who are settled, or shall settle, bona fide, in that Territory, shall be permitted to decide the question for themselves. Not only must all external violence be removed, but all those unconstitutional laws must be annulled which interrupt the free discussion of the very question upon which the people of Kansas are called to decide, or which prevent, by test oaths or otherwise, the free exercise of the elective franchise. * * If, upon this principle, Kansas shall come into the Union with a constitution similar to that of Virginia and other States of the South, by the free and unbiased suffrage of the majority of her own people, every just and patriotic citizen of the North will cheerfully submit to their decision. If, on the other hand, the majority of the people of Kansas, with the same free and unbiased suffrage, as seems most probable, should decide that their local institutions shall be similar to those of New-York or Pennsylvania, the democracy of the South will cheerfully acquiesce in their decision. And, fellow citizens, is not this the only practicable way in which this agitation can be made to terminate, and the country be relieved from the perils by which we have been environed?"

We have no doubt of the sincerity of Governor WALKER in the utterance of these views:—and we believe he will do everything in his power to carry them into practical effect. If he shall succeed in this endeavor,—if he shall secure for the actual bona fide inhabitants of the Territory the right thus to vote, without interference or undue influence from any quarter, upon the Constitution which may be framed by the approaching Convention, he will succeed also in allaying all serious contention in the Territory, and in enabling the people to turn their attention to the development of their material resources, the construction of works of internal improvement, the establishment of schools and kindred matters directly connected with their domestic prosperity and progress.

But we presume he cannot have overlooked the practical difficulties which he will encounter in carrying his general principles of policy into effect. The actual government, at the present moment, is in the hands of men who do not enjoy, and who cannot command, the confidence of the great body of the Free-State settlers. The lists of voters have been made up, Delegates are to be elected in June, the Convention meets in September, and will probably close its labors by the 1st of October. The first point to be effected is, to secure the passage of an ordinance submitting the Constitution which the Convention may frame to the popular vote. And the next point—which we apprehend will be found to be one of still more difficulty and importance—will be, to decide how this vote shall be taken. The census now completed will not answer the purpose, partly because it is believed to be incomplete and unfair, and partly because a vote upon such a basis would exclude the thousands and tens of thousands of settlers who will have gone into the Territory during the six months subsequent to its completion, and whose right to vote will be beyond dispute. Authority must, therefore, be procured from the Convention for a new register of votes;—for taking it fairly and in such a way that all parties shall be satisfied;—and for appointing Inspectors of Election upon the same basis of equal and impartial justice. Over all these most important points Governor WALKER has evidently no official power:—the Convention is omnipotent. Still, it is not to be doubted that the Governor's personal and official influence with that body will go very far in guiding and directing its action. And we are glad to believe that it will be exerted, with sincerity, zeal and energy, for the accomplishment of the desired result. And we certainly hope its exercise may be attended with complete success.

HOPE FOR MARSHAL RYNDERS.—In his speech before the Anti-Slavery Society on Tuesday, PARKER PILLSBURY indulged in some reminiscences of what had taken place in New-York since he last spoke here at the anniversary meeting of the Society seven years ago. Then, said Mr. PILLSBURY, he spoke in the Tabernacle and was assaulted by a mob which was headed by Capt. RYNDERS, for uttering the same sentiments which he now delivered free from molestation in an elegant hall which was not then built. Capt. RYNDERS had now became U. S. Marshal RYNDERS, and had declared that although he was ready to send back a fugitive slave, yet he would much prefer detecting an African slaver. Mr. PILLSBURY regarded this as a most favorable change; and he may, seven years hence be favored with the company of the Marshal on the platform by the side of himself and Mr GARRISON. The Marshal, we understand, has become a convert to spiritualism, and when a strong-minded man takes so long a stride as that there is no foreseeing where he will bring up.

The Abolitionists.

Mr. WENDELL PHILLIPS is undoubtedly the most brilliant man that the Anti-Slavery agitation has yet thrown to the surface. Fiery, eloquent and learned, with all the graces of a public speaker, and more art than even his admirers give him credit for, his rhetoric is irresistible while we listen, and it requires some moments of calm deliberation over his printed sentiments to separate what is true and abiding in them from the inevitable exaggerations into which all genuine orators are occasionally hurried.

But the great and radical miscalculation which vitiates all the arguments brought forward by the political school of which Mr. PHILLIPS, if not the ablest, is unquestionably the most pleasing exponent, arises from the amiable delusion that men are much more disinterested, and otherwise much nearer perfection, than they really are, and that the truth may be profitably spoken, at all times and in all places, regardless of the dictates of expediency. The old Gospel axiom, which teaches that babes in wisdom should be fed only on the milk of knowledge, is wilfully and scoutingly flung aside, and "solid chunks" of the indigestible raw material are forced upon stomachs so weak and unaccustomed to the diet, that rejection beomes necessary as a part of self-defence.

In looking over the resolutions introduced at the City Assembly Rooms, and supported by various gentlemen in speeches decidedly appropriate—a report of which will be found in yesterday's TIMES—the point that must arrest dispassionate attention most forcibly is the omission of any, even the remotest, allusion to the evil effects of Slavery on the white race, and the absence of any statistical attempt to prove that the peculiar institution itself is the ruinous and impoverishing incumbrance to which have always heretofore been ascribed the lagging, if not retrograding tendencies of our Southern neighbors. The resolutions as they stand are arrived at without any argumentative preamble or statement showing that the resolvers have any material interest in, or coördinate jurisdiction over, the topic debated, and their whole spirit and wording is a simple denunciation, and nothing more.

Now, we know that it will sound exceedingly unromantic and common-place—at least in the ears of the more excited progressionists—to say, that we believe a great part of this declamation injurious, and that a few figures of arithmetic might be advantageously substituted for the figures of speech so lavishly expended. We must also throw cold water on the assumption, that the great recent advances incontestibly made and making by the Anti-Slavery sentiment have been due in any exclusive, or even major sense to the exertions of this particular school of reformers.

We believe that the average of men—north of Mason and Dixon's line, as well as south, and south as well as north—will do exactly what seems most conformable to their individual and pecuniary interests, except where some bitter passion is aroused to warp their judgments prejudicially, and make them reject for doctrine's sake what they would gladly have embraced for practice:—it is quite possible to make a wholesome medicine so offensive that a sick man would rather be a-bed a week or two, than owe his recovery to its operation.

Holding this faith—not a lofty one to be sure, but one that will wear well and be serviceable—we must confess that such plain, commercial and statistical arguments as those put forward by Mr. BANKS from the steps of our Exchange, and by Mr. OLMSTED in his various works on Southern society and organization, have at all times appeared to us more likely to bring about the reformation desired, than any conceivable quantity of resolutions declaring the Federal Constitution "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell," and proclaiming that "it is blasphemy against God and treason to Jesus Christ" to "recognize as churches of Christ those churches which sanction Slavery," or "admit slaveholders to their communion and fellowship."

Totally apart from the theological questions involved in this wholesale excommunication, we protest against the expediency of dissolving one of the strongest bonds by which we can reasonably hope to draw the brethren we believe to be in error to a point identical with that from which we take our highest view of the evil we would engage them in assisting to abate. Unless we desire Disunion for Disunion's own sake, it is madness to cut away from under the feet of both parties the only connecting bridge that spans the gulf of dissevered interests. Supposing the South to be unchristianized—suppose it either Mahometan or Mormon—what plea should we then have left for asking it to throw away and destroy twenty hundred millions dollars worth of good and available property?

We know very well, or at least have reasons justifying the belief, that this apparent destruction would really be a gain in the course of time, and would be more than compensated, after the necessary sacrifices of a transition period, by the introduction of a higher kind of labor, and the improved intelligence and enterprise that would manufacture on the spot the raw material now exported for a twentieth part of its real value. But these truths of political economy, though as capable of demonstration as any proposition in mathematics, are utterly ignored by the gentlemen who defiantly proclaim that they have "but one test of statesmanship—the Slave, but one proof of patriotism—the Slave; and but one standard of piety—the Slave." They demand a peremptory surrender without equivalent, and even in doing this, have the further imprudence to destroy the only moral or religious bond on which the sacrifice could be exacted.

Good men and zealous men had denounced the iniquity of the English Corn Laws through many unavailing years; they denounced the aristocracy in just such language as we find employed by our Anti Slavery reformers; but more unfortunate than these, the aristocracy had power to resort on them with impeachments and hangings for sedition. That evil, we have seen, though proof against figures of speech, was riddled and torn to atoms by less contentious figures of arithmetic; and we believe that if the Lloyd Garrison school of agitators would take a lesson from the Manchester school of Corn-Law reformers, and give statistics instead of metaphors, and allow facts to replace vituperation, they would arrive a great deal sooner at that inevitable consummation which, at present, by their ill-judged efforts to advance, they are practically retarding. We are a cyphering people, and such works as those of Mr. OLMSTED are steps in the right direction.

THE SICKLES AND MURPHY AFFAIR.—We do not imagine that there can be any difference of opinion in respect to the conduct of Mr. MURPHY, even taking his own version of the affair, in attacking Mr. SICKLES at Willard's Hotel, in Washington. His conduct was an outrage on decency and the proprieties of civilized life, which should be universally condemned. We do not think it necessary to discuss the merits of the difficulty between Mr. MURPHY and Mr. SICKLES; nor is it of the slightest importance to the public which of the two gentlemen got the worst of it in the struggle in Mr. SICKLES'S bed-room. Whether SICKLES or MURPHY first cried, "Hold, enough," is of no consequence whatever; we presume that both got more than they wanted, and were glad enough to be rid of each other. If Mr. MURPHY had been injured by Mr. SICKLES he had legitimate remedies, and should availed himself of them. But, following the bad examples which have been set in Washington during the past year by prominent members of his party, and sanctioned by his party in Congress, he took the law into his own hands and made an affiault assault upon Mr. SICKLES in a manner which greatly aggravates his offence. The Washington method of attacking an adversary is peculiarly unmanly and cowardly. It is almost as mean as the old Italian method of the stiletto. For a man to provide himself with a cane, or a cowhide, and then to walk up to his adversary, who has no weapon of defence about him, and commence beating him, is as mean and unchivalric an act as can be committed. Not a word can be said in defence of it, and every one who pretends to love fair play, and be influenced by feelings of honor, must condemn it. But this has been the prevalent method of obtaining revenge in Washington since Colonel BROOKS made the attack upon Senator SUMNER. Yet, even in Washington, such brutality has been most decidedly condemned, by the acquittal of Col. LEE who shot Mr. HUME when he was struck, even under the strongest provocation, by the latter.

The Tribune praises Mr. SICKLES for not accepting a challenge from Mr MURPHY; but whether Mr. SICKLES was influenced by a delicate regard for the laws of the State in declining a challenge, we are unable to say. He certainly assigned no such cause for refusing to meet his adversary; and, as it is not long since he challenged JOHN VAN BUREN in London, at a time when he was acting as Secretary of Legation, we do not think that he was influenced by any such considerations as the Tribune imputes to him.

VOX POPULI.—The Journal of Commerce says, in reference to the Park meeting on Tuesday night, "the people have spoken," and jumps at the rather hasty conclusion because there was a large show of paper lanterns, a few speeches, and three or four thousand persons collected together on that occasion, that "if a vote were now to be taken, in this and adjacent counties, Republicanism would scarcely show its head at all." But it would depend very much upon what the vote was for, whether Republicanism showed its head or not. The meeting in the Park, on Tuesday night, was not called to oppose Republicanism, but to denounce the Metropolitan Police bill, a measure with which the principles of Republicanism had nothing whatever to do. But, whether it had or not, a night meeting in the Park cannot be regarded as an assemblage of "the people," and the expressions of opinion, on such an occasion, do not have a feather's weight of influence on the public. The vox populi does not vent itself at such gatherings. The voluntarily expressed opinions of a dozen different persons who might be encountered in the street, in omnibuses, the Exchange, and in the accidental intercourse of social life, would be a much safer guide to the popular feeling than a string of resolutions adopted at a great gathering in the Park. The people do not speak under the inspirations of paper lanterns, bands of music, and brass guns.

A PAINFUL CASE.—Our advertising columns contain a notice of the disappearance, on Monday morning last, of a young lady from the female Seminary of Jamaica, Long Island, under circumstances peculiarly distressing to her parents and friends. She is the daughter of Mr. P. P. KISSAM, of Brushville, L. I., and had been at the school but for a single day. In the morning she asked permission to go to the drug store for a remedy which she was accustomed to use for the tooth ache;—but she did not go there, though she was seen by the clerk to pass down the street on the opposite side of the way. She is believed to have been seen at two or three points subsequently near the Railroad, but nothing can be learned which gives any clue to her whereabouts.

The circumstances of the case, as related to us, forbid the supposition of any elopement, abduction or anything of the kind, or that she went away voluntarily in the exercise of her mental faculties. Incidents which occurred on the previous day now lead to the belief that she was partially insane, and it is probable that in a moment of more than usual aberration she has wandered away, either to this City or elsewhere.

A reward of one hundred dollars is offered for her discovery. The case is one which appeals strongly to the public sympathy and aid.

Personal.

The Vicksburg (Miss.) Whig notices the arrival in that city of Gen. JOHN A. QUITMAN: "The gallant old gentleman is rapidly recovering his health, and looks as though he had a dozen campaigns in him yet. His numerous friends here were glad to see him, and he was cordially welcomed on every hand. We believe that it is generally understood that he will be a candidate for reëlection, and it is almost equally certain that he will have no opposition."
